☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

MESSIAH'S COMING!

Messiah's coming! joyful tidings! let it echo far and wide;
Sound it in the distant valleys, speak it on the mountain side;
Earth has never seen such glory as shall rest upon her then,

Messiah's coming! and the prophets who foretold his glorious reign,
From the quiet sleep of ages then shall wake to life again;
Some from earth's secluded caverns, some from ocean's depths will come,
All the holy and the ransomed at his voice will leave the tomb.

Messiah's coming! and Mount Zion, long by heathen feet profaned,
Yet again shall be exalted, and in glorious beauty stand;
'Tis the place the Lord hath chosen in his majesty to dwell,
And from thence the law shall issue that shall rule the nations well.

Messiah's coming! and in mercy he has promised to restore
The long-scattered sons of Jacob to their father-land once more;
They will come with songs and gladness, with their treasures from afar,

Messiah's coming! at his bidding wars in every land will cease;
Right and justice then will triumph, and the earth be filled with peace:
All the kings shall bow before him, all shall hear his righteous law,

Messiah's coming! priceless blessings to a suffering world he'll bring;
Eyes long sightless he will open, and the dumb his praise shall sing;
He will heal the sick and helpless, and the deaf his word shall hear;

Messiah's coming! joyful tidings! let the heavens and earth rejoice;
Let the hills break forth in singing, and the sea lift up its voice;
Let the whole creation welcome him who comes to set it free
From the bondage of corruption, peace and joy thenceforth to see.

MATERIALISM.---ITS DEFENSE.

5. Materialism believes and maintains the doctrine of these scriptures: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11. "God . . shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution," etc.—Acts 3: 21. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first," etc.—1 Thess. 4: 16. "He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 20. And also the declaration of Jesus, under oath before the tribunal of the Sanhedrim, before which he was arraigned, and when the high priest thus addressed him: "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ the Son of God? . Jesus said unto him, Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven."—Matt. 26: 63, 64. Also the testimony of his angel: "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen."—Rev. 1: 7. In the bold and truthful language of John Knox, we as Materialists can affirm, in view of these scriptures: "Has not the Lord Jesus, for whom we have suffered, carried up our flesh into heaven, and will he not come again? Yes, and with expedition."

Spiritism fritters away all these, and the other scriptures, which refer to his second advent, and in glory, by endeavoring to make it appear that "the Son of man cometh" "at death!" invisibly; "at the destruction of Jerusalem!" invisibly; "in revivals of religion!" invisibly; "in a coming outpouring of the Spirit, resulting in a conversion of the nations, and the world!" and thus invisibly; etc., etc. But we Materialists cannot be made to believe this; for our Master has instructed us, when "they shall say to you, See here; or, See there; go not after them. For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day."—Luke 17: 23, 24. "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; behold, he is in the secret chamber, believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."—Matt. 24: 26; 27: 30.

Therefore we Materialists, having received "the grace of God" not in vain, we trust, which teaches us to look "for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us," etc. (Titus 2: 11–14), do not follow those spiritistic teachers who teach an invisible and spiritistic coming, and who affirm, "I don't know anything about the Lord's coming; and, moreover, I don't care anything about it"; as said a Presiding Elder in the Methodist connection, in the hearing of a large audience. These have not the Spirit which teaches the coming of Christ in the Scriptures of truth; nor the hope of a crown of righteousness to be given "unto all them that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4: 8); or of "salvation," when "he shall appear the second time" (Heb. 9: 28); nor can in heart join in the catholic cry, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22: 20); nor stand the test of John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist denomination: "Love or dread for Christ's appearing is a sure index of a true or false christian."

6. Finally, Materialism believes and advocates a glorious "restitution," and an inheritance of "substance," to be enjoyed eternally by all true believers in Christ. For "God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," of a "restitution of all things" (Acts 3: 21), at the return of Jesus.—ver. 20. Man's inheritance is under this curse for transgression: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake, . . . thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee," etc.—Gen. 3.

Is tenanted by man! the rest a waste;
Rocks, deserts, frozen seas, and burning sands!

But a "restitution" of the earth to Eden and Paradise again is promised (Rev. 21: 22); and "our inheritance" is "the purchased possession," to be "redeemed" from the curse; "the whole creation," which "groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now," subjected in hope, and to "be delivered from the bondage of corruption." Rom. 8. Hence, though "the heavens and the earth, which are now, . . are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, and shall be dissolved" [not annihilated]; "nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Pet. 3. Then it will be that "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree; and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree."—Isa. 55: 13. "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose."—Isa. 35: 1. Then will be fulfilled the scripture, I will "beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet ["earth is my footstool"] glorious."—Isa. 60: 13. And also the oath of the Almighty: "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with my glory."—Num. 14: 21. Abraham, too, will come into possession of his "everlasting inheritance," even "all the land," "northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward."—Gen. 13: 14, 15. "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was to Abraham . . . through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. 4: 13. And when he, together with all the "meek shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5: 5), "when the wicked are cut off" (Ps. 37: 34), the saints will have fulfilled to them the blessed promise, I will "cause those that love me to inherit substance."—Prov. 8: 21. We also "have in heaven a better and an enduring substance" (Heb. 10: 34), even "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. 11: 10, 16; 12: 14. "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you . . . ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Pet. 1), which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from God."—Rev. 3: 12, Rev. 21.

But Spiritism maintains that there is "a spirit land." "Land"? No, only imaginary! "A summer land." "Land"?. Ah, no, only in fancy. "A spirit world." "World"? By no means; only etherial, ideal, imaginary. Thus do they grope and feel in the dark for intangibility, and indeed find non-entity. Say they:

"You can not take with you beyond the grave your physical structure. You can not retain in your heavenly habitation a single atom of the substance which surrounds and supports your existence here; not the smallest sparkle of an insect's wing, nor the faintest breath of flowery perfume, shall salute your senses in that far-off land. The mind lives upon thoughts; the spirit dwells in the world of spirit, without consciousness of physical surroundings. Such is the difference between mind and matter. The mind requires no place, no time, no light, no darkness, no sun, no moon, no earth, no water, no air. It is absolute thought. There is need to it of no sight, no smell, no hearing, nor touch; but it possesses an ever present, omnipotent faculty, as absolute existence. To be absolute is to be independent of all human appetites and occupations, of all conditions of materiality. There is no heaven but the consciousness of virtue; no hell but in the soul which is eaten by remorse. Remember, then, this; the mind is not matter, neither can it be likened to any form of material existence. It requires not fruits nor flowers, shores nor rivers, upon which to move; no breezes, no sunshine, save that which belongs to the light of knowledge."

To what purpose is a material universe, throughout infinite and boundless space, for such an existence, if possible? There would be, and could be, no enjoyment of it. The writer adds: "Give ear to no deluding fantasies," and we mean to heed it, and have nothing to do with such complete and visionary nonsense.

The out-spoken language of Dr. Chalmers upon "Materialism" we admire:

"No, my brethren, the object of the administration we live under is to extirpate sin, not to sweep away Materialism. By the convulsion of the last day, it may be shaken and broken down from its present arrangements, and thrown into such fitful agitations as that its whole existing framework shall fall to pieces; and with a heat so intense as to melt its most solid elements, it may utterly be destroyed; and thus the earth again become 'without form and void' (Gen. 4: 23), but without one particle of its substance going into annihilation. Out of the ruins of the second chaos may another heaven and earth be made to arise, and a new materialism with other aspects of magnificence and beauty emerge from the wreck of this mighty transformation; and the world be peopled as before with the varieties of material loveliness, and space be again lighted up into a firmament of material splendor."

And the remarks of Dr. Dick are so much to the point, that we cannot forbear to quote them; and we wish we could quote all that this eminent writer has written upon this subject; but we have neither space nor time:

"As the world was formerly destroyed by a deluge of waters, in consequence of the depravity of man, so its destruction by fire will take place for the same reason, in order that it may be purified from the effects of the curse which was originally pronounced upon it for man's sake, and restored to its former order and beauty. A material world (after the resurrection) will be prepared for the habitation of the just, in which their connection with the visible universe will doubtless be far more extensive than it is at present. This new world will be prepared and arranged by Divine wisdom, and consequently will exhibit scenes of beauty and grandeur of exquisite contrivance and benevolent design; and will abound with everything that can charm the the eye, the ear, or the imagination, and illustrate the manifold wisdom of God. Many foolish and inaccurate conceptions prevail, even in the Christian world, concerning the future state. The greater part of christians rest satisfied with the most vague and incorrect ideas concerning heaven. The image picture presented to their minds is that of a splendid chaotic mass, or dazzling meteor. The term glory, and its kindred epithets, reiterated a thousand times in description of the heavenly state, is a vast assemblage in concave sky. Infidel scoffers have been led to conclude that the Christian's heaven is no object to be desired; and have declared that 'they could feel no pleasure in being suspended forever in etherial regions, and perpetually singing psalms to the Eternal.' And it is incomprehensible also that a sensitive being should exist furnished with all the organs and functions requisite to animal life, and yet of a size ten thousand times less than a mite."

Such, then, is "Materialism," against which there is so much scandal and opposition from those who would be wise, and profess themselves to be wise, and are "wise above what is written"; "professing themselves to be wise, they become" either "fools," or "children in understanding," and know not what they are opposing.

Materialism believes in the existence of the Being of God, and not the God of the heathen. "The spiritual God of Plato resembled an idea, rather than a substance."—Gibbon.

Materialism believes in the existence of Jesus Christ as a personal Being, also whose "flesh" God has not suffered "to see corruption"; and hence in his personal coming in due time again to earth, to redeem his people from death and corruption, in a glorious resurrection from the dead.

Materialism believes in the re-genesis of the earth, as the future and endless abode of the finally redeemed; when "the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Ps. 37.

Materialism believes in matters of fact and not of fancy; in God and in his promises; that God means what he says, and says what he means.

Materialism believes in a material universe, occupying boundless and infinite space, created by God (Gen. 1: 1) for wise design; and that God never intends to destroy and annihilate it; that God delights in his works; that he never intends that the great, mysterious, potent, matchless, and perfect law of gravitation, which binds the universe and governs and controls the spheres under him, shall fail, and the whole system of worlds on worlds tumble into ruins; the moon gravitate towards and fall into the earth; the earth with her sister planets in the solar system rush into the sun, and be consumed, together with that orb of day; and then other systems innumerable, throughout the infinite regions of space, come to nought and pass away in like manner;—

"And, like the baseless fabric of a vision, Leave not a wreck behind";

and

"All nature sink and cease to be."

No, but credits what the Almighty saith: "His name shall endure for ever. His name shall continue as long as the sun." Will God blot out the name of his only begotten Son? "In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." Will the time come when they will not flourish? "They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure." Will the time come when his name shall not be feared and these shall cease to be? "His throne shall endure as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon." And will that "throne" ever be shaken, removed, or thrown into ruins, and his "everlasting kingdom" come to an end, when he has said "unto the Son"—"Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever"?

We are denounced not only as "Materialists," but "Annihilationists," because we believe simply in the destruction of the Devil and his works, and in the extinction of the being of the wicked, and that their life—"lamp . . . shall be put out," as the Scriptures declare: "All the wicked will he destroy" (Ps. 145: 20) "with everlasting destruction" (2 Thess. 1: 9); and that the time will come when "the sinners shall be consumed out of the earth, and the wicked shall be no more" (Ps. 104: 35); "shall not be"; "shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away" (Ps. 37: 20); "and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch"; and "they shall be ashes."—Mal. 4: 1–3. And thus shall the "wickedness of the wicked come to an end"; for "God hath prepared for him the instruments of death."—Ps. 7: 9–13. And they are "worthy of death." "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 1 and 6); and "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James 1: 15); or the "death" of the sinner finishes his sinning.

But it comes with a poor grace from these Spiritists to call us "Annihilationists," when they have annihilated God into a nonentity! Jesus Christ into spirit! saints and angels into infinitesimal nothings! and are looking for a whole universe to explode and disappear, as they sing:

"Then fail this earth, let stars decline,
And sun and moon refuse to shine;
All nature sink and cease to be;
That heavenly mansion stands for me."

Yes, and "that heavenly mansion" a mere myth, and by no means material; but in the vast and empty void, where the universe was, is pictured to these fancy dreamers "the invisible spirit-world, where

"Etherial things on unseen wings

Away with the nonsense, the visionary and insane ideas of such an absurd existence in a future state, derogatory to the character and wisdom of the Most High, and humiliating to the intelligence of the age in which we live, and to persons who should be "in understanding men." "You therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen."

For the World's Crisis.

PIC-NIC RELIGION.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

"Sitting down to eat and drink, and rising up to play."

"While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way."—Matt. 13: 25.

"The church and world amalgamate,
A union worse than with the state,
Though motives are the same;
The love of pleasure and of gold,
On some professors have such hold,
They oft forget their name."

Is money to be raised for church debts, or church repairing? A Sabbath-school or a missionary enterprise? For the increase of the minister's salary? To relieve the poor or for any benevolent operation? What now? How is this money to be forthcoming? In a sober, rational, gospel way? Nay, a feast is prepared; a soiree introduced, a fancy fair, a pic-nic, a concert or exhibition of some kind, donation, tea or strawberry party, a sleigh-ride, oyster-supper, a tin or gold wedding, something to inflame the passions, excite and enlarge the appetite, produce a little fun or vulgar merriment. The entire community is put put in requisition for weeks. The excitement is intense, outbursting on the right and on the left. To open the purse-strings worldly policy is resorted to, foolish talking and jesting, feasting and frolicking! These festivals are the rage and fever of the day, the world is on fire with them! Where is there a church or society, white or colored, Popish or Protestant, that does not resort to these unholy excitements, these strategems of Satan to raise funds for some object of benevolence? It is money, money! Money we want, money we will have, gospel or no gospel, heaven or no heaven. Gospel and soul-saving are laid aside. "Away with serious or sober looks, away with them. On for a jolly time of feasting!" "On with the dance, let joy be unconfined." "Know ye not, friends, the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

"Will ye play, then, will ye dally
With your music and your wine?
Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm hath need of thine!"

Conviviality is the ultimatum, the first and the last. "Let us have a jolly time, eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." The excitement for weeks is more or less dissipating, swallowing up every thought of the soul's welfare. Children and youth are on fire for a spree,—and what else are very many of these festivals and pic-nic excursions but sprees or frolics?

All false religious seek to attract interest by amusements and animal gratifications. The worshipers of the golden calf sat down to eat and drink the oblations to their new god, and then rose up to play. And a bait of sensuality in some form has always been the lure to heathen worship. Popery has always followed in the same line. Even its Sabbath worship connects a dance with the mass. And throughout the whole structure of that "mystery of iniquity," the sensual and the comic are interwoven with the pomps and ritual of worship. And one of the most common methods by which decay advances upon sound churches is by pleas of amusements to give an attractive and hilarious character to religion—which usually are so many pleas for conformity to the world. We are not unaware of the value of a cheerful religion. We respond to the reasonableness of the command to "rejoice evermore." And yet we read that the "joy of the Lord is your strength," and that our rejoicing must be in God to make it a religious joy. It is not a religious joy, where professedly religious men indulge in gratifications that are worldly, sensual, and frivolous.

"There is a path that leads to God;
All others go astray."

What are Sabbath-schools for? To tickle the fancy; gather in the "little ones" for sport! This blessed institution, intended exclusively for soul-saving, is frequently a gospel-hardening, conscience-searing process. The truths taught here instead of being a savor of life unto life are a savor of death unto death! Children grow up infidels, go out into the world infidels, reprobates under the mid-day sunlight of the gospel, take seats with the scornful! How seldom do we hear of any special revivals in Sunday-schools at the present day. And when awakenings do occur, alas! how superficial, how short-lived! "Like the morning cloud and early dew." Is there not a cause for this dearth and spiritual death? Is it not this perpetual rush for the visionary? the lack of gospel teaching? "If the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?" Matt. 5: 13.

To make schools, on the Lord's day, scenes of hilarity, merriment, fun, and frolic, is to defeat the special object in view. Children are naturally excitable, inclined to pride, folly, and self complacency. And instead of fostering these reptiles, every possible means should be resorted to, to counteract and exterminate them, and lead them directly to the feet of Jesus. Very many of our common-school exhibitions tend to puff up or inflate juvenile minds. Pic-nics and Sabbath-school exhibitions, as they are now generally conducted, are evil and only evil.

1. They excite envy in the children. Those who are not selected to speak envy those who are.

2. They encourage pride of spirit and pride of dress—that is, pride of talent in the speakers; and pride of dress, because the girls and young ladies are often dressed as for a show.

3. They are destructive of spiritual interest in the school, especially in seasons of revival.

4. They create confusion and disorganization in the school, owing to the attention given to preparation and to efforts to enlist children in the sale of tickets, etc.

5. They have a reactionary tendency, throwing the school backward for weeks after they are over.

6. They are mere money-making affairs, and to make them popular with irreligious persons the pieces selected are often irreligious and of evil tendency. . . .

"Never engage in deeds which must
An insult to all justice prove;
Each fetter forced upon the mind,
Let thy strong hand remove."

Let us look at the whole batch of these revival-killers under the heading of Testimonials. We select a few among many. We could fill volumes; "but in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word shall be established."

"Dear Friend—Nearly all our churches this winter have been holding fairs, festivals, oyster-suppers, and the like, in their respective church edifices, for divers religious purposes, and I have been zealously laboring against this custom of desecrating the sanctuary. Knowing you to occupy about the same ground as myself on this question, I ask you, as a friend and brother in Christ, to assist me, if in your power at this time to do so. I hope you may find time soon to write a tract on the evils of this worldly conformity, quoting Scripture, meanwhile, to sustain your position. Should the Lord incline you to this work of love, do not forget to touch tea and strawberry parties, for now the winter campaign is nearly ended, and it will not be many months before the summer festivities will be called for by dressy and "fun-loving" brethren and sisters.

I meet with considerable opposition among all orthodox church-members, but I have not gone to the right or left of what I consider the path of duty. Yours for consistency." *

1. Because they are wrong in principle, unscriptural, contrary to gospel purity and sobriety. "To the law and the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. 8: 20.

2. On account of the foolish talking and jesting which more or less accompany these scenes of hilarity. Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of godliness than levity. This building up churches, Sabbath-schools, and the like on wit and humor is not gospel. This method may succeed for a time, but rest assured by-and-by God will blow upon it.

"'Tis not for man to trifle. Life is brief,
And sin is here;
Our age is but the falling of a leaf—
A dropping tear.
We have no time to sport away the hours:
All must be earnest in a world like ours."

"For every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matt. 12: 36, 37.

3. They are stumbling-blocks to the world. Sinners are eagle-eyed, they see and know these festivals are gotten up for selfish purposes; that their chief object is money-making and not soul-saving. Consequently they lose confidence in religious professors, and become more given up to the service of sin and Satan. Exhort sinners to faith, repentance, and newness of life, they point us directly to these dark spots, beguiling unstable souls, sporting themselves with their own deceivings! Impenitent sinners, instead of looking to the Bible, to the Lord Jesus Christ for the truth, for the religion of purity and love, as they ought to, and as God commands them to do, they look upon ungodly church-members, and judge of religion as they see it embodied in these dry bones, in those having a name to live and are dead, having a form of godliness, but, by wicked works, denying the power thereof! Thus the world is reeling on, like a drunken man, to dark damnation!

4. He objects to them because they are stumbling-blocks to young converts, the lambs of the flock; one especial cause of their backsliding, losing their first love. How can it be otherwise? A fearful woe is pronounced against those who offend or cause God's "little ones" to stumble. See Matt. 18: 6.

5. They wound the hearts of God's chosen people. The most consistent, consecrated, humble, devoted disciples of Jesus are always grieved at this method of raising money for religious objects. They see and know with sorrow the evil effects on the church and the world. "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." "Give none offence, neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God." "Even as I please all men," says Paul, "in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved." "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10: 31, 32, 33.

6. The editor of the Golden Rule objects to them furthermore on account of their violation of civil law. A secular paper alluding to this religious gambling says: "We are glad to see it announced, that the grand jury of Oswego, N. Y., have published a card, notifying managers of fairs and festivals, held by church-societies, that the practice of disposing of their goods by lottery is contrary to the statute, and must not be persisted in." Good.

7. Again, he objects to them from the fact that they are a special hindrance to revivals. Soul-saving is out of the question, so long as these fairs, tea-parties, or festivals, are on the docket. And when these upheavings are over, the undue excitement for weeks in the preparation of luxuries, fancy articles of little or no value—the late hours, the gluttony, the surfeitings, the foolish talkings and jestings, who is prepared for prayer, praise, or to labor in a revival, to urge sinners to repentance, temperance, and holy living? Sampson is shorn of his locks. Often when God is near to bless, revive his work, pour out his Spirit graciously, convict and convert sinners; when inquiring souls are weeping between the porch and the altar; just at this crisis Satan comes in, stirs up the people, cold, formal, backslidden church members,* for a fair, donation, tea or strawberry party, a pic-nic, oyster-supper, a feast of some kind, to turn away the attention from things pertaining to life eternal, hope everlasting! Thus the holy Spirit is grieved, takes his flight, the revival is scattered to the four winds! Who knows how many precious ones are lost, forever, by this devilish stratagem? And yet these fires of the pit are kept burning all over the land!

* The beloved Julius Bruse, now asleep in Jesus.

* Is it not invariably true that none but backsliders, having a name to live and are dead, ever dream of pushing these cars of Satan?

The year of our Lord!—will any one remember that? The date, the figures 1869, will be forgotten by none: the truth that the year belongs to him who is the author of all time will impress but few. We take possession of new seasons as if they were our own, and seldom look up and thank God for the longer lease of this probation, given us that we may the better prepare for eternity.

Oh, that the Almighty would stamp this sentence upon my soul!—the year of our Lord: not to be devoted to trifling and amusement, not to be spent in selfish aims and pleasures, not to be wasted in indolence and thoughtlessness, but to be filled with holy deeds of love and mercy; to be occupied in deeper repentance and contrition for sin, and in sweet communion with him who forgives when we are sorry for our offences, and turn from them.

We may make this indeed the year of our Lord. If we honor him, he will surely honor us. If we have him in all our thoughts, every hour will be fraught with richest blessings to our souls, so that, although we are in the world, we shall feel ourselves to be not of the world but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.—Christian Banner.

WANT OF FEELING.

Is your want of feeling a reason for your staying away from Christ? A sense of want should lead you to Christ, and not keep you away. "More are drawn to Christ," says old Thomas Shepherd, "under a sense of a dead, blind heart, than by all sorrows, humiliations, and terrors." The less of feeling or conviction that you have, you are the more needy; and is that a reason for keeping aloof from him? Instead of being less fit for coming you are more fit. The blindness of Bartimeus was his reason for coming to Christ, not for staying away. If you have more blindness and deadness than others, you have so many more reasons for coming—so many fewer for standing afar off. If the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint, you should feel yourself the more shut up to the necessity of coming, and that immediately. Whatever others may do who have convictions, you who have none dare not stay away, nor even wait an hour. You must come!

Will your want of feeling make you less welcome to Christ? How is this? What makes you think so? Has he said so, or did he act when on earth as if this were his style of procedure! Had the woman of Sychar any feeling when he spoke to her so lovingly? Was it the amount of conviction in Zaccheus that made the Lord address him so graciously, "Make haste, for to-day I must abide at thy house"? The balm of Gilead will not be the less suitable for you, nor the physician there the less affectionate and cordial, because, in addition to other diseases, you are afflicted with the benumbing palsy. Your greater need only gives him an opportunity of showing the extent of his fullness, as well as the riches of his grace.

Come to him, then, just because you do not feel. "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Whatever you may feel, or may not feel, it is still a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Do not limit the grace of God, nor suspect the love of Christ. Confidence in that grace and love will do every thing for you; want of confidence, nothing. Christ wants you to come; not to wait or to stay away.

Your remaining away from Christ will not remove your want of feeling. It will only make it worse; for it is a disease that he only can remove; so that a double necessity is laid upon you for going to him. Others who feel more than you may linger—you cannot afford to do so. You must go immediately to him who is exalted "a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel, and the forgiveness of sins." Seeing that distance and distrust will do nothing for you, try what "drawing near" and confidence will do. To you, though the chief of sinners, the message is, "Come unto me." God commands you to come, without any further delay or preparation; to bring with you your sins, your unbelief, your heart, your will, your whole man, and to put them into Christ's hands. God demands your instant surrender to Christ and your immediate confidence in him. "Kiss the Son," is his message. His word insists on your return. "Return unto the Lord thy God." It shows you that the continuance of this distance is your unwillingness to let Christ save you in his own way, and a desire to have the credit of removing your insensibility by your own prayers and tears.—"God's Way of Peace," by Rev. H. Bonar.

For the World's Crisis.

PRAYER: ITS OBJECT.

That prayer is a duty, all christians admit. The command is too plain to be gainsayed; but how to pray effectually is the thing. To pray thus, we must pray in harmony with God's purpose, and this purpose is only revealed in his word. The prayers of many seem to partake of a sort of teasing element, as though our Father was too indifferent, forgetful of our wants, and needed to be reminded, and entreated to supply them. Such souls need to study and meditate on the word, which will give them a more comprehensive knowledge, and a stronger faith in God.

Man has no redemptive qualities in himself; these are received, accepted from God. Prayer is a means, and one most effectual in bringing us into a favorable position for this reception. A praying position is a receiving position, and a receiving position is one betting entire helplessness; "for without me ye can do nothing," so we are required to pray (or maintain this position) always, or without ceasing; and also in view of the complete provision made and promised of God towards us "in everything to give thanks."

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 6, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money-orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given. Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

NEW YEAR.

Once more we have the pleasure of saying to all of our readers: We wish you a HAPPY NEW YEAR IN THE LORD.

We know of but one way by which our wish can be realized; and that is for all to sanctify themselves wholly to the Lord, and be ready to do every duty without a murmur. Let us all try to please Jesus in every thing. He will help us to observe such a rule; but can not aid us in doing wrong; neither will he smile upon a wrong act, knowingly committed by any one. Condemnation must follow in all such cases; but there is "no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. 8: 1. Why not walk thus? The result will be blessed. Try it.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Now is a good time to obtain new subscribers. Some of our preaching Brn. and some others, are doing nobly. Will not all who are interested in the "blessed hope" make an effort to obtain new subscribers, and thus help spread the truth? Others need the light as much as we. Let no pains be spared this year. Our opportunities for doing good will soon all be numbered.

WESTERN TRIP.

We purpose to visit Chicago, Ill., and Dubuque, Iowa, in January, and do what we can to arouse the people to prepare for eternal life. Pray for us, that we may be able to magnify the Lord and his word. This is the hour for earnest work and daring deeds in the army of our heavenly King.

WORCESTER.

We spent Christmas week in Worcester, and had a very pleasant time in reviewing a series of sermons, by Bro. C. N. Smith, delivered in the Park Street meeting-house (Methodist), against the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. Bro. Smith is considered a very able preacher, and well qualified to defend popular theology. His sermons were reported by E. P. Woodward, of Boston. Their review was in the Washburn Hall, before a large and intelligent audience. It is said that more than half of Mr. Smith's church are in sympathy with our views of the nature of man. He refused to be present and hear his sermons reviewed, and advised all the members of his church to stay away; but all did not follow his advice. Many members of different churches were present and listened with marked attention.

Two ministers came and asked questions, and thus assisted in bringing out the truth. One of them remarked, "matter does not think," and then reasoned from that assumption, that man must have an immortal soul, distinct from his physical organism, that did the thinking. In reply we inquired, "Does a dog think?" He reluctantly said "yes." We then inquired if dogs had immortal souls to do the thinking? He was much perplexed with this question, which caused quite a sensation in the congregation. We left him to consider the matter, and report at another time, when we purpose to discuss with him the question—"Will all men live eternally?"

Our meeting on the Lord's day, Dec. 27th, was a blessed one. We are acquainted with no church which seems to be more in earnest to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, than the one at Worcester. They are doing noble deeds for the missions, in sending supplies for the poor. The Lord always blesses the faithful ones; but those who are idle in his vineyard must not expect to be filled with love, joy and peace. We hope all churches will arouse and go to work with renewed zeal this year. We have not a moment to lose, nor a dollar to spend for pleasure or adornment. Let all be consecrated to the Lord, to be used just as he may direct, and all will be well.

HOME RELIGION.

We are most fully satisfied that those who do not manifest a christian spirit at home, at least, become dwarfs in the service of the Lord. One may be blest in meeting, and go home to his family and fret away all his peace and joy in three minutes. The simple fact is, one cannot enjoy the peace of God in his heart, and a bright evidence of his acceptance, so long as he scolds and frets in his family.

It is true there may be little petty annoyances occurring almost every day, and perhaps every hour of the day; but fretting and scolding only serve to multiply them in rapid ratio, until something will be out of order continually. This is just what Satan is aiming to accomplish; for the purpose of making all unbelievers that profess religion, and to cause the unconverted to turn away in disgust from the professed follower of Jesus.

Is the reader one who frets? If so, will you not now resolve in the strength of the Lord, to fret no more? This year do not mar your peace and that of the loved ones at home, by fretting and scolding. It does no good, but, on the contrary, great evil. Hereafter take the sunny side. Speak kindly to the wife, the husband, father, mother, brother, sister, children, servants, and all the animals about the premises. "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Eph. 4: 32.

When we bear patiently with the faults of others, they can bear much more from us. We reap a great reward ourselves, when we are kind to others. Let us give Satan no room in our families, to bind us for his service, and for final ruin.

"WHERE IS HE?"

"But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. . . . If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."—Job 14: 10–14.

We have heard it stated by our opponents that the term "giveth up the ghost," means to give up the guest. Such would have us believe that ghost, in passages like the one under consideration means the immortal soul—the guest in man. A few facts will show that there is not the least shadow of proof in favor of such a position. The Hebrew word gak-vag, rendered "giveth up the ghost," is defined by Gesenius as follows:—"to breathe out one's life, to expire, to die." He then gives Gen. 6: 17, and 7: 21 as examples of the use of the word. These passages read as follows:—

"And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die. And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

"Shall die," and "died," are translated from the same Hebrew word just noticed; and apply to all the animals that perished at the flood, as well as to the men. The same word is rendered die in Ps. 104: 29, as follows: "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."

The word gak-vag occurs nine times in the Old Testament, and always means to die. Geo. R. Noyes renders Job 14: 10, as follows:—"Man expireth and where is he?" In the translations of John Fry and C. P. Carey, it is rendered the same as by Mr. Noyes. The Bishop's Bible reads as follows: "But as for man, when he is dead, perished and consumed away, what becometh of him?" The Breeches' Bible as follows:—"But man is sick and dieth; and man perisheth, and where is he?" Boothroyd renders it:—"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man expireth and where is he?" The Septuagint reads:—"But a man that has died is utterly gone; and when a mortal has fallen, he is no more . . . A man that has lain down in death shall certainly not rise again till the heaven be dissolved, and they shall not awake from their sleep."

From the foregoing all may see clearly that to give "up the ghost" means the same as to die, or expire. On this point there is no room for doubt.

"SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?"

In Job 14: 14, we find the following interesting question: "If a man die shall he live again?" Observe, Job does not say, If a man die is he still alive. He could not have been a believer in such theology as is taught by many in the present day—that man is now immortal. Job's only hope of a future life rested in the resurrection of the dead. In this he is in harmony with the apostle Paul, when he says: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" On the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead hangs all our hope of life beyond the grave.

The Septuagint of Job 14: 14 reads as follows:—"I will wait till I exist [Marg. or am made again] again. Then shalt thou call, and I will hearken to thee." The Amer. Bib. Un. reads—"But man dies, and wastes away; yea, man expires, and where is he?"

"BRUISE THY HEAD."

In Gen. 3: 15, we read: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." This is what "the Lord God said unto the serpent," that deceived the woman. We were asked a few days since if it would not be in harmony with the meaning of the original word shoop, to render it crush instead of bruise? We think it would. The word is sometimes defined "to crush." The latter corresponds better with the New Testament, where we read: "He [Christ] also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil." Heb. 2: 14. "Crush" and "destroy" convey a similar idea. Those who believe that the devil will live eternally, would, of course, seize on the milder view of the subject, and try to make out that only his influence would be destroyed during the millennium; but the Scriptures are definite—"destroy him; . . . that is, the Devil." The word "bruise" does not seem strong enough to express the act which is determined upon the devil. He is to be destroyed, and all his "works." We read: "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil." 1 John 3; 8. Suppose the Devil should keep at work eternally, would Christ ever get his works destroyed?

"THE ONE MAN."

Guizot, who was Louis Phillipe's leading Cabinet minister, who is now in his eighty-first year, says: "Of the rulers of Europe, Napoleon III. is undoubtedly the one man, whose task and whose responsibility on the question of peace or war are at present the greatest."

Truly, Napoleon III. is a man of wonder. What will he do next to astonish the world? He is continually adding to his power, while other nations stand aghast at his successful operators. He already occupies a giddy hight, rarely, if ever, attained by other men in the history of the world. Has he no place in the prophetic scriptures, while many others, by far his inferiors, have been noticed by the prophets? We think such a conclusion is not reasonable.

We believe he is correct in considering himself a man of destiny; i. e., that he has a special work to accomplish. It appears to be in his power to create war, or to preserve peace. They dare not cross his path. They all fear to arouse him. He is to them as is the lion of the forest among other beasts. They are pleased to keep out of his way.

Napoleon and Spiritualism are closely united. They are rising together, and are married to each other. Let all watch the signs of the times with close attention. Further developments may be expected soon.

THE COMING YEAR.

We may expect startling events in 1869. According to present appearances, the nations of Europe will be engaged in a bloody strife before twelve months are passed. Already the fire seems to be kindled in Turkey and Greece, which may set the whole continent in a blaze. The power of Satan is being felt and seen in all directions, as never before in this century. His followers are becoming very bold. Is it not time for christians to take an advanced position, ready to meet all the combined forces of the arch adversary?

Let us all try to do more for Jesus this year than during any one in the past. This is the hour for earnest effort. Soon the day of rest will begin. All for Jesus.

CITY LIFE.

We commend the following to all who think of going to large cities to find employment. By all means stay in the country. We never advise poor people to go to cities for work; but, on the contrary, to get out of the city as soon as possible. A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal says:—

"A large number of young persons, females as well as males, arrive daily in the city, seeking employment. A great many are attracted by the glare of the city, with the expectation that employment and money are to be had for the asking. Yet there is no place on the continent that is so over-crowded, where it is so difficult to get an honest employment and remunerative pay. Young women are employed in great numbers in stores, factories and binderies. The slavery and drudgery to which they are subjected, if known beforehand, would keep the stoutest heart away from New York. Some of the large retail stores employ scarcely any clerks but young ladies. They are well dressed. This is demanded. They seem to have a cheerful, easy time, with good wages and little to do. But it is a serfdom that has few equals. An iron rule runs through such establishments. Parties must be at the store at a given minute, have just so many minutes for lunch, and are fined for every little mistake or neglect. If goods are stolen from a special department, or damaged in the slightest degree, or missed, or misdirected, the young lady in charge of the department, has to pay the full retail value of the article. There can be no sitting down during business hours. Over these departments a woman presides to see that the laws are kept, because no man would be hard-hearted enough to enforce the rules. Women make shirts and clothes at starvation prices, and getting into the whirlpool of the city, must toil on or starve. Theatres and concert saloons, where ballet girls and singers are wanted, are particularly attractive to females out of employment. Besides the peculiar temptations of such a life which are inseparable to it, the wages are hardly above that of a ditcher, while the toil that turns night into day, exceeds that of any working woman on a New England farm. Such spend all they earn, are illy paid, die early, and are indebted to friends for a coffin and a shroud."

"THE BOLDNESS OF CRIME."

It is astonishing to see what boldness is manifested by the enemies of the cross of Christ. Unless one is well clothed with the christian armor, he cannot stand before the advancing, defiant hosts of Satan. This is the time for daring deeds if we would be conquerors.

"The boldness with which robberies and murderous assaults have recently been committed at New York and elsewhere in the country has become notable and significant. The most daring expedients are resorted to in the robbery of individuals and banking houses, and it would seem, from the almost daily telegraphic reports of robbery and violence, that broad daylight offers but little protection against, or immunity from, the attacks and assaults of robbers and murderers. There has been a constant and steady growth in this respect for some years past, and it is sometimes questioned whether the safeguards thrown around life and property by our statute laws and our police systems have kept pace with the additional skill and care which has been devoted to circumventing and evading the laws and the officers who enforce them. The facilities for detecting crime and arresting criminals are very much greater than they were formerly, and the crime which is committed to-day upon either continent, may be known to-morrow in even the remotest parts of America or Europe. But, despite the greater publicity which is thus given to the commission of crimes, there are scores of criminals who escape undetected by being able to baffle and evade all the machinery of telegraphs, police officers and private detectives. The perpetrators of some of the most startling crimes within the memory of the present generation in New England ... accomplished, ... it has become almost a stereotype expression at the end of the daily announcement of private, bank and bond robberies and murders, 'no clue yet to the guilty parties.'

Probably the community generally underrates the mental calibre of professional robbers and murderers, and it is not commonly appreciated that the more difficult successful crime becomes, the greater the care and skill with which crimes are planned. The man who makes robbery and murder his trade, devotes himself even more earnestly and carefully to preparations for his work, than the honest citizen who seeks subsistence by some worthy handicraft. The man who planned the recent robbery of a store at Hartford, in his confession of the crime, gave some insight into the care with which such 'a job' is entered upon. He had studied the personal habits of all the leading merchants in the city, had noticed when the stores were opened and closed, and by whom, had seen where the different varieties of goods were kept, and had finally settled upon one as affording the best field for a successful operation. His plans were well laid, and the manner in which he made them, showed that there was no small brain power in his head. To achieve distinction in dishonesty and villainy of any kind requires no little skill and careful preparation, and one step toward protection from the boldness of crime, will certainly have been taken when the public generally realizes that only sharp intellects can plan, and cool heads and skillful hands execute, such robberies and deeds of violence as are of almost daily occurrence in our larger cities. The sharpest brains and coolest heads that the public can command, are none too sharp and cool to watch over the safety of life and treasure, when we consider the character of the foes that are to be provided against and dealt with."

PICNIC RELIGION.—Our readers will find in this paper an earnest article on "Picnic Religion." It is from a tract by Bro. D. F. Newton, author of "Home Thrusts," "Shining Light," "The Sword that Cuts," "The Fire that Burns," "Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver," etc. The tract should be read by every body, especially those who favor and help sustain picnics, fairs, and festivals. It is a tract of 16 pp., and can be obtained of Bro. D. F. Newton, at the "Union Tract Depository," 303 West 20th Street, New York. Price $2.00 per 100.

DRESS.—Be sure and read with care the articles on "Dress." They are John Wesley's views of the matter. We think every christian should read them, and do more—observe and practice in harmony with what he has written. It is high time that there was a radical reform.

INFORMATION.—Several inquiries have been made in regard to the Concordance Bro. Hudson was at work on before he died. The work has been delayed on account of his death, but is now nearly completed. When done, due notice will be given.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The quarterly session of the N. Y. State Conference was held according to appointment at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., commencing Dec. 17th, and continued over the following Lord's day. The clerk of our conference not being present, the writer was elected pro tem. Bro. H. Pratt, of Rochester, N.Y., preached the opening discourse, Thursday eve. Friday was spent in prayer and conference until evening, when Bro. A. C. Newell spoke from 1 Cor. 2: 12. Saturday forenoon, in our prayer and conference, we had a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. We felt truly that we were enjoying a refreshing from the Lord.

Saturday, P. M., preaching by C. H. Williams; evening, by C. F Sweet; Lord's day, in the morning, J. W. Taylor, in the P. M., J. Wendel, in the evening, the writer. All felt it was good to be there. Although there was quite a full attendance, the meeting was not so large but what there was time for all the pilgrims who came up to this feast to speak of God's dealings with them.

The Brn. and Srs. of Honeoye have our thanks for the kind and christian greeting we received from them, and for the comforts bestowed on us. We all felt that during the meeting we had a foretaste of the great feast which we hope soon to enjoy, and parted with the dear ones, with the hope of living preserved blameless unto the coming of our blessed Lord. THE NEW YEAR.

This day a terrible storm of wind and snow is raging, and to many of the suffering poor, the words "Happy New Year" will seem like bitter mockery. Yet there is a source of happiness available to all, both high and low, both rich and poor. Praise the Lord for that blessed WAY, the way opened for poor ruined sinners like us, by the "PRECIOUS BLOOD OF CHRIST, as of a lamb without blemish, and without spot."

The enjoyment of a good hope in Christ, makes this a happy new year to me, and there is nothing else that can make any one of Adam's race truly happy. Have you this good hope? If not, come now, without delay, "seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you." E. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Webster, Mass. Jan. 1st 1869.

BRO. E. BELLOWS, Foster, R. I., writes:—"The Lord has been working mightily here. Since the first of Nov. more than sixty have sought salvation, twenty-eight of which have been baptized. The work is still going on. Last Sunday (Dec. 27th), within three hours we had one sermon, sixty-five testimonies,

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Boston Christian Publication Society, held at ... Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

HELP FOR OUR MISSIONS.

To the faithful friends of Jesus everywhere: Brethren and sisters, we need help at this time to hold up and carry forward our missions. And unless we get help soon, some of our missionaries will have to be recalled. We cannot think of this, when they are doing so noble a work. Help, EVERY ONE. Send in to GEO. T. ADAMS, Treasurer, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

ST. LOUIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is still with us; and by his grace we are enabled to preach the truth, as new fields open unto us. I have just been with Bro. Decatur over to East St. Louis this evening to visit the people there.

The colored people own a chapel which they built themselves some two or three years ago. Their preacher died several months ago, leaving them without any one to take any special interest in their welfare. Efforts have been made by Bro. Decatur and myself for a long time to get access to the people, and we have succeeded at last in reaching them.

He met with them last Sabbath, and made arrangements for a meeting this evening, to consider the matter of their coming in with us. The house was filled with freedmen anxious for preaching and a school. I gave them a synopsis of our faith and views, after which the meeting was organized by the choice of Bro. Augustine Gordon of Concord, N. H., as chairman, and a Secretary, when the meeting was opened for business. After a friendly talk, concerning the condition of things connected with their church, society, and the chapel, also the object of our meeting, it was voted that Bro. Decatur should take the pastoral charge for the present, and that Bro. Macon should superintend the Sunday School. Thus the way has been opened for us to present to them the gospel truths of Christ's coming and kingdom. We shall hold meetings there every Lord's day, and some of the evenings during the week.

It was voted to have a day school, which will commence as soon as I can find a teacher in this city to take the school. I hope to be able to get some aid from the Government. All our aid from private sources has ceased since the campmeeting. It is now over three months since I arrived in St. Louis from the East, and I have received but ten dollars during that time, five of which I have received, since my last letter to the "Crisis," from Sr. Ruth Williams of No. Canton, Ct.

I know I have tried to be faithful in the discharge of my duties here, and I have worked making seats and desks, besides a great deal of other work for the schools and churches, in order to save money. I have also made and repaired shoes for myself and family. I know that a great many of those who find fault with those interested in the welfare of the freedmen and laboring for their salvation would never be satisfied with such fare as our missionaries have to take up with. Some of us leave our companions and our old friends, to come into a land where we are despised, and known by the title generally of "Nigger Preachers," or Nigger Teachers"; yet there is a glorious compensation in the thought that it is for the sake of our most worthy and holy Redeemer, who suffered all things for us, and died that we might be redeemed through his blood, to appear with those named in Heb. 11th chapter, from the thirty-second to the fortieth verses inclusive.

Glory to God! For although we are so unworthy and unprofitable ourselves, yet through the mercy of God we can be saved through the merits of Christ our Redeemer.

Dear Bro., I do not speak of our trials and and lack of means to find fault with any. No, no; God forbid. I do it to prevent others finding fault with us, and finding an excuse to withhold their means from the Lord's poor, simply because they have been taught to believe that the poor missionaries are living on the means they have furnished heretofore for the spread of the gospel.

My health is such that I cannot travel and attend to the duties belonging to our acting as Supt. of the Mission here. I expect to leave about the 11th of January for the East. I must have rest, and, the Lord willing, I intend to remain at Savoy, Mass., until Spring. I am nearly worn out. I do feel that the Amer. Advent Mission ought to be sustained; and whether I am East or West, I intend to do all in my power for the spread of the gospel among the poor and destitute freedmen and others.

I know that many of our brethren believe that the best way to give the gospel to the freedmen, is for preachers to start out independent of any Mission Society, and depend upon aid as it shall be sent by their various friends; but they forget that a church among the freedmen can not and will not sustain itself like a church at the North. All may go well so long as they have a preacher or leader to watch over them; but if he dies, or is sick, or any other contingency arises where the counsel or action of other parties is indispensably necessary to look after their interests, they can not stand; and we see the necessity of a Mission Board, whose duty it is to look after those churches and provide for their wants. One may go and plant; it may need others to water, but God gives the increase.

Every thing is pleasant between myself and all connected with the mission here, so far as I know; and the mission was never in a more prosperous condition than now; and judging from appearances, our prospects for future good and usefulness were never so bright as at the present. We are having excellent meetings, and especially at our Pilgrim Church, cor. of 5th and Biddle streets. We are having conversions every week, of both white and colored. Bro. J. W. Elliott, from Elliota, Minn., and Bro. A. W. Gordon, from Concord, N. H., are laboring with us, who, together with our own preachers, make a good force.

In a word, we are improving slowly. That is, we are gaining in strength and numbers. The Lord is truly with us. The mission here should not be forgotten by our brethren. It is a new field, and new doors of usefulness are opening unto us; and with the prayers of our brethren and sisters, we need also some of the means God has put into their hands to be used for his glory, that we may be enabled to achieve a great victory in a desolate land. Pray for us. H. K. FLAGG.

LETTER FROM SR. INGHAM.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to acknowledge, through the "Crisis," letters received from S. F. H., East Amherst, Mass.; Mary, Exeter, N. H.; "A friend of the Lord," Newark, N. J.; Hope, Wakefield, N. H.; Worcester, Christmas present; G. S. S., Mansfield, Ms.; no signature, and the post mark obliterated; Wm. L. Himes, Buchanan; C. Greene, M. D., Phila.; F. Bates, Richmond, Me.; J. Hall, Keene, N. H.; Mary Gardner, Providence, R. I.; E. Davis, Lake Village, N. H.; C. Colegrove, Verkshire, N. Y.; W. & E. Ide, Rahway, N. J.; G. Child, North Hyde Park, Vt.; Newburyport (no name); from Brn. Randall, Pearson, Burnham, and Haskell, Haverhill, Ms.; M. Fisk, and M. Hammond, Natick; and E. Burt, New Britain, Ct.

May they be richly rewarded for their kind remembrance of me and mine, is my earnest prayer. I remember last spring, when in a dark and cloudy time, I put on my things and went down to the old homestead where I often resorted to unburden my heart and receive earthly sympathy and counsel; and the next morning my mother sent me these verses, accompanied with a note of cheer, and which if you choose to publish, might comfort other aching hearts.

NEVER MURMUR.

There may be clouds on the mountain,
And not a drop of rain;
They may hang o'er the valley,
Yet hang there in vain.
He who the clouds controlleth,
Still holdeth the rain.
With sunshine and shadow,
Thy life may be checked;
As the mountain and valley,
Too often are decked.
A Father's kind hand
Permitteth the shade;
The sunshine seems brighter
In comparison laid.
Christian, thy sky may be dark and low'ring,
And thy heart, too, full of pain;
Dark 'neath thy feet thy pathway,
And giants on the plain;
Still trust thee, hope thee ever,
Ne'er murmur, ne'er complain.
"Lo, I am with you alway,"
Was written ne'er in vain,
Those arms are still around thee,
Though thou art on the main.
On earth he prayed for thee—
He prayeth still the same.
Look not on the toils of the morrow,
For sufficient unto the day
Is the evil thereof, and the burdens,
Let them come to thee when they may.
"My grace is sufficient for thee"—
Rise, gather thee strength for thy way.

In the evening of that morning, your letter with the "Conference Donation" enclosed came to me, and the next day we received another present from Charlton, Mass.; so my burdens regarding temporal things were lightened, and in a way that I thought not of.

I have found in my short experience that God is always better to me than my fears; and I desire by his grace to learn contentment with my lot, regarding it as the appointment of my heavenly Father, submitting cheerfully, knowing that "he doeth all things well."

S. A. INGHAM.

P. S.—I would send the amount contained in each letter, but by the tenor of them should judge that they preferred their left hand not to know what their right hand doeth. S. A. I.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the kind friends who have so generously contributed to the wants of the mission.

M. E. DOW, Sec.

In addition to the above, we most gratefully acknowledge the reception of medicines for our Dispensary (value $25), from the Worcester church, Mass. Also from the same church, about as many dollars worth of hymn books for the Mission—"Jubilee Harps." Thus we are kindly supplied with music while we are well, and medicine when we are sick; both of which make glad very many hearts, beside the donors. E. S. M., Physician.

— Charles Lamb says: "Of all sounds of all bells most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the old year. I never hear it without a gathering up of my mind to a concentration of all the images that have been diffused over the past twelve-month; all I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretted time. I begin to know its worth, as when a person dies."

Correspondence.

From Bro. I. I. Leslie.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to acknowledge the good hand of the Lord the past month. He has been true to his promises: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be"; "and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end." Some of the dear friends of this mission have sent us money and clothing for the sick and poor here. Some of this came after we had given away our last dime, and knew not where our next meal at the Mission House was coming from. This was the case about the 30th of Nov., when we received from a sister in Ind. $2.00, which the Lord impressed her to send. This helped us until the Lord sent more.

Our labors and trials the last six weeks have been great. We have also met with a great loss. In addition to constant toil, anxiety and persecutions, we have had to part with our dear Bro. B. K. Byam, whose health was such as to oblige him to return home. We parted with him most reluctantly, and many hearts were made sad by his leaving. As he is an excellent teacher and devoted missionary, it was hard to think that he could be spared from among the little band here. But he is gone, and the burden upon those left is increased.

In addition to all this, Bro. B. W. Wilkins returned here from La Grange, a week ago, almost in a dying condition, and now lies in the next room, near his end. His work is doubtless done. All is being done for him that can be; but all seems to be in vain. Probably in a few days we shall have to follow him to his lonely resting place until Jesus comes. We are laboring and praying that it may be otherwise if God can permit. A gloom and sadness is resting upon us here. Still our trust is in God; and whether we stand or fall, live or die, are praying, "Thy will be done."

We are straitened for means with which to meet all the expenses of our "Home" and the circumstances into which we are necessarily thrown. But we are willing to suffer, if it be God's will. If we can be permitted to lack and suffer, and none be condemned for it, or held responsible for our sufferings, our hearts can truly rejoice. We are determined that no worthy soul here shall suffer for food or clothing while we have them ourselves. As freely as we receive, so freely we give; but always with wisdom, and such as God giveth. We are teaching this people that there is a religion besides that of singing, praying and going to meetings; or even that of understanding and preaching the gospel. (See Matt. 25: 34–46). This is the only religion which Christ will recognize when he comes. God help us to have this, if every other kind in us is wanting.

God has sent us the following. May he bless those by whom these things were sent:

A barrel of clothing from friends in Abington, Ct., by Bro. L. Boutell. Another from Chelsea, Mass., packed also and sent by Bro. B., with $5.00 from Sr. E. A. Haskall, Harvard, Mass. $2.00 from Sr. L. Ransom, No. Carver, Mass., by Bro. W. E. Hathaway. $3.00 from Sr. Mary A. Tibbetts, Volga P. O., Ind. From the Advent church in Troy, N. Y., by Bro. Thomas W. Brooks, $21.00. $5.00 from Sr. Laura Gilman, Long Point, Ill., by Bro. Wm. L. Himes. A barrel of clothing from the friends of the mission in Clinton, Mass.. Isaac Barnes, $2.00; I. N. Barnes, $2.00; Henry Low, $1.00; all of Clinton, Mass. $1.00 from Bro. B. Dyson, Attica, Wis., by Bro. J. V. Himes. $5.00 from Sr. Emily L. Marsh, New Richmond, Pa. Mrs. Mary O. Wyne, Volga, Ind., $1. From the Advent church in Worcester, Mass., $3.00, and a barrel of bed-clothing. All but this last barrel of bed-clothing has been given and gone where we feel the Lord was pleased to have them bestowed. This barrel from Worcester is just received, and will be likewise disposed of. God bless those who have this kind of religion. I. I. LESLIE.

From Sr. Douglas.

BRO. GRANT:—Your excellent family paper still makes us its welcome weekly visits. We feel thankful for such a medium to inform us of the progress of the blessed cause of God, at home and abroad. We feel thankful that there are faithful men and women, who feel it a privilege to go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, and believe that they shall doubtless return again rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them. What a pleasure it must be for those self-denying souls to follow Him who went about doing good. Being deprived of the privilege of listening to the gospel as it is preached by the living minister, by a painful and lingering disease (rheumatism), which has deprived me of the privelege of walking, nearly nine long, weary years, I feel it a privilege, indeed, to read of what God is pleased to do through his faithful children. And as I write, I can think of others whose conditions are similar to my own, to whom the dear Crisis comes laden with blessings.

How much we feel the need of christian fellowship; how much we need your prayers and words of cheer, in these our sad and sorrowful afflictions, which we must endure as long as life. Will some of God's dear children remember us in their prayers?—we who are weighed down with afflictions and trials of this life, that we may be patient and not faint in our weary way.

MRS. FRANKLIN DOUGLAS.

From Bro. H. Woods.

BRO. GRANT:—I seat myself to write a few lines for the Crisis. I left home Nov. 27th, to spend the winter in Florida for my health. When we reached New York, we went to the Star of Hope Mission and spent a few hours, and found Sister Smith very much fatigued. She is wearing herself out in the service of the Lord. She showed us the Mission House and I must say I was surprised that she had not things more comfortable. Sister S. is doing a great work for the Lord, and she will reap her reward in the kingdom.

We shipped for Jacksonville on the steamer Alabama, and the first two days were pretty rough, and we were quite sea-sick, but the rest of the voyage we enjoyed very much. When we arrived here, we found Bro Smith, and he gave us a hearty shake of the hand. We found Bro. Smith proclaiming the glad tidings, and had the pleasure of hearing him preach three times on the Sabbath; and we think his labors are blessed. He has been the means of establishing a church in this place that works for the Lord.

Bro. Smith held a series of meetings, seventeen miles from Lake City, last week, and we were with him and had a glorious time. The Spirit of the Lord was with us.

Bro. Smith baptized one, and before we came away there were more that were ready to follow the example. The Lord has raised up a church in that place that are looking for the coming of Christ. Bro. Smith has some to baptize in this place next Sabbath. Praise the Lord! the truth is spreading. I feel that Bro. S. is doing a great work in Florida. The climate here is warm and all that could be desired. The orange trees look beautifully, covered with large, nice fruit.

Respectfully Yours,
H. S. Woods.

Jacksonville, Florida, Dec. 24th 1898.

Bro. Moses Young, Lincolnville, Me., Dec. 9th, writes:—

"Under the labors of Bro. Simeon Hall, a revival commenced in this town the first of last May. Its influence has produced much good, and best of all, the revival interest still continues. I have often wished that all the dear brethren scattered abroad, could meet with us in our social meetings, and witness our joy. Since our tent-meeting at Blackington's Corner, in Rockland, about the 30th of Sept., Bro. Hall has spent a part of his time laboring in and near the city of Rockland. A blessed revival is the result. Scores have been converted, and the blessed interest is increasing every day. Prejudices are being removed from all but the priests."

Bro. Stephen Bush, Monmouth, Ill., Nov. 8th, 1868:—"I never saw a paper I loved so well as the Crisis. There is more real information in it, than all other denominational papers put together; that is, in regard to the Bible. Some here want to know where I get my Bible knowledge? I then show them the Crisis.

I heard brother Hough, in Iowa, give a course of lectures. He preached more Bible in one discourse than I have heard here in a year."

DR. WM. SMITH'S UNABRIDGED STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.

The great Biblical work of the nineteenth century, revised and edited by Prof. H. B. Hackett, with the co-operation of Mr. Ezra Abbott, A. M., A. S. S., assistant Librarian of Harvard University.

This valuable work was first published in London, 1863, and its author, a man extensively known through his classical dictionaries and histories, has brought all his great experience and genius for organization to bear upon this vast compendium of Biblical knowledge. It is the condensation of thousands of volumes, and there is not a question concerning matter of fact in the Scriptures which does not here receive an answer.

It is a vast library in itself, embodying the results of the profoundest Biblical scholarship and research of both Europe and America. All other Bible dictionaries bear the same relation to this grand, perfected reprint, as do minor works of the English language with Webster's Royal Illustrated Quarto. The entire Faculties of our Colleges and Universities, as also Editors and Reviewers, unanimously commend it. The editor of this American edition, Prof. Hackett, was one of the contributors to the English edition, and enjoys a reputation for eminent scholarship and thorough Biblical knowledge, on both sides of the sea. Mr. E. Abbott, assistant editor, is also an accomplished scholar. An able corps of waiters assisted also in its compilation.

This reprint has received many valuable additions wherever it was important to add the results of more recent investigation; and new maps and illustrations have been added, making in all four thousand. Besides this, great attention has been paid to the wants of American students, by lists of books and writers upon the subject treated. The discoveries of the English Exploring Fund in Palestine, awakening so much interest at the present time, are all taken advantage of in this edition.

This work is published in two forms. It is issued in numbers by subscription, to be published monthly; each number containing 112 pages. The entire work will comprise about thirty numbers, price 75 cts. per number. The bound volumes, four in number, are $6.50 cloth; half morocco, $8.75.; calf, $9.00.

The publishers of this great work make the following proposition to ministers: Every clergyman obtaining three subscribers for the work, at the retail price ($6.50 per vol.), will receive a copy for themselves free of all cost. No doubt many will avail themselves of this privilege. Laymen, who desire to aid their pastor in securing a copy, can solicit subscribers, and thus make him a gift in part, or wholly. Those who desire the work, and feel unable to purchase, can take an agency, and by a little effort, not only earn the volumes, but also good wages beside. The general agent, H. V. Butler, recently obtained, in a very short time, subscriptions for over one thousand volumes in the city of Providence alone. The work is published by Hurd and Houghton, 459 Broome St., N. Y., to whom applications can be sent.

Obituaries.

Libby. Died in Kezar Falls, Me., Oct. 24th, 1868, Bro. Tobias Libby, aged about fifty years.

Bro. Libby set out on the pilgrim journey to the heavenly Canaan in his youthful days; was baptized, and united with the Bulockites (a branch of the Freewill Baptist denomination), in which connection he ever after remained; although, several years prior to his death, he became a real and ardent lover of the precious truths of the Bible, so highly prized by Adventists. His sickness was somewhat protracted and painful, and he longed to pass away, having a good hope of life and immortality, "over there," in the paradise of God, feeling assured that the grave would be his resting-place only for a little season ere he with all the sleeping millions would hear the voice of the great Judge calling "come forth." He has left a beloved companion and two children, besides a large circle of kind friends to mourn, but not without the blessed promise to cheer them, that as Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him when he comes. Bro. T. W. Piper preached a sermon of great power and beauty, and full of comfort and sympathy, from words found in Job 14: 14, on the funeral occasion.

Chas. H. Hurd.

Stone. Died in Boston, 11th ult., Bro. Allen Stone, aged sixty years and eleven months.

Bro. Stone was attacked with rheumatism over eleven years ago, since which time he has been confined to his home by the painful disease which he bore with christian resignation to the last. His faith held to the last that Christ would very soon return to earth, to banish all pain and sorrow. During his confinement he loved to converse on Bible truths, which were a comfort to him, and was grateful for the many calls of those of kindred faith. His Bible, of largest print, furnished him some years since, gives evidence of much reading. The latter part of his days he had a strong desire that God would give him the use of limbs, which were all drawn up, but finally he was resigned to wait the trumpet sound of Almighty God, when all righteous lame men will leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing, the eyes of the blind shall see, tears shall be wiped off their eyes. May this be the happy lot of all who read this notice, to join in the glad acclaim to swell the song of redeeming love to the King who shall sit upon his throne.

W. C. Stone.

Brown. Fell asleep in Jesus, at his residence in North Lewisburg, Champaign Co., Ohio, Bro. Smith Brown, aged eighty years and six months.

Since 1843, Bro. Brown has been a firm, outspoken, unyielding supporter of the despised faith and his house (near Newton, Union Co., where he resided until about one year ago), has witnessed many pleasant scenes of christian communion among the brethren of like precious faith. His life was that of a humble, consistent, devoted believer; and his bereaved widow, who shared his faith and trials, together with his children and friends, has confidence that when the Life-Giver comes, and all the saints with him, he will be found among the white-robed throng.

M. L. Southwick.

This aged pilgrim was dearly loved and highly respected by all. His daily walk and conversation were truly that of a christian. Since the death of his wife, he has made his home with Bro. and Sr. Smith, where he has been the constant recipient of that kind treatment due to so good a parent. But the enemy stole him away suddenly, without warning. He laid himself down upon the lounge, and his life departed like the going out of a candle. There was no struggle or groan. He leaves children and grand-children, and a large circle of friends to mourn, but not as those without hope, for they expect to meet him in the resurrection. The funeral services were attended by the writer, with comforting words from Job 14: 14.

A. E. Babcock.

Norton. Died in Porter, Me., Dec. 25th, 1868, Earnest, only child of Moses and Ruth Norton, aged three years and four months.

Little Earnnie has been a great sufferer during a considerable portion of his brief life, being subject to fits; but his sufferings are all over now. He sleeps in Jesus, blessed child! a jewel for the kingdom of heaven.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Florence, Dec. 29. General Garibaldi has written a letter formally declining a commission in the Greek army, which had been tendered him by the Grecian government in view of the threatened war.

Paris, Jan. 1. The Emperor Napoleon at the usual New Year's reception of the Diplomatic Corps, in replying to the addresses of the representatives of foreign powers, said that he realized with much pleasure the conciliatory spirit animating the European Governments, which enables them to quiet animosities and smooth international difficulties as fast as they arise, thus insuring the continuance of peace. He confidently hoped that the year 1869 would prove as satisfactory as the year which had just closed, and that the course of events may dissipate unfavorable apprehensions, and consolidate the peace so necessary to the welfare and progress of civilized nations and the people.

Florence, Jan. 1. King Victor Emmanuel today, in his reply to the New Year's congratulations of the military staff, said that the present situation of Italian affairs was good, but that if the present amicable situation should become cloudy, and trouble should in the future appear to be imminent, he should confidently rely upon the loyalty and patriotism of the army to sustain him in maintaining peace and the national honor.

Corfu, Jan. 1. The Government of Greece is actively engaged in perfecting and completing the armament of the national troops.

London, Jan. 1. The Times to-day, in a leading editorial, denounces the projects of the Liberals for the abolition of primogeniture, etc., and says that England is essentially aristocratic and conservative.

Constantinople, Jan. 1. The Turkish Government received an invitation yesterday to be represented at the proposed conference of the great European Powers on the Eastern question. It is asserted that Fuad Pacha has been appointed to represent the Sultan. The date of the Conference has not yet been fixed.

Madrid, Jan. 1. Gen. Caballero de Roda, after having issued a proclamation to the insurgents at Malaga to throw down their arms, and they refusing to submit, the General declared the place in a state of siege. The town was then attacked by the government troops, and the insurgents were fought in the streets and defeated, when Gen. Caballero succeeded in restoring order.

Russia in the East.—The steady progress of Russia toward the British Indina Empire has been, for many years, a source of great uneasiness to English statesmen. Sir John Laurence, the present Governor-General of India, has however, never shared in this uneasiness; or, at all events, has never favored the adoption on the part of the government, of any policy of active opposition to Russian influence in the East. The fact that he has finally taken the alarm, and called the attention of the home government to the latest phase of Russian intrigue, is therefore entitled to more weight than would attach to a similar action by almost any other British statesman.

Sir John reports that the Himalayas, between Thibet and Afghanistan, are not impassable except through the Khiva Pass, as has been supposed, but that a Russian army coming from Eastern Turkestan, and passing through the Vale of Cashmere, would find no difficulty in transporting guns and baggage trains across the mountains into the British territory, through passes the existence of which has not hitherto been known. Within the last few months, the Russians have not only overrun a great part of Turkestan, but have obtained the right to place a garrison at Gumah, a point commanding the mountain passes. The English journals, alarmed at these reports, cry out that if Sir John Laurence is right in his facts, the time for vigorous action has come, and unless the Vale of Cashmere is promptly occupied by British troops. India, they assert, will lie at the mercy of the Czar, and the next advance of the Russians toward Constantinople will be accompanied by the invasion of India, provided England again interferes to preserve the integrity of European Turkey.

Chili.—An eruption of the volcano Llullalleco, situated on an elevated peak of the Andes, and distant about eighty leagues from Coplapo, has taken place, and still continues. Enormous pieces of rock have been thrown from its crater to a great distance. With the lava a hill of brownish color has been formed. At the foot of the peak on which the volcano is situated, large fissures, some of them forty yards wide, have been opened, and from them issues water containing abundance of salt and sulphur in solution. A few hundred yards from the fissures just mentioned, the structure of the ground has undergone a change, and small brooks have been formed in which fish, similar in appearance to mountain roach, are found.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 29. Late advices from foreign papers contain the following: The Austrian War Minister, Herr Von Kuhn, made a significant speech in the Committee of Delegations at Pesth the other day on the military budget. Speaking of fortifications which the Ministry purposes to erect in the vicinity of Cracow, he declared that no delay ought to be allowed in providing for the surety of Galicia and the whole of the eastern frontier, for we shall perhaps soon witness important events. I must take this opportunity, he added, of laying the greatest stress on the necessity of completing as speedily as possible the railroads which are to connect Hungary with Gallacia, and especially on the importance of the line of operations which connects Pesth and Kashan and Pisemyal. In Russia, attempts are also being made to bring the railways as close as possible to the frontier. It may be true that this is done for commercial purposes, but commercial roads are also military roads.

Statistics of Masonry.—It is estimated by those who have some knowledge of the subject, that at present there are, in round numbers, about 1,250,000 Free and Accepted Masons scattered upon the face of the globe. Of this number some 150,000 are in England, 100,000 in Scotland, and 80,000 in Ireland. There are about 600,000 on the continent of Europe, 300,000 in the United States, and 50,000 in other parts of the world. In England there are two or three thousand persons initiated every year, and the Masonic body is said to be everywhere increasing.

A Remarkable Tree.—In the birch-wood of Culloden, Scotland, there is a remarkable tree, well worthy of note. About thirty years ago a young giant of the forest was blown down, and fell across a deep gully or ravine, which it completely spanned, and at the top, branches took root on the other side. From the parent stem no less than fifteen trees have grown up perpendicularly, all in a row; and they still flourish in their splendor, while the parent stem evinces no token of decay. Several of the trees are not less than thirty feet high. The tree is a birch fir.

Passing Events.

☞ The series of meetings which commenced on the 17th inst. in the Advent Christian Chapel, closed last evening at the Good Templar's Hall. Mrs. A. E. Smith, Principal of the Star of Hope Mission, 14 Laurens street, New York, gave twelve most interesting practical discourses, and christians of all denominations that joined in those meetings were greatly blest, quickened and edified, and some careless sinners have been led to seek the Lord and to rejoice in the pardoning blood of his dear Son. Others are earnestly seeking the Lord, hoping to become christians. Miss Mellen, M. D., of the same mission, preached yesterday forenoon from Isaiah 68: 8,—"Then shall thy light break forth as the morning," and in the evening from the words, "Wilt thou be made whole." In the afternoon Mrs. Smith preached. Subject: "This same Jesus," Acts 1: 11. More solemn preaching is not often listened to than came from the lips and hearts of these female missionaries. All that heard them have been benefitted, and it is hoped they will visit our city again to labor for Christ and his cause among us. Collection taken during the meetings to aid in their noble mission work amounted to about $89. A number of our citizens have pledged to pay one dollar per month for the ensuing year to aid this mission, to be paid to B. W. Leonard, Collector, on or before the 25th of each month.—Bridgeport Standard, Dec. 28th.

☞ The cattle disease which recently made its appearance in Iowa has assumed a most virulent type, and is sweeping off stock by the thousands. Jasper county has been almost depopulated of cattle. The disease is caused by the animals eating the smutty or blasted ears of corn which they find when turned into the stalk field. It attacks the cattle very suddenly and kills them quickly.

☞ At Gloucester last week, some one said in the presence of a superannuated canine, "That dog ought to be killed, he is not good for anything!" The animal looked mournfully up into the speaker's face, then taking a wistful gaze around the store and at those present, deliberately walked out of the door, down to the harbor, where he plunged into the water and was drowned.

☞ A German linguist, professor Carl Neuman of Munich, it is stated, has discovered from the Chinese year-books that a company of Buddhist priests entered the continent of America via Alaska, a thousand years before Columbus, and explored thoroughly and intelligently the Pacific borders.

☞ Ground has been broken for the first railroad in Persia—from the capital, Teheran, six miles, to one of its fashionable suburbs.

☞ The latest accounts from Rajpootana and Central India state that the food prospects are becoming worse.

☞ Famine is again threatened in Central India, as the food crops are deficient and the prospects are worse than before.

☞ Great Britain spends annually $300,000,000 on intoxicating drinks, and on literature only 25,000,000.

Mass. A. C. Conference.

To the churches in Mass., looking for the consummation of "our hope," greeting: Whereas, the time for holding the next quarterly session of our State conference is at hand; and whereas, the Bethel church in Springfield have requested said session to be holden with them, commencing Wednesday, Jan. 13th, to continue over the following Lord's day; therefore, an invitation is hereby extended to all the Advent churches in the State to send delegates to said session of the conference; also to preachers in this and adjacent States to join with us in one more effort for God. And may God add his blessing.

Per order, E. Owen, Clerk.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Melvin Village, N.H., commencing Wednesday, Jan. 27th, and hold over the following Sunday. Let this meeting be made a special subject of prayer that God's blessing may be on his people, and that good may be accomplished.

A. W. Sibley, Sec.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene.

A. W. Sibley, Sec. of Conf.

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing.

N. G. Reed, President.
L. F. Cole, Secretary.

Notice.

The Conn. A. C. Conference, which was noticed in the Crisis to be held in New Haven, Wednesday, Jan. 6th, 1869, is postponed until Jan. 27th, 1869. The church in New Haven are building a chapel, and it will not be finished until the 27th, and ready for the reception of the conference, at which time their hearts will be open to receive us with cordial welcome. We have some very important business to attend to at this conference, and we hope that every church in the State will send one or more delegates, and all the ministering brethren will be present. Let all pray that God will crown our efforts with everlasting good.

B. Hitchcock, President.

Maine Central Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in the Academy, in West Gardiner, commencing Thursday, Jan. 7th, 1869, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go up to this meeting prepared to work for the Lord. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will inquire for James Spears, who will direct to places of entertainment.

W. A. Knight, Secretary.

Notice.

The Lord willing, the adjourned meeting of believers in the speedy coming of the Lord, held at Bristol, Conn., on Nov. 5th, will meet in New Market Hall (junction of Broad and High streets), Providence, R. I., on Thursday, Jan. 7th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Brn. George W. Brown of Orrington, Me., William, N. File of Newark, N. J., and others, are expected to preach the word of life.

For the brethren, Caleb Thompson.

Notice.

There will be a protracted meeting held in Plymouth, Mass., at the new Chapel, commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 7th, and hold over two Sundays, if the Lord will. We expect several of the preaching brethren will be present to preach the word. For the church, Geo. A. Brown.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garriques, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

Notice.

There will be a protracted meeting and quarterly conference in West Gardiner, Me., on the evening of Jan. 7th, and continue over the Sabbath, and longer if thought best. Come, brethren and sisters in the Lord, to labor for the salvation of sinners. Call on James Spear. H. B. Sevey.

Notice.

Those at the west wishing books, tracts, or charts, can be supplied at Rochester, N. Y., by addressing Dr. J. Naramore, (Eagle Block) Rochester, N. Y.

R. I. and M. Ct.

This conference will hold its annual session at Bristol, R. I., commencing Wednesday, 2 o'clock P. M., Jan. 6th, 1869. I intend to be there this time. Come and see. H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Notice.

There will be a series of meetings held in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., commencing Jan. 7th.

SABBATH EVE.

Mildly beaming, sunlit evening,
Is the mellow Sabbath eve;
Dripping o'er with hues of Eden,
Peace and quiet it doth leave.

Praise ascending, music blending,
Love and joy our circle spread;
Harmony of seraphs lending
Heaven's own sweetness on our head.

Youthful voices home rejoices
With their lays of melody;
Imitating angels' voices,
As it sounds afar to thee.

Hearts are lighter, smiles are brighter,
When love crowns our humble cot;
Heaven's best blessings far the richer,
Sent to bless our wandering lot.

O what pleasure, without measure,
Shall the blest in glory share;
Earth's best jewels, love's best treasure,
Naught is wanting, all are there.

Portland, Me. William C. Clark.

For the World's Crisis.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER TWENTY-FOUR.

Dear Bro. Grant:—The moment that our Savior has allowed me to send you my faithful report of our European mission, is very solemn. Many things have passed before our eyes without consideration, like an unseen comet. Nevertheless, they go by. It is positively told to us that the "ten horns shall hate the whore."—Rev. 17:16. The last horns, the Heruli in Italy, the Lombardo-Venetians and Austria representing the Huns, have also left the "beast," and are decided to resist. One horn, which seemed to be faithful, remained, which has been thought would never leave the Pope. We speak of Spain, that land in which the blood of so many martyrs has been shed; and who would have said last year that she also, and the last of all, would hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked? Nevertheless, the facts are before us. The revolution in Spain has shaken off the basis of the Jesuits. Their properties are confiscated, their monasteries closed; the liberty of conscience is proclaimed, and the Evangelical churches are opened. Garibaldi gave the following counsel to the Spaniards: "Give liberty to all excepting to the priests."

Here are the facts which speak of the prophetic accomplishment and the second coming of our dear Savior Jesus Christ. That is why we cannot sleep in the Lord's vineyard. And for that reason, we have doubled our steps in traveling over (nearly always to foot) the path of our holy mission, from Bale, to Strasbourg, Colmar, Mulhouse, Besancon, Dole, Salins, and Pontarlier. In all these towns our work has been blessed, but particularly in the last station. But the enemy has opposed itself with strength by means of the Synod, which has bidden to shut the chapel to our predications, and our work has been interrupted. But Spain opens her doors, and we hope to be able, with the Providence of God, to announce the everlasting gospel in this country also.

To give you an exact idea of my painful labors during two months past in France, I shall tell you that I have never suffered so much in the vineyard of the Lord. After a general conference at the end of the month of October with our dear brothers in Tramelan, I continued my labors in Alsace. In spite of the thick snow which covered the Jura, I crossed the mountains on foot; and from Colmar, where every body refused to receive me for the night, I was obliged to go further, in spite of the obscurity of the night and the wind accompanied by hard rain. In going out of this town (Colmar), I found two large roads before me; but having no one of whom I could ask to show me the way, I took the road lying on my right hand, and amidst the obscurity of the night and a fearful storm I pursued my way, till I saw it was impossible to continue, and I was obliged to turn back, finding myself in an uninhabitable desert, full of water and mud. The rain continued, therefore it was not possible to pass the night there, and, as I have said, I turned back. In crossing the fields, and after a long and very tiresome travel, I found at last the other road, and nearly at midnight arrived in a village where I saw some lights still burning. Its name is St. Croix.

Dripping with water and mud, I knocked at the first door, but no one answered; at last some one came to tell me I could not be received. At the second door, the same refusal. The third door, which was that of an inn, again the same answer. Neither the prayer in the name of the precious blood of our Savior, neither all other supplications, touched the heart of the inn-keeper, who answered me from his window. At last God in his kindness touched the heart of a policeman, who opened me the door of the guard, and, though being excessively dirty, I found nevertheless a hot stove, and I was a little relieved in drying my clothes covered with rain and mud. I remained there all the rest of the night, lying on a board near the fire.

I made in that memorable evening twenty-four American miles without supper. The next morning I continued my way, and after having made nine miles, arrived at an inn where I could take a good cup of milk with the last fifty centimes that I possessed. I made still sixteen miles more, where a brother lent me twenty francs. In that way, I took the cars for Besancon, where I have worked three days with a little success.

This town,—I can well say it without exaggeration,—is like a lone desert, full of all kind of vices and flaws. In leaving this town, I went through several villages of the old Bourgogne, where God won some honest catholic souls to his holy gospel. Glory be to him! They have never seen the Bible, and having none to give to them, I was obliged to cross the mountains to Geneva, where I bought one, to be able to give it to them, which was received with great joy.

I have had the pleasure of finding my dear son Ludemir in the town of Yverdon, who came to meet me. He comforted me in giving me very good news, which a very dear friend sends us from America, through whose hands Bro. Adams sends us $73.50.

We are but five at the present time who are engaged in the work of the Lord. Bro. Guymet is gone to Italy; Bro. James Erzenberger works among the German people. My son Ludomir, Sr. Schirmer and myself work among the French.

The great disaster caused in America by the earthquakes must also be a lesson for us. They speak of the accomplishment of prophecy (Jer. 25:26). Yes; "The king of Sheshack [Babylon] shall drink after them." The U. S., which have glorified themselves in their richness and delicacies, will not escape. Their turn is come; and they shall drink of it, and to the bottom of the cup. California has been reserved by the Lord to support the glorious mission in these last days. What has she done till now? The "Crisis" of San Francisco is lamenting her sins. She called all the hearts who called themselves christians to help her in this great enterprise. The "Crisis" has sacrificed very much for God's work, till she has become quite exhausted. That is why God has taken away his talents. That is why her inhabitants have perished, and they shall perish still more. Misfortune to the sinners who do not obey the gospel of Christ in these last days, but who give much for Satan and his famous spiritisms. O that the Almighty God would give her to see clearly her future destiny! May they sell their worldly pride, and buy themselves the humility of Bethlehem's stable. May they remember that what now makes their disaster shall soon be the prey of wild beasts. Jer. 25:32, 33. Let us bless God, we, to whom he has given the privilege of being still among the living, and free from the great misfortunes with which he has stricken the unbelieving; but especially let us bless him for having been able to understand his purpose concerning the everlasting kingdom, so dear to our hearts. Let us pursue our great work with songs of triumph, and forget the world, and his great business, who has no other god but gold; and when this beloved divinity shall fail, he will have no hope, neither in this world or in the other.

Dear Brn., pray for your dear little children in Europe. We are but one body, of one church of Christ. And may God hear those which we address to him every day in your favor; for you who are at the other side of the ocean; that he may spread abundantly his blessings over you all, and us here, in this new coming year of the Lord, 1869. Amen and amen. Your brother in the blessed hope,

M. B. Czechowski.

DRESS.

(Concluded.)

Fourthly: gay and costly apparel directly tends to create and inflame lust. I was in doubt whether to name this brutal appetite, or, in order to spare delicate ears, to express it by some gentle circumlocution. Like the dean, who some years ago, told his audience at Whitehall, "If you do not repent you will go to a place which I have too much manners to name before this good company." But I think it best to speak out; since the more the word shocks your ears, the more it may arm your heart. The fact is plain and undeniable: it has this effect, both on the wearer and the beholder. To the former, our elegant poet, Cowley, addresses those fine lines:—

"The adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barbarous skill;
Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill."

That is, (to express the matter in plain terms, without any coloring,) "you poison the beholder with far more of this base appetite than he otherwise would feel." Did you not know this would be the natural consequence of your elegant adornment? To push the question home, did you not desire, did you not design it should? And yet all the time, how did you

"Set to public view,

Meanwhile, you do not yourself escape the snare which you spread for others. The dart recoils, and you are infected with the same poison with which you infect them. You kindle a flame, which at the same time, consumes both yourself and your admirers. And it is well, if it does not plunge both you and them into the flames of hell.

Fifthly, the wearing of costly array is directly opposite to the being adorned with good works. Nothing can be more evident than this; for the more you lay out on your own apparel, the less you have left to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry, to lodge the strangers, to relieve those who are sick and in prison, and to lessen the numberless afflictions to which we are exposed in this vale of tears. And here is no room for the evasion used before, "I may be as humble in cloth of gold as in sackloth." If you could be as humble when you choose costly, as when you choose plain apparel (which I flatly deny,) yet you could not be as beneficent, as plenteous in good works. Every shilling which you save from your own apparel, you may expend in clothing the naked, and relieving the various necessities of the poor whom ye "have always with you." Therefore, every shilling which you needlessly spend on your apparel, is, in effect, stolen from God and the poor. And of how many precious opportunities of doing good have you defrauded yourself! How often have you disabled your selffrom doing good by purchasing what you did not want? For what end did you buy these ornaments? To please God? No; but to please your own fancy, or to gain the admiration and applause of those that were no wiser than yourself. How much good might you have done with that money? And what an irreparable loss have you sustained by not doing it, if it be true that the day is at hand, when every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor.

I pray you consider this well. Perhaps you have not seen it in this light before. When you are laying out that money in costly apparel, which otherwise you could have spared for the poor, you thereby deprive them of what God, the proprietor of all, had lodged in your hands for their use. If so, what you put upon yourself, you are, in effect, tearing from the back of the naked; and the costly and delicate food which you eat, you are snatching from the mouth of the hungry. For mercy, for pity, for Christ's sake, for the honor of his gospel stay your hand. Do not throw this money away. Do not lay out on nothing, yea, worse than nothing, what may clothe your poor, naked, shivering fellow-creature.

Many years ago, when I was at Oxford, in a cold winter's day a young maid (one of those we kept at school) called upon me. I said, "You seem half starved. Have you nothing to cover you but that thin linen gown?" Said she, "Sir, this is all I have." I put my hand in my pocket, but found I had scarce any money left, having just paid away what I had. It immediately struck me, will thy Master say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"? Thou hast adorned thy walls with the money which might have screened this poor creature from the cold. Oh justice! Oh mercy! Are not these pictures the blood of this poor maid? See thy expensive apparel in the same light; thy gown, hat, head-dress; every thing about thee which cost more than christian duty required thee to lay out, is the blood of the poor. Oh be wise for the time to come. Be more merciful. More merciful to God and man. More abundantly adorned (like men and women professing godliness) with good works.

It is true, great allowance is to be made for those who have never been warned of these things, and, perhaps, do not know that there is a word in the Bible which forbids costly apparel. But what is that to you? You have been warned over and over; yea, in the plainest manner possible. And what have you profited thereby? Do not you still dress like other people of the same fortune? Is not your dress as gay, as expensive as theirs, who never had any such warning? As expensive as it would have been if you had never heard a word about it? Oh, how will you answer this when you and I stand together at the judgment seat of Christ? Nay, have not many of you grown finer as fast as you grew richer? As you increased in the substance, have you not increased in dress? Witness the profusion of ribbons, gauze or linen about your heads. What have you profited by bearing the reproach of Christ, by being called a Methodist? Are you not as fashionably dressed as others of your rank that are not Methodists? Do you ask, "But may we not as well buy fashionable as unfashionable things?" I answer, not if they give you a bold, immodest look, as those huge hats, bonnets and head-dresses do; and not if they cost more. "But I can afford it." Oh lay aside forever that idle, nonsensical word! No christian can afford to waste any part of the substance with which God has intrusted him. How long do you stay here? may not you tomorrow, perhaps to-night, be summoned to arise and go hence, in order to give an account of this and all your talents to the Judge of quick and dead? How then can it be, that after so many warnings you persist in the same folly?

There are still among you, some that neither profit themselves by all they hear, nor are willing that others should; and these, if any of you are almost persuaded to dress as christians, reason, and rally, and laugh you out of it. O, ye petty triflers, I entreat you not to do the devil's work any longer; whatever you do yourselves, do not harden the hearts of others. And you who are of a better mind, avoid these tempters with all possible care; and if you come where any of them are, either beg them to be silent, or leave the room.

Sixthly, the putting on of costly apparel, is directly opposite to what the apostle terms, "the hidden man of the heart;" that is, to the whole "image of God," wherein we were created, and which is stamped anew upon the heart of every christian believer;—opposite to the mind which was in Christ Jesus, and the whole nature of inward holiness. All the time you are studying this outward adorning, the whole inward work of the Spirit stands still, or, rather, goes back; though by very gentle, and almost imperceptible degrees. Instead of growing more heavenly minded, you are more and more earthly minded. If you once had fellowship with the Father and the Son, it now gradually declines; and you insensibly sink deeper and deeper into the spirit of the world—into foolish and hurtful desires, and groveling appetites. All these evils, and a thousand more, spring from that one root, indulging in costly apparel.

Why, then, does not every one that either loves or fears God, flee from it, as from the face of a serpent? Why are you still so conformable to the irrational, sinful customs of a frantic world? Why do you still despise the express commandment of God, uttered in the plainest terms? You see the light; why do you not follow the light of your own mind? Your conscience tells you the truth; why do you not obey the dictates of your own conscience? You answer, "Universal custom is against me; and I know not how to stem the mighty torrent." Not only the profane, but the religious world, run violently the other way. Look into, I do not say the theaters, but the churches, and the meetings of every denomination (except a few old fashioned Quakers, or the people called Moravians); look into the congregations in London, or elsewhere of those that are styled gospel ministers; look into Northampton chapel; yea, into the Tabernacle, or the chapel in Tottenham Court Row; nay, look into the chapel in West street, or that in the City Road; look at the very people that sit under the pulpit, or by the side of it, and are not those that can afford it, (I can hardly refrain from doing them the honor of naming their names,) as fashionably adorned as those of the same rank in other places?

This is a melancholy truth. I am ashamed of it; but I know not how to help it. I call heaven and earth to witness this day, that it is not my fault. The trumpet has not given an uncertain sound for nearly fifty years past. O God, thou knowest I have borne a clear and a faithful testimony. In print, in preaching, in meeting the society, I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. I am, therefore, clear of the blood of those that will not hear. It lies upon their own head.

I warn you once more in the name and in the presence of God, that the number of those that rebel against God is no excuse for your rebellion. He hath expressly told us, "thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." It was said of a great, good man, he "Feared not, had Heaven decreed it, to have stood

Who of you desire to share in that glorious character? to stand adverse against a world? If millions condemn you it will be enough that you are acquitted by God and your own conscience.

"Nay, I think," say some, "I could bear the contempt or reproach of all the world beside. I regard only my own relatives; those especially that are of my own household. My father, my mother, my brothers and sisters (and perhaps one that is nearer than all,) are teazing me continually." This is a trial indeed; such as very few can judge of, but those that bear it. "I have not strength to bear it." No, not of your own, certainly you have not. But there is strength laid up for you on "One that is mighty!" His grace is sufficient for you, and he now sees your care, and is just ready to give it you. Meantime, regard his awful declaration, touching them that regard man more than God: He that loveth father or mother, brother or sister, husband or wife, "more than me, is not worthy of me."

But are there not some among you that did once renounce this conformity to the world, and dress in every point neat and plain, suitable for your profession? Why then did you not persevere therein? why did you turn back from the good way? Did you contract an acquaintance, perhaps a friendship with some that were still fond of dress? It is no wonder then that you were sooner or later, moved to measure back your steps to earth again. No less was it to be expected, than that one sin would lead you to another. It was one sin to contract a friendship with any that knew not God; for "know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" And this led you back into another, unto that conformity to the world, from which you had escaped. But what are you to do now? Why, if you are wise, escape for your life—no delay—look not behind you. Without loss of time, renounce the cause and the effect together. Now, to-day, before the heart be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, cut off, at one stroke, that sinful friendship with the ungodly, and that sinful conformity to the world. Determine this day! Do not delay till tomorrow, lest you delay forever! For God's sake, for your own sake, make that resolution now!

I conjure you all who have any regard for me, show me before I go hence, that I have not labored, even in this respect, in vain for nearly half a century. Let me see before I die, a Methodist congregation, full as plainly dressed as a Quaker congregation. Only be more consistent with yourselves. Let your dress be cheap as well as plain; otherwise, you do but trifle with God and me, and your own souls. I pray let there be no more costly silks among you, how grave soever they may be; let there be no Quaker-linen, proverbially so-called for their exquisite fineness; no Brussels lace, no elephantine hats or bonnets, those scandals of female modesty. Be all of a piece. Dress from head to foot as persons professing godliness, professing to do every thing, small and great, with the single view of pleasing God.

Let not any of you who are rich in this world, endeavor to excuse yourselves from this by talking nonsense. It is stark, staring nonsense to say, "O I can afford this or that." If you have regard to common sense, never let that silly word come out of your mouths. No man living can afford to waste any part of what God has committed to his trust. None can afford to throw any part of that food and raiment into the sea, which was lodged with him, on purpose to feed the hungry, and clothe the naked; and it is far worse than simple waste, to spend any part of it in gay or costly apparel; for this is no less than to turn wholesome food into deadly poison. It is giving so much money to poison both yourself and others as far as your example spreads, with pride, vanity, anger, lust, love of the world, and thourand foolish and hurtful desires, which tend to pierce them through with many sorrows. And is there no harm in all this? Oh God, arise and maintain thne own cause. Let no men or devils any longer put out our eyes and lead us blindfold into the pit of destruction.

I beseech you, every man that is here present before God, every woman, young and old, married and single, yea, every child that knows good from evil, take this to yourself. Each of you, for one, take the apostle's advice; at least hinder not others from taking it. I beseech you, O ye parents, do not hinder your children from following their own convictions, even though you might think they would look prettier if they were adorned with such gew-gaws as other children wear. I beseech you, O ye husbands, do not hinder your wives; you, ye wives, do not hinder your husbands, either by word or deed, from acting just as they are persuaded in their own minds. Above all, I conjure you, ye half Methodists; you that trim between us and the world; you that frequently, perhaps constantly, hear our preaching, but are in no further connection with us; whatever ye do yourselves, do not say one word to hinder others from practising the advice which has been now given. Yet a little while and we shall not need these poor coverings, for this corruptible body shall put on incorruption; yet a few days hence, and this mortal body shall put on immortality. In the meantime, let this be our only care, to put off "the old man"—our old nature, "which is corrupt," which is altogether evil—and to "put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." In particular, put on "as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, gentleness, long suffering." Yea, to sum up all in one word, "put on Christ," that when he shall appear, ye may appear with him in glory."—Wesley's Sermons, vol. ii., pp. 258–265.

Dear reader, having thus presented to you Wesley's sermon on pride, allow me to present to you "Primitive Piety," by Gibbon. Speaking of the christian, he says: "Shut his ears against the profane harmony of sounds, and to view with indifference the most finished production of human art. Gay apparel, magnificent houses, and elegant furniture, were supposed to unite the double guilt of pride and sensuality; a simple and mortified appearance was more suitable to the christian who was certain of his sins, and doubtful of his salvation. In their censures of luxury, the fathers are extremely minute and circumstantial; and among the various articles which excite their pious indignation, we may enumerate false hair, garments of any color except white, instruments of music, vases of gold or silver."—Milman's Gibbon's History of Rome, Vol. 1, pp. 458 and 459.

Dear reader, if the primitive christians considered ornamenting themselves and their houses a sin, and abstained from such, which Gibbon says they did; you must admit that there has come a great change in the church. The outward appearance of the professors of our day shows no difference from that of the world. May the Lord help you, dear reader, if you are thus proud, to "stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein." Jeremiah 6:16.

HOW WE ARE CALLED.

What is the meaning of the words, "Ye are called.

You do not call people who are near you, or coming your way. If I saw you coming my way, I should not call you; I should wait till you came: but if I saw you going the wrong way, and getting farther and farther off from where you ought to be, then I should call you. "God is faithful, by whom ye were called."

He finds us afar off; Alas! afar off from his life, his happiness, his image, his peace, wandering from his home, alienated from the Son of his love. He called us; he called us unto the fellowship of his Son.

Again, you call a man when he is in danger and unconscious of it. Now, an unconverted sinner is like a man asleep with the flames around him. He is dreaming of paradise, it may be, and yet the flame of hell is around his very couch. So God sees poor souls and calls them, (a loud call it needs!) He calls them to the fellowship of his Son. The sinner's want of title makes a call necessary.

If some of you met a beggar in the streets, clothed in rags, and called him to your well-furnished house, and to your well supplied board, it is a matter for your consideration and not his that you have been pleased to give the invitation. But having been called, has he not a right to come, and may he not come? Is not his call his title, no matter who he is?

Observe, everything he calls us to he emphasizes as his. He hath called us to his kingdom and his glory; unto the fellowship of his Son; he has called us to partake of his life, of his salvation. He has a right to call whom he pleases to his house, for the banquet is all his own. The oxen and the fatlings are his. It is the King who makes a marriage for his Son, and he has a right to send into the highways and hedges, to call in the halt, the lame, and the blind, that his house may be full. And "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord." It is in the knowledge of these truths, and such as these, that the Lord sends home conviction and establishment to the hearts of his people. These words are God's words, and by them he calls us. Has God called you unto "the fellowship of his Son? There is not a soul that would be presumptuous in taking God at his word, in obeying the call, and saying, "Here am I, for thou didst call me."—Rev. M. Rainsfrod.

THE BASHIKOUAY ANT.

The following interesting extracts relative to that fearful scourge, the "Bashikouay Ant," peculiar to tropical Africa, we take from Harper's Magazine for January, the facts of which are gathered from Paul Du Chaillu's Wild Life under the Equator.—Ed.

"But more potent than snakes, lions, leopards, or gorillas, is a species of ant called the Bashikouay. It is the dread not of man alone, but of every living thing, from the elephant and leopard down to the smallest insect. A half inch is about the average length of one of these ants, though some are found of twice that length. Individually they are bold; the bull-dog has not more pluck and tenacity of grip. But their great power lies in the immense armies into which they organize themselves, and the military order which they preserve. When on the march they go in a column two inches broad, but often miles in length.

"Du Chaillu once saw a column formed in close order, which occupied twelve hours, from sunrise to sunset, in passing the spot from which he watched them; and as they march by night as well as by day, he did not know how long the column had been passing before he saw it. All along the line were larger ants, clearly officers, standing outside the column until their squads had passed, when they moved on and joined them. How many millions upon millions there were in this army, it would be idle to attempt to estimate.

"When on the march the column comes to a small stream, they fling across it a living bridge. Selecting a spot where the branch of a tree reaches nearly over to one on the other bank, only lower down, the second of the pontoniers,* as we may fairly call them, with his fore-claws grasps the hind-claws of the one in front, and lowers him over; a third does the same by the second; and so on until this living chain is long enough to reach the desired point. Line after line is thus stretched until a bridge is formed wide enough for the whole army to pass over. Imagine the strength of muscle which these creatures must possess to enable them to maintain their grasp for hours.

"The marching column throws itself into line of battle with wonderful precision. When it sweeps over the country, nothing living can stay its progress. Du Chaillu was once plodding through the forests in search of game. All at once he was startled by a strange sound. It was caused by a rush of wild beasts. He thought he caught a glimpse of a gorilla; he was sure he heard the footsteps of an elephant; and soon after a mighty crash, as though a herd of elephants were rushing through the forest. Soon the air grew thick with insects. While wondering what this might mean, he felt the torments of innumerable bites, and in an instant he found himself almost covered by ants. He had been fallen upon by the skirmishers of an army of Bashikouay.

"He set off at his sharpest run in the direction which the other fugitives had taken. Fortunately his speed was greater than that of the ants; and as soon as he thought himself safe he stripped off his clothing. It fairly swarmed with ants, who had literally buried themselves in the garments, striking their pincers clear through into the flesh beneath. They never let go their grip until they have taken out the flesh. Pull at one till his body is separated from the head, and the jaws, if we may so call them, keep their hold. He had just resumed his garments, when the Bashikouay came upon him, and he again took to flight, never stopping until he had crossed a stream and taken refuge in a swamp beyond.

"These Bashikouay cannot bear the heat of the sun; and hence they are only found in regions covered by forests. If on a march they come to an open place, they dig a tunnel four or five feet under ground, through which they pass to the jungles on the opposite side. When they enter a village, the inhabitants run for their lives. In an incredible short space every hut is cleared of vermin, and the only trace left of them is the bones of rats and mice, and the horny wing-cases of insects. Nothing that breathes comes amiss to them. An antelope which had been shot by Du Chaillu was picked to the bones in a few hours. The carcass of an elephant would be cleared away quite as quickly as by a kraal † of natives. They sometimes come upon a huge snake lying torpid, perhaps, after the manner of his species, gorged with food. In that case it is all over with his serpentine majesty. 'I was always rejoiced,' says Du Chaillu, who does not like snakes, 'when they got hold of a serpent; though these are pretty shy, and manage generally to get out of the way, except when they are in a state of torpor.' Bats, rats, mice, roaches, centipedes, scorpions, spiders, and such small pests, are doomed. A swarm of ants will kill a rat in a minute or two, and devour him in almost as short a space.

"Upon the whole they are a blessing to the human race in Africa, by keeping down the vermin, which would otherwise render the country uninhabitable. They will not touch vegetable matter. One might almost imagine that the author of the Book of Revelation had in his mind the Bashikouay when he speaks of the swarms of 'locusts' which at the sound of the fifth trumpet arose from the smoke of the bottomless pit, to whom 'it was commanded that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree'; but whose 'torment was as the torment of a scorpion when he striketh a man.' Certain it is that the description fits the Bashikouay, while it is altogether inapplicable to the creature which we call 'locust,' whose only food is green things, and who have no tormenting bite."

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 12.

When the demands of nature for sleep are satisfied; when the constructive operations are completed, the individual awakes, consciousness returns, and the senses resume their offices. There are certain phenomena connected with awakening which have not been very satisfactorily explained. Thus, there are many people that have the power of waking at any hour they please, whether greatly fatigued or not. In the case of the individual that goes to bed at ten, and wills to wake at four, it would appear that this very determination makes a powerful impression on the brain, which it retains, and that volition sleeps very lightly in the interval. When four o'clock comes around, it sounds the alarm. There are other persons that have not the power of awakening when they please. The desire to awaken at a particular hour only induces a state of restlessness throughout the night, destroying the soundness of their sleep; the individual awakes many times with the belief that the hour is past, and very possibly oversleeps it after all. (a.)

Another curious phenomenon is the effect of habit in causing the individual to awaken each morning at a definite time. An acquaintance of mine tells me that he is in the habit of waking precisely at a quarter to seven, and this even when he goes to bed several hours later than usual. There is something very interesting in regard to the influence which previous mental states have in determining the time of waking. I suppose that at that particular hour—a quarter to seven—the brain of the individual mentioned had got into the habit of responding to certain sensations and sounds as being the call to wake up. Thus, first of all, the gradual ushering in of daylight, the cackling of fowls in the yard, the rumbling of carts in the street, the sound of servants below preparing the breakfast, and perhaps the system's demand for exercise or nourishment, all may have conspired to awaken him at that hour. The advocates of an ever conscious and active mind refer all such phenomena to immediate intrinsic physical action. The physiologist refers them to the alternation of cerebral states, believing that the senses primarily weaken the mind, not the mind the senses. Impressions affecting the polarity of certain nerves, readily induce those changes in the cerebral circulation which constitute the transition from the sleeping to the waking state.

Another curious phenomenon referred by physiologists to the influence of previous mental states, is the circumstance that in very many persons the cessation of an accustomed sound awakens from sleep; the continuance of the sound has ceased to make any impression on the sensorium; its suspension instantly removes what the mind had become accustomed to regard as one of the conditions of its repose. The mill sawyer, who is obliged to keep his saw running at night, often takes advantage of this; how quickly he awakes when he ceases to hear the familiar sound of the saw cleaving the log. The discontinuance of that sound has produced an impression on the sensorium, and this impression is instantly communicated to all parts of the brain through that intimate exquisite nervous connection that exists, and the sleeper is aroused.

Again, habit has so ordered it that sounds which, when new, are sure to awaken the slumberer, will, when become familiar, have no such effect. Witness the fact that the midnight signal gun very soon ceases to have the power to awaken the sleeping soldier, even though the musket be discharged within a few feet of him. Again, why does the telegraph operator wake up as soon as he hears the familiar click, click of his office call? Because he has habituated himself to attend to that sound, and his perception of it is increased in acuteness. On the same principle you awaken at the sound of the alarm bell, however soundly you may be sleeping.

It has been said that sleep is a regenerative process. This being the case, it would seem to be in accordance with physiology that those who sleep much would be in the best condition physically. This is true, provided the sleep be not in such excess as to produce a congested state of the brain, or interfere with that exercise in the open air which is necessary to the proper oxygenation of the blood and integrity of the muscles. Fat men are, as a rule, great sleepers. They have none of that restlessness and irritability of brain and nerve which distinguish lean, nervous people. Hence did Mark Anthony well say, in Julius Cæsar—

"I love fat men,
Sleek-headed pates, and such as sleep o'nights;
But Cassius has a lean and hungry look,

EFFECT OF TOBACCO ON THE SYSTEM.

Dr. Coles enumerates the following evils: "Weakness, pain, and sinking at the stomach; dimness of sight; dizziness and pain in the head; paleness and sallowness of countenance; feebleness of the voluntary muscles; tremulousness of the hands; weakness and hoarseness of the voice: disturbed sleep by startings and a sense of suffocation; nightmare; epileptic fits; confusion of mind; feverish and irritable temper; instability of purpose; depression of spirits; melancholy and despondency; partial and sometimes permanent insanity."

Yet tobacco has a wonderful charm. It fascinates and pervades the senses, and ultimately sways the moral and intellectual powers, holding them in a servitude which, in most cases, grows more and more servile to the end of life. General vital exhaustion, or nervous debility and premature death, are the certain and inevitable consequences of its ordinary use. Dyspepsia is one of the dread fruits of its use as a luxury. Dr. Joel Shew enumerates eighty-seven diseases caused by tobacco; and of these, many are of the most dangerous character.

The strong, rank, fetid, narcotic breath of an habitual tobacco-user is enough to almost strangle and quite sicken the new born infant that sleeps in the same bed. And many a tobacco-user's wife has suffered ill health as a consequence of sleeping with him. He pollutes the very atmosphere with the poisonous effluvia, which constantly emanates from his body. "The disastrous influence of tobacco (says an eminent writer) upon the mind is no less fearful than upon the body. No tongue or pen can describe the intellectual ruin occasioned by it."

EXCUSES FOR USING TOBACCO.

Persons have used it for asthma, headaches, weak eyes, purifying the breath (?), cold, watery stomach, to prevent obesity, to preserve the teeth, ect. But in the opinion of the most experienced medical men, tobacco aggravates, immediately or ultimately, all these difficulties. Like opium, it may give temporary relief; but the results of its continual use are in most cases disastrous. It is only a delusion to think it will cure disease. And were it not for the love of the nervous excitement it produces, and the hankering of a perverted appetite, but few would think of using it, or of offering an excuse for the vile habit.

REASONS WHY CHRISTIANS SHOULD CEASE TO USE IT.

1. Its expense. If tobacco was useful in any sense, or if it were necessary to existence, we might not consider the expense; but if it is injurious to the health of both body and mind, a christian has no right to use it! The rule for a christian is, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God." And certainly no christian can either drink strong drink, or eat, snuff, or smoke a poisonous narcotic to the glory of God; much less waste God's money for the purchase of the poison! For these reasons a christian should "not spend his money for that which is not bread."

Six cents a day is a small sum to indulge a smoker in his habit; and yet this amounts to $21.90 in a year. Add the expense of chewing, and you have at least $40 a year for tobacco, which is worse than a waste of the Lord's money! We know of many who are often in need of the good things of this life whose tobacco bill is large; but like the drunkard who will have his whisky, they will have their tobacco, even when other things, needful for life and health, must be given up to procure it.

2. It should be abandoned because of the filthy nature of the habit. It is disgustingly offensive in good society. A christian should be possessed of cleanly habits, and set a good example in society. Chewing, smoking, and snuffing are violations of all rules of cleanliness. Not long ago we were informed that a professed minister of the gospel, while enjoying the hospitality of one of our christian families, made their parlor so disgustingly offensive that they were obliged after his departure to thoroughly cleanse the room before they could occupy it. Would Christ have done that? Should his disciples, or his ministers, be guilty of such things?—Voice of the West.

TESTIMONY IN FAVOR OF TEMPERANCE.

A late number of the Turf, Field, and Farm contains a letter from Edward P. Weston, the famous pedestrian, to Rev. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, from which we extract the following wholesome lesson:

"You ask for my 'experience as to the effect of alcoholic stimulants on those who aim at athletic achievements.' In reply, I am constrained to say that, so far as my judgment and experience are concerned, the use of intoxicating liquors on the occasion of the performance of any task requiring strength and nerve, is not only unnecessary, but wholly injurious. The moment a man partakes of such stimulants at such a time, he ceases to work upon his own strength of manhood, and is simply using a false power built upon a medicine (for liquor is good for nothing else.) It may help him for the moment, but the effect is of short duration, and then he is worse than before. It not only weakens his body, but his nerve, and takes away his will; and that is not all—it will take away his appetite for food. I know it is a custom prevalent among those who go into a regular course of instruction, or training (as it is called,) for a feat of pedestrianism, to give them crackers soaked in wine at stated intervals. To my mind, this is not only folly and a loss of time, but morally wrong. The man should always be in training (all that is necessary,) have his habits regular, and have a care of that which he eats and when he eats it. If he cannot walk fifty miles a day without taking wine, he certainly will not walk long if he makes that his practice.

"Diet is an important consideration in a walk that places a stronger tax than usual upon the physical system. And if a man desires to excel in feats requiring endurance and strength, he must pay strict attention to a diet based upon the primitive laws of health. What I recommend has been proved valuable by personal experience."

Too Much Bread.—Many dietetic reformers make a serious mistake when they leave off the use of meat. They think that "bread is the staff of life," and that they can not well eat too much of it. They should remember that "Man should not live by bread alone," and practice accordingly. I have known many a person to leave off eating meat and live almost exclusively on bread. The consequence was—their diet being too concentrated—that they took far too much nutriment into their stomachs, their systems became obstructed, and their health impaired thereby. A certain quantity of bread is good, but to live upon it exclusively is ruinous to the health. Less bread, and more fruit and vegetables, should be the rule for the above class of persons.—Hall's Journal of Health.

To Cure Sore Throat.—Take the whites of two eggs, and beat them with two spoonfuls of white sugar; grate in a little nutmeg, and add a pint of lukewarm water. Stir well and drink often. Repeat the prescription if necessary, and it will cure the most obstinate case of hoarseness in a short time.

HYMN.

"Abba, Father!"

My Father, on life's troubled tide,
Where storms arise on every side,
When darkly looms the threat'ning cloud,
And o'er my pathway throws its shroud;
I'll firmly breast the raging storm,
For thou my hiding place wilt form,
My Rock and Strength.

My Father, on life's dangerous way,
When clouds my sun at clear noon-day;
When thicken round earth's grief and care,
And joy and hope sink in despair;
I'll cling to thee, my trust and stay,
And seek thy sheltering arm alway,
My Sun and Shield.

My Father, when within my soul
Life's bitter waters darkly roll;
When sorrow's storms sweep o'er life's sea,
And angry waves drive on its lee;
I'll seize the helm of faith and prayer,
Where seas are calm and skies are fair,
Thou'lt lead my way.

My Father, when this cold, cold world
Its flag of hate shall have unfurled,
When friends shall coldly turn away,
And foes shall seek my soul to slay;
I'll fly to thee, though sad and lone,
And thou shalt call me all thine own,
My God, my all.

My Father, when, beyond life's tide,
Forever safe at thy dear side;
When I shall reach that happy place,
And there behold thee face to face;
I'll prove through all eternity
My heart's unceasing love for thee,
Oh, God of love!

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

DAVID ON THE SOUL OF MAN.

The notion of natural immortality in man could never, we think, with any rectitude of of reasoning, or by any sensible and consistent inference, be drawn from any passage in all the one hundred and fifty Psalms. We can at least approximate to a determination of this question by a careful examination. Suppose we try. Let us search honestly, patiently, and with a spirit of conscientious and scrupulous concern for truth, truth in its purity and beauty, for truth is both pure and beautiful. Let us not care for anything sacred in the antiquity of error, for error is not really sanctified by antiquity. No, never! Let us not care for the preciousness of old opinions, nothing for the currency or idolatry of tenets, contravened by the word of God. Truth is at stake, a glorious prize, truth older than error, and therefore more estimable in the precedence of an earlier origin and a greater age, truth, a mirror or a vocalization of God's thoughts, truth so incomparably purer than the most artful and plausible error, as to make the interspace an infinity between them, and the contrast as broad as the light and the night. The soul is the totality of man.

What is the soul? Comprehensively, himself. We have this definition substantiated perfectly, in the very first mention of a human soul in the sacred book of praise. Leaving out the italics, which are not in the Hebrew text, we have this, to wit: "Many say of my soul, No help for him in God." The identity of the soul and the man is clear and complete. Call this a soliloquy, a recitation, or a prayer, the fact is not affected; David and his soul are a unit, without division. And the good man in his grief exults, in an exclamation of faith,—he makes rejoinder to the wicked sarcasm, or the heartless contempt, in a testimony of confidence, "But thou, O Lord, art a shield for me." So plain is the perfect community of the terms soul and self. Thus we see David begins by giving not a solitary square inch of foundation for a notion of entity in man, capable of existence, as a disembodied consciousness. How much less as a disembodied immortality!

In the case next succeeding, in which we give simply the essential and sententious Scriptures, avoiding, for brevity's sake, the quotation of entire passages, we have a series of rehearsals in prayer to God, thus—"Have mercy on me,—heal me, for my bones are vexed, my soul is also sore vexed, deliver my soul and save me." This is superscribed, "David's complaint in his sickness." Accordingly he implores recovering mercy. He specifies one feature of physical suffering, that is, a vexatious and deep-seated pain, whether rheumatic, or febrile, or the simple ache incident to confinement to his bed. In in the three particularized items of myself, my soul, my bones, we have simply the representation of a suffering man, suffering in sickness, and liable to dissolution. The invalid supplicates a restoration. Does the suppliant plead for God's salvation to his soul, as something surviving death, an internal individuality alive after the body was dead, a consciousness acute and imperishable after the heart had closed its valves, and shelled its toil, and hushed its wonderful human hammer-strokes in death? Surely not, surely not, for he expressly protests in his appeal to God, that "in death there is no remembrance of thee, and in the grave who shall give thee thanks"?

This settles the question of any imagination of a vitality surviving the death of the body. The Psalmist held not the modern idea of a post-mortem intellection. Davidic, and all other Bible theology, knows nothing of an "intermediate state" of the dead, a consciousness intervening between death and the resurrection, or continuing intensified and exalted after death. The true "intermediate state" is a state of total un-intelligence, a void, a vacuum, a condition of suspended life. The innumerable millions in this mighty hades await the fiat of the "Resurrection and the Life," who because he died and rose from the dead, will, therefore, raise all the dead. The righteous only, through faith in the Son-ship and resurrection of Jesus, will live eternally.

Of the phrase "in death," surely no one would suppose the true intention to be in life and a good while before death, unless by the far-fetched suggestion of drunkenness, inebriation by opium, idiocy, or some similar absurdity. Or, if you please, is it just before death, nay, even in the article and act of dying? Clearly not, as to any uniformity of fact by daily observation; for we see frequently manifest the most vivid and vigorous memory of God in the hour of death. In tubercular phthisis, or consumption, there is generally a retention of perception and memory to the last. A man dying unready and unreconciled to God, has often revived to his recollection forgotten sins, and thoughts of God, a Creator and Judge, are active and dominating. Witness the death bed of Randolph or Altamont. The saint's remembrance of God at the approach of death, is often most animated and blessed. And here we understand the sentiment precisely according to the passage, that the utterly impossible "remembrance of God" is not in dying, but "in death." A dead man can remember nothing. The function of memory is impossible with the delicate cerebrum dissolving to dust. What can that man think, whose brow is foul with the mould with which the foe has sullied the mirror of the mind? And in the grave there is no thanksgiving. The dead man cannot sing or pray. And the whole of the man is infallibly there, for interrogatively so the Scriptures alleges.

THE SOUL IS DIVISIBLE AND DISRUPTIBLE.

This is the manifest doctrine of David in Psalm seven. Read his intercession with the Almighty for rescue from a persecutor, "Crush the Benjamite." The dreaded peril was pleaded in prayer; "Lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is none to deliver." His divisibility by violence is adverse to the notion of immateriality, which is supposed to defy philosophical dissection, to defy comminution or trituration, and to evade every material agent or injury. Surely here is an entity composite not uncompounded, in short, an obvious materiality susceptible of reduction to something like elementary combinations. Had the Psalmist cherished such a faith as dominates in our day, surely he would not have been agitated by such avowed apprehensions of calamity to his soul; for disembodied, independent, immortal, it could easily elude an adversary so infatuated as to meditate the absurd purpose of invoking material force. The fact is, simply, that the allusion is to a threatened danger to his life, an onslaught on himself, the literal, visible, palpable David.

The soul is an individuality, and its existence dependent on the function of vital organs. The heart, the lungs, the brain, all the internal viscera, with the sanguineous and nervous systems, these constitute vitally the man. The soul may be either the man so composed, an organic and a functional being, or it may be the assemblage of organs on whose harmonious working, the being of the man depends, or it may be the life manifested in the wonderful mechanism and motion of that intricate machinery enclosed with walls, and protected by integuments.

It is the easiest thing in the world to understand the Scripture quoted, when we contemplate the structure of this organic man. Do we seek to conceive a figurative intangiblity subject to the rending rage of the lion? The king of beasts would grope, methinks, with an aspect baffled and perplexed, in the bootless labor to seize a prey so perfectly and perpetually figurative. What a look of mystified and wondering ill-nature you should behold in his dilated eyes, darting forth flashes of fury! O, if he could only find something to tear, what havoc he would make among the fibers and tissues of the victim!

But there he stands, nonplussed and foiled amid the mysteries of immortality he can neither master nor mangle. Affecting spectacle of purpose defeated, endeavor abortive, and mighty power unavailing, for want of an object on which to concentrate the tremendous energies of an attack! But when we consider the delicate structure of those organs wherein the life and being and manhood of man inheres; when we regard the pulsations, the contractions, the tremulous vibrations, which guaranty and constitute life; oh, then we are impressed with the value of God's providential goodness and care in averting the enemy's arm, or shielding the precious fabric and preserving the costly vital organism from violence.

But suppose a soul, as something disembodied or immortal, were actually rent in pieces. Conceive the deed of cruelty achieved, if possible. Marshal the imagination to compass the conclusion, and what then? As in the case of certain neophytes to whom the dissecting knife is applied, does each particular fragment and atom become a new individual? And if so, in which one of them all is the original found? This would not be a calamity without wonderful compensations, if, by the lion's aid, the sufferer were invested with a quantity of sudden and singular multiplications, so that a great multitude of new beings should start into life, while the parent life was preserved, practically unharmed. Immortalities begotten of violence! Malice and wrath overruled to produce immeasurable good from a momentary evil! Masterly benefaction—but I forbear.

Or again, is each fragment still intelligent, and is the individuality, that was so roughly and dreadfully handled, continuing in every part? Does the soul become legion, and the individual himself become a thousand selves repeated? And are these souls harmonious though disjoined? Is there no frightful chasm and immortal agony in the disjunction? Can the parts be reunited, or would they wish to be reunited, or may they coalesce spontaneously? Alas! alas! the mind labors and revolts from the dismal contemplation. One shudders and shrinks from such a philosophic and speculative chaos. It is horrible meandering amid desolations. And one is glad and thankful to come back to God, and the Bible, and common sense. The Lord please to forgive me for saying anything to suggest sadness in this momentary experiment of supposition. Wandering away from the word of God, we find chasms, crags, lava fields, sandbanks, and caverns of blackness.

When a human soul is rent in pieces, there is not a spark, nor a speck, nor a breath of life in it. It is dead. If it is immaterial, it cannot be rent; if it is immortal, it cannot die. But souls die that sin, for death is the penalty of sin. God exclaims to the sinner, "Consider, lest I tear you in pieces." The sinner and his soul being an essential unit, never will live an instant after the judicial lightning has torn him. Life lost will be a sad and awful fate; but as the beholder stretches his gaze over the mighty field of death, from his very heart he will utter the interrogation, "After all, what else could have been done?" SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER ONE.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

What important words. How full of meaning. In these words a volume of truth is contained as regards the final destiny of the wicked. Many reasons will be given by which we know that the wicked dead will live again, and then be destroyed, "soul and body in hell," or in gehenna fire. But

1. A Bible rule of nine words is here given, by which we are to harmonize the entire Scriptures.

For what purpose was the Son of God manifested? Answer,—"That he might destroy the works of the devil." These nine words constitute the rule by which the whole Bible is to be harmonized. Therefore, we are only to study the Scriptures with a view to make the proper distinction between what are ascribed to God as his works, and those ascribed to the Devil as his works; with the understanding that the Lord's works are to be preserved, or restored, and the Devil's works destroyed, and we have the rule which will easily harmonize the entire Bible. Let us remember that the Devil did not make the earth, but through his means a "curse" was brought upon it (Gen. 3: 17, 18), neither did he make the other things which the Lord pronounced "very good." But he was the author of the "curse" that was brought upon them. Therefore, we are to look for the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 21. This "restitution" will be brought about also by the "Son of God," who will finally "destroy the works of the Devil."

2. Two families: the children of God, and the children of the Devil.

The Scriptures clearly point out two classes of men—the children of God and the children of the Devil. In 1 John 3: 8, 10, this fact is thus plainly stated:—"He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. . . . In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." Again in Matt. 13: 38, 39:—"But the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil." Also in John 8: 44, 45, the devil's children are most graphically described by Christ in the following language:—"Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it. And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not."

Let us ever remember that "the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil"; and this surely will embrace all of his "children." But if the wicked dead—the devil's children—are already destroyed in hades, how can the Son of God ever destroy them? At Christ's first advent into this world, he "abolished death" for himself, and prepared the way by which others might gain victory over death. And after he comes the "second time," he will destroy all the works of Satan. Why are the family of Satan to be destroyed? Because "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. Death, then, is the wages, or recompense, of the "children" of the "wicked one." And if so, then they must die for their sins, for their own sins. In this world the wicked do not die for their sins, as the death they now die is no more a penalty for their own sins, than it is a penalty for the sins of the righteous, or for infants, who have never sinned, because they all die alike. If, therefore, we follow the rule above stated, "that the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil"; then the death which the sinner dies here, in common with the saints, cannot be that death which awaits him as the wages for his own sins; because the Son of God is not the author of the death which is common to our race here; but Satan is the one who has brought sin into the world, and "death by sin." Thanks be to God, that "in due time Christ died for the ungodly." O the wonderful love and mercy of God. For he "commendeth his love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Now, if we become "justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Rom. 5: 6–10.

For the World's Crisis.

SHORT SERMON.

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Cor. 15: 26.

The destruction of death is here anticipated. It is that death which is an enemy. All must meet it, whether saint or sinner, whether child or adult. "In Adam all die." "It is appointed unto man once to die." "Death passed upon all men." To Adam the Lord said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." That event comes upon us, not for our actual sins, but it may properly be said to be an enemy. Christ has conquered that foe; and he must give up all his captives. Jesus has purchased the whole race from the Adamic death, hence all are under law to him; and he is the Judge of all men. Christ "shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing." "Before him shall be gathered all nations." God "commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

If we are not redeemed from the penalty of the Adamic law, which was death, we can not be probationers for endless life. That all men are now in a state of probation I trust none will deny. That man should be a candidate for immortality, and yet be held by the broken law, or the penalty of its transgression, seems to be inconsistent.

Paul said that Christ "hath abolished death," and we read in Heb. 2: 14 that he took flesh and blood, that "through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil"; and in 1 John 3: 8, "the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the Devil." Death came by sin, sin came by Satan. Death and the grave shall deliver up the dead which are in them. "For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves [not a moral grave, but a literal grave] shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." "By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men to justification of life."

The "second death" is not to be "swallowed up in victory," nor "abolished" and "destroyed." Satan never had the power of it. It is the retribution of divine justice upon those whose names shall not be found in the "Lamb's book of life." It shall hold them in eternal captivity. But those who shall have the second death for their part, must be given up by the first death, which they have died for sins not their own.

Dear Savior, grant that we may have our names in the "book of life," that when that death, which came by sin which Adam committed, shall be swallowed up in victory gained by thy most precious death, we may with all who have died in the innocence of childhood, and all who shall be cleansed from sin by the precious blood of Christ, receive immortality, the fruit of which shall be eternal life.

"TO STAND UP."

THE MEANING OF THE EXPRESSION, ETC.

This phrase is somewhat peculiar, and must be a very obscure one to a person who is not conversant with its use as found in the prophetic scriptures. It is peculiar, since it nowhere occurs in the sacred writings except in the book of Daniel; and also since its relations to its agents are of that nature that it produces joy and heavenly emotion in the minds of all who are anticipating future beatitude and glory beyond this scene of human conflict and death; especially when they contemplate the august scenes of Dan. 12: 1, where the phrase is found.

The prophetic definition and application of this phrase are easily understood when we examine the prophecy where it occurs. This phrase is first found in Dan. 11: 2. "There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all." These kings brought to view, which were to stand up in Persia, are the following:—(1), Cambyses; (2), Smerdis; (3), Darius; (4), Xerxes the Great.

It must be obvious to all that the phrase, "stand up," in the passage above, must mean to reign on the throne of Persia; for these four Persian kings did reign in succession, and they must be the ones here delineated in this prophecy.

In verse 3d of this eleventh chapter we read: "A mighty king shall stand up that shall rule with great dominion." This mighty king undoubtedly was Alexander the Great. Here the expression, to "stand up," is used concerning this mighty king in a very clear and unmistakable manner, setting forth the fact that it is to rule with kingly authority. In the above text it is not only affirmed that a king shall "stand up," but that he shall "rule with great dominion."

Again, this same phrase occurs in the 20th verse of this chapter, and reference is had by the prophet to Cæsar Augustus, who made a decree that all the world should be taxed. It is generally conceded that Cæsar Augustus is the one of whom the prophet speaks; and if so, to "stand up" must be the same here as in the preceding cases.

Again, in the 21st verse, the same expression is found, and is used in reference to a "vile person"—Augustus Cæsar's successor—Tiberius.

If, in all these instances, "stand up" means to sway the sceptre and reign as king, it must be very obvious that the same idea is taught in Dan. 12: 1, where it is affirmed that Michael shall stand up. It would be very unreasonable indeed to suppose that a different idea than to reign is taught in Dan. 12: 1, in the words, to "stand up," when in every instance in the eleventh chapter that is the meaning.

But an inquiry here comes up, Who is Michael that is to reign, the consequences of whose standing up will be a time of trouble, "such as never was since there was a nation," and the deliverance of Daniel's people, "every one that shall be found written in the book"? He cannot be an angel, since in the Scriptures there cannot be found a declaration that angels will ever reign as kings. Angels have their appointed sphere of service; but, exalted and perfect as their service is, the honor of being kings and reigning on thrones is not delegated to them, whatever their rank may be. Observe, that this text does not assert that an angel of God, or Christ's angel, shall reign, or stand up; but Michael—one like God.

Angels might comfort the weeping woman at the empty sepulchre, by the announcement that the Lord was risen; and so might an angel tell Cornelius to send to Joppa for one who would tell him words whereby he and all his house should be saved; but angels never have reigned as kings, neither will they ever; for that is not in the economy and purpose of God. A. H. Sibley.

"IT IS WELL."

Beloved, it is well:
God's ways are always right;
And love is o'er them all,
Though far above our sight.

Beloved, it is well:
Though deep and sore the smart;
He wounds, who knows and cares
To heal the broken heart.

Beloved, it is well:
Though grief benights our way,
'T will make the joy more dear
That comes with dawning day.

Beloved, it is well:
The path that Jesus trod,
Though rough and dark it be,
Leads home to heav'n and God.

For the World's Crisis.

THE FIGURATIVE USE OF THE WORD BAPTIZE.

"I indeed have baptized you with water; but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost."—Mark 1: 8.

The word baptize is here used both literally and figuratively. The figure used is that of the metaphor, which the grammar thus defines: "A metaphor is a figure which expresses the resemblance between two objects by applying either the name, or some attribute, adjunct, or action, of the one directly to the other." Baptize is a Greek word Anglicised by changing the final letter o for e. It is thus defined in Donnegan's Greek and English Lexicon:—"Baptizo, to immerse, submerge, saturate; hence to drench with wine; met., to confound totally; to dip in a vessel and draw"; from "Bapto, to dip; to plunge into water; wash; dye; . . . draw out water; temper metals by immersion; . . . neut. to dip one's self."

Baptize, therefore, literally signifies to plunge into water, with the accessory idea of washing by the natural cleansing effect of water. This, as a religious ceremony, prefigures another washing, speaking figuratively, even "the washing of regeneration," which no one will pretend is to be taken literally. The operation of the Spirit of God on the spiritual nature of man, cleanses from the defilement of sin, and so is compared to the washing by water. This is what is otherwise called—"baptized with the Holy Spirit."

But let no one unwisely infer from this that the baptism of the Spirit is a trivial affair. It is a blessed and holy reality, figuratively expressed by the word baptize, and differing from this just as much as water differs from the spirit. The complete drench of water baptism prefigures the necessity of a complete drench of the Spirit, to wash away the defilement of sin.

Literally speaking, then, there is no such thing as spirit baptism; when, figuratively speaking, there is. If this were not so, then Paul could not have said there is "one baptism"; for that and water baptism would make two instead of "one baptism." This may be called a nice distinction, but truth requires the distinction to be made for obvious reasons, lest any infer that the baptism of the Spirit is the only baptism required.

All well-informed persons know that baptism signifies to plunge into water, unless taken metaphorically. But a certain Congregationalist minister, "with all his piety and erudition, practised sprinkling for baptism, and did not believe that baptism necessarily and always means to plunge, to dip," etc. Well, there are a great many such now, who believe that a dead man is more alive when dead, than he was before he died. Such are mis-informed, instead of being well informed in regard to the nature of death. Their honesty we will not question, but we cannot regard them as well informed on these points; because their sectarian education leads them to discard correct information for that which is not good.

To be well informed in regard to the meaning of certain words, does not imply that such are learned, or that persons are dishonest who are learned and adopt a meaning for the word baptism which is contrary to its natural signification. The well-known meaning of a word is one thing, and the adoption of some of its metaphorical senses, in any given case, is quite another. Honest men may be deceived in regard to its meaning, although they may have great learning; especially where they have sectarian axes to grind. But unlearned persons, reading the account of the baptism of the eunuch by Philip, would never once suspect that any other than immersion is there taught. "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing." Acts 8: 38, 39.

It takes a man well versed in sectarian lore to make baptism, in the above quotation, to mean anything else but a complete immersion. If sprinkling is meant, what necessity was there for their both going down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch?

But, says the man of erudition, "Eis means unto, as well as into; they went down unto the water."

But where was the necessity for both going down unto the water? Could not Philip have gone down to the water, and taken up a handful, and sprinkled him, if sprinkling alone was meant? And how would both come up out of the water, if they did not both go down into it?

"O, the Greek word ex sometimes means from, as well as out of; they came up from the water."

Ah, indeed! But why is the account so careful as to state these unimportant particulars, which would be so if sprinkling alone was meant? Besides, the primary signification of ex is out of, out from; and there is another Greek word which more literally signifies from; i. e., apo; and why was not this employed instead, if it meant from? If the eunuch was literally baptized, it would be necessary for both to go down into the water, and come up out of the water, but not necessary on the other supposition. And a person who can argue in favor of sprinkling, against the apparent meaning of this, must be honest not to be ashamed to be found thus begging the question. For to assume that baptize means something totally different from its natural signification, in this case, and then that all the other circumstances, which go to prove the baptism to have been what it naturally means, might mean something else, is begging the question, because it is reasoning from an assumed premise which has no proof in its support.

Does baptism get us into Christ? An emphatic no is not a sufficient answer to any question; for it savors too much of egotism, as though one's own ipse dixit was sufficient to settle the question. If by baptism one is led to put on Christ, baptism in this case gets him into Christ; that is, it assists such in putting on Christ. But if one is in Christ before baptism, it does not get him into him; for the reason that he was in him before that. But as many as have put on Christ by being baptized into him, who can say that such have not thereby put on Christ?

In the apostolic days, baptism was the initiation ceremony of getting persons into Christ; for it was the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, and so began at the very foundation of christianity; which is repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Persons thus baptized into Christ are said to have put on Christ.

BIBLE TESTIMONIES OF THE SAINTS' INHERITANCE.

Did the Savior commission his disciples, after his resurrection, to preach? "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned."—Mark 16: 15, 16. What does the Savior say in Matt. 8: 11? "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven"; coming from the various parts of the earth, as the result of the preaching of the gospel in all the world. What will be the saints' new song in the judgment day? "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and has made us unto our God kings and priests."—Rev. 5: 9–10.

Where shall they reign? "And we shall reign on the earth."—v. 10. When will they reign on the earth? Let David answer: "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it."—Ps. 37: 34.

What does Solomon say? "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—Prov. 2: 21–22. Is the following poetry, endorsed by so many persons, in harmony with the Bible:—

"Together let us sweetly live,
Together let us die;
And we a starry crown receive,
And reign above the sky."

Let Daniel answer: "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." For how long? "Whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."—Dan. 7: 27.

Are good people to go where the poet says,

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,"

to receive their reward? Let Solomon answer: "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth."—Prov. 11: 31. Where does David say good people are going to live? "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."—Ps. 37: 3. "For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, shall inherit the earth. . . . But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Ps. 37: 9, 11. "For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. . . . The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever."—Ps. 37: 22, 29.

Where does Jesus say the inheritance of the saints shall be? "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5: 5. This accords with the language of David, where he says, "The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Do the meek at present delight themselves in the abundance of peace? Let Paul answer: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."—1 Cor. 15: 19.

What did the Savior command his disciples to pray? "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."—Matt. 6: 10. Is the will of the Lord done at present in the earth, or will it be prior to the judgment? Let Paul answer: "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3: 13.

When Jesus comes, will he find the world in a state of universal tranquility? "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged; and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."—Rev. 11: 18. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." John 17: 17. T. J. Whitecar.

DR. HOLLAND ON SPURGEON.

Timothy Titcomb (Dr. J. G. Holland) is traveling in Europe, and writing of what he sees and hears to the Springfield Republican, on the editorial staff of which he has so long labored. One of his letters, a few weeks ago, contained his impressions of three of the shining lights of dissent—Spurgeon, Hall, and Cummings. We have space for but a portion:

"The rush to Mr. Spurgeon's church is so great, that I took an early start, on a bright Sunday morning, in order to be served among the first strangers, if possible. On alighting at the door of the church, instead of being obliged to wait, I was met by some officer of the place and day, who inquired whether I would like to go directly into the church and wait my chance there. Responding in the affirmative to his polite proposition, he led the way, at the same time putting into my hand a slip of paper which he begged me to read. It was a request for a contribution to Mr. Spurgeon's institution for the education of clergymen. It was a very neat business transaction, one for which the practical and business-like Mr. Spurgeon is justly celebrated. It was as much as to say: 'I have taken you out of the sun and given you a good chance for a good seat; now, if this amounts to anything to you, state the sum in silver or gold in the contribution-box.' I stated it, and took a seat in a sort of elevated waiting-stand near the entrance. The officer told a gentleman that some 'American friends' would like seats; and we—myself and party—were soon invited forward, and seated in some of the best pews in the house.

Mr. Spurgeon's church is a very large and well-contrived house, capable of holding a larger congregation, I judge, than that of Mr. Beecher, in Brooklyn. Indeed, it is claimed that it affords comfortable sittings to five thousand persons. There were not more than five hundred people in the church when I entered, but they came pouring in from that time forward, until every part of the building was crowded. The interior is oval, the platform pulpit standing out from one extremity, and permitting the seats to sweep entirely around, an arrangement which gives a pretty good sized audience only the chance of seeing the back side of the preacher's head. The personal appearances of the great preacher has become so familiar to Americans, through engravings and the descriptions of letter-writers, that I need not say more than that he impressed me, as he stepped quietly upon the stand, as a hearty, healthy, and powerful man. After giving out a hymn, and begging the congregation not to sing it too slowly, he joined with them in the music. Then he read a telegram he had just received from some distant part of the kingdom, from a man who was dying, and who found himself, in the dark hour, unsustained by the christian's hope. His prayer for this stranger was one of the most touching things I ever heard. Indeed, the whole prayer, of which this formed an episode, was marked with great fervor, thorough spirituality, and a flow and command of language which much surpassed my expectations.

When he finished his preaching, I was not left at a loss to understand the secret of his power. He is a good man, a strong man, thoroughly in earnest. There were passages in his sermon, not a few, which reminded me of Beecher. The same directness, the same bursts of grand and sweeping power, the same felicities of diction which distinguish the performances of the American preacher, were scattered through the sermon. Mr. Spurgeon's vocabulary is not so large as that of Mr. Beecher. He is not so completely en rapport with the world of nature, and his fancy and imagination are not so active; but he is dramatic, understands human nature, believes in Christianity (a good thing in a preacher), knows exactly what he wants to do, and drives straight forward to the end he seeks. I do not know that Mr. Spurgeon is Mr. Beecher's superior in anything, except it may be as a business man. His faculty of organization, of so setting other people at work as to multiply his own personal power a thousand-fold, must distinguish him, in the results of his life, from Mr. Beecher. Mr. Spurgeon is doing by organization and institution, what Mr. Beecher does by personal magnetism. Mr. Beecher inspires other clergymen; Mr. Spurgeon educates them, and so builds and shapes the policy of institutions, that he will be producing preachers after his own kind, long after he has passed away. The spirit of the man is kindly. His manner toward his people is familiar and fatherly. Like the Brooklyn preacher, too, he is not without his dash of humor. In short, I left his presence, at last, with a good taste in my mouth, and the firmest wish in my heart, that the Lord would send into the world and set to work ten thousand just such sensational fanatics as Mr. Spurgeon."

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 13, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are happy to say that we have entered on our subscription list within the past two weeks ONE HUNDRED AND SEVEN NEW NAMES. Many thanks to the friends that have sent them in. Who will make a special effort to get new subscribers, so that we may double that number in two weeks to come? If our brethren and sisters would lend a helping hand to this work as they might, our list would soon reach ten thousand names. Shall we have them?

SHORT OF PAPERS.—Last week, from some unknown cause, we were short of papers, so that we could not send Jan. 6th to any new subscribers. We are sorry to disappoint any, but will try to avoid a repetition of the same.

WESTERN VISIT.

Thursday morning, Dec. 31st, we left Boston for Chicago, via Castleton, Vt. At the latter place, we had a very pleasant visit with Bro. and Sister Mathewson, whom we found rejoicing in the Lord, in the midst of a living church. The meetings in C. are excellent, and new ones are seeking the Lord. Bro. M. has much to encourage his heart, when he looks at the fruits of his labors. We had a good meeting in the evening to close up the year 1868. We enjoyed our visit there very much. We always find it a resting-place at Bro. M.'s. We also had a sweet visit at Bro. C. S. Sherman's, where we spent the last night of the year. We found him and his dear companion pressing for the christian's prize in the coming kingdom.

We arose at an early hour, and made new consecration to the Lord, asking him to use us for his glory, just as seemeth good in his sight. With cheerful heart and a bright hope, we took our departure for Chicago, where we arrived Sabbath morning, being delayed some seven hours in consequence of a severe snowstorm. The Lord gave us sweet peace while on our journey.

We spent a few hours in Rochester, waiting for the cars, and took occasion to call on some of the dear saints. We heard cheering news about their meetings. They are increasingly interesting. Bro. S. W. Thurber is to be with them for a few weeks, while Bro. Pratt is at his home in Springfield. At 9.40 A. M., Jan. 2nd, we departed in good cheer.

While crossing the Suspension Bridge, we passed in view of the great Niagara, with its perpetually roaring torrent, plunging, heaving, dashing, like the tempest-tossed ocean upon the rocky beach, and then in angry foam hurrying away to rest in the bosom of the distant lake. When viewing the mighty cataract, it makes the boasted strength of man look very insignificant. How much he needs the protecting arm of Him who made the earth and sea, sun, moon, and stars. When the Lord is our shield, we have nothing to fear.

After spending the most of two days and nights on the cars, we arrived in the great city of the West without feeling weary or tired; but felt the need of sleep. We went directly to the Christian Chapel, and found our faithful Bro. Ramsey at his post, just ready to commence his sermon. We had a hearty and joyful greeting. How pleasant it is to be loved by those who love Jesus. There is no natural love for relatives that is so strong and pure as that we feel for the saints of the Most High.

After the sermon, we listened to many hearty and stirring testimonies from the friends of Jesus. It was a heavenly place. There was the best of evidence that the church was in a prosperous condition. At the close of the meeting we had a joyful greeting with the dear children of the Lord, which paid us well for our long ride. We thought if our fellowship on earth was so sweet, it must be paradise indeed when we get into the kingdom, where there will be none but the lovers of Jesus.

The prospect here is good. Two rose for prayers in the evening. We hope to see many more start in the service of the blessed Master. We purpose to remain here some three weeks.

We have arranged to have a discussion with Mr. J. S. Sweeney, a noted Campbellite preacher, and a distinguished debater. He is the one with whom we expected to have had a discussion in Dubuque, Iowa, last June. He is now preaching in Chicago. We are to discuss the following propositions:

1. "There is in man a conscious entity, sometimes called a spirit, that remains conscious after his death."

2. "The punishment of the wicked will consist in the eternal extinction of their conscious being."

We have not yet completed all the arrangements for the debate. It is proposed to publish a verbatim report of the discussion. We expect a season of much interest.

We also purpose to commence a discussion in Dansville, N. Y., Jan. 26th, to continue five evenings. Our opponent will be Mr. E. V. Wilson, a noted Spiritualist. Pray for us, that we may be successful in the defense of the word of truth as revealed in the Holy Scriptures, and thus glorify our coming King.

SPIRITUALISM IN CHICAGO.

Spiritualism has a strong hold of the people in Chicago, and is becoming very defiant. On our arrival there, Jan. 3d, we found the following in the Evening Journal of Dec. 30th.

"REV. MR. SWEENEY AND THE SPIRITUALISTS.—To the Editor of the Chicago Evening Journal:—Permit me to inform your readers that Prof. Toohey, one of our most profound thinkers, will review the Rev. J. S. Sweeney's sermon on Spiritualism, in Crosby's Music Hall, on Saturday evening. The professor invites the reverend gentleman to be present, that he may have the right of explanation at the close of the lecture, if he deems it necessary. I am also authorized to say that Professor Toohey will debate the subject of Spiritualism with the reverend gentleman, or any other respectable and responsible member of the church, Catholic or Protestant. Miss De Evere will not speak on Friday, as announced, but will hold a public seance on Sunday morning, and lecture in the evening on 'the true law of marriage.' She will also be controlled by one of Rev. J. S. Sweeney's 'Demons,' and give a poem on 'Demonology.'

Rejoicing in the prospect of this great problem of the ages being at last solved, and that Chicago is likely to make itself immortal by settling this excited controversy, I remain yours for the truth, J. SPETTIGUE, Pres."

In the Journal of Jan. 4th, 1869, appeared the following:—

"DISCUSSION OF SPIRITUALISM.—To the Editor of the Chicago Evening Journal:—Last evening I was shown a note in Thursday's Journal, in which it is stated that Professor Toohey 'will debate the subject of Spiritualism with any respectable and responsible member of the church, Catholic or Protestant.' Thinking that I might be included in the number specified, I accept the invitation, and would propose for discussion the following: 'Resolved, That the phenomena of Spiritualism proceed from demons, and not from departed human spirits.' MILES GRANT.

P. S.—I will be ready to begin the discussion as soon as the necessary preliminaries can be arranged."

After the following appeared in the Journal, we had an interview with Professor Toohey, at the office of the "Religio-Philosophical Journal," for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements; when we found him quite unwilling to discuss with the writer; saying he did not know that he was in the city, and that he did not think of him in the challenge. We replied, that we claimed a place among the Protestants, and hoped he would consent to abide by the plain language of the challenge. As he saw no honorable way of escape, he finally consented to discuss the proposed resolution, provided a suitable place could be secured; remarking that he must leave that part to the decision of Mr. Spettigue. We arranged to meet Mr. S. the next day at Dr. Greer's rooms. They had a previous meeting the night before; and when we met at the Dr.'s, we found Mr. S. unwilling to make any arrangements for us to meet Prof. T., because we were not considered orthodox. He wished to have the Prof. discuss with some orthodox minister. After much urging he finally consented to give us a chance, provided he could not find an orthodox man to do it. Thus the matter now stands. We think it quite doubtful whether we shall have the privilege of debating with the Professor. He is a man of fine ability, and well known as a prominent speaker at the conventions of Spiritualists.

WAKING UP.

Many are waking up to the sad state of things in the popular churches of the day. It is a fact, not to be denied, that such churches have nearly lost their influence over the common people, excepting to confirm them in their sins. There is so much extravagance, worldly-mindedness, covetousness, and fashion, that careful observers are satisfied that all the real christianity there is about it, is merely the profession. The result is, infidels are multiplying all around us to an alarming extent. It is a serious question, What shall be done to stay the awful tide? Unless there is a reform soon, it would seem like a hopeless case. Let those who see the sad state of things speak out boldly, but at the same time with kindness. Satan would be glad to have the children of the Lord speak harshly and with bitterness, so as to drive away those whom we would reform and bring back to Christ. He would prefer that we should keep still, and say nothing about these things till it is too late; but if we will not do that, then he will do his best to get us to speak in such an unkind manner as to prejudice the people against us, and thus destroy our influence. Let us be wise, and keep out of the traps of the Deceiver.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

A new interest is being awakened in the Eastern question, that promises to produce important results. The interests of France, England, Russia, Turkey and Greece are deeply involved in this matter. One is jealous of the other, and they must soon come to some issue of great importance in the political affairs of Europe and Asia. We shall wait with much interest for further developments. The following from the New York Times, Dec. 31st, sets forth the present aspect of things relative to the Eastern question:—

"The news from the east of Europe is still far from reassuring. We fail to discover in the numerous and conflicting reports that reach us any intimation that a pacific settlement is at hand. It is true that the present crisis has been so suddenly brought about by the precipitate action of Turkey, and the unexpected firmness of the Hellenic government, that there has scarcely yet been time for the influence of the great powers on behalf of peace to have been fully brought to bear on the two governments whose hostile attitudes may at any moment result in a European crisis. European diplomacy works slowly, the English foreign office still ignores the telegraph, and while a Queen's messenger is journeying leisurely from London to Constantinople, or Athens, or while communications by mail are being exchanged between London and Paris, a few random shots on the Turko-Greek frontier may at once place matters beyond its reach.

It is evident that, notwithstanding the gloomy forebodings of Lord Stanley with regard to the eastern question six weeks ago, the Turkish ultimatum fell like a thunderbolt in Europe. Nobody anticipated any such step. It was thought that the great eastern question, so to speak, was comfortably asleep, and that whatever might happen in the west, nothing in the east was likely to shake seriously the settlement made by the Paris Treaty of 1856. But whether there have been underhand diplomatic forces at work, instigating either of the principals in the quarrel, or whether the governments at Constantinople and Athens are alone responsible for recent events, there is no doubt but that the whole question has been forced upon the consideration of Europe in a form which must command instant attention from every Power, however remotely interested.

The conference may be held, but as long as either Turkey or Greece refuses to submit to its arbitraments, little good can be anticipated from it, while even if both of those powers were to pledge themselves to absolute compliance with its decrees, there is almost as much to be dreaded from its assembling as there is to be hoped for. There are no two powers in Europe whose interests in the East can be said to be identical except France and England, and there are signs already that the solidarity of opinion and interest which united the two in the Crimean war has ceased to exist. England would probably fight, in the last resort, if the existence of Turkey as a nation were seriously menaced. It is very doubtful if she would willingly risk the chance of war, even with France as an ally, on behalf of such comparatively minor questions as the independence of Crete, and yet no one can tell how far Russia is prepared to push her designs of aggression at the present moment, while France has probably even more to fear from Russian aggrandizement than England.

France is prepared to go to war at any moment, and nothing but immediate danger to her control of the Egyptian route to the east would induce England to enter into the arena. It is the interest, at present, of all the great Powers to preserve peace, and yet it is impossible to feel any confidence as to the result. All that can be hoped is, that the actual outbreak of hostilities may be averted, and that before the danger of such an event occurs, a better understanding may prevail among the powers which are interested, or which conceive themselves to be interested, in this long-standing quarrel between the christian and the Turk in Eastern Europe.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

A large proportion of mankind are seeking after happiness, and but very few are successful, for the reason that they take the wrong road to find it. Whoever pursues happiness will always find it a little beyond his reach. Many think wealth will secure it; others seek it in literary attainments; some in one way, some in another; but the only certain way is to stop seeking after it, throw aside selfishness, go to work in the vineyard of the Lord, for the good of others, and happiness is a sure result. It comes as a consequence of doing our duty. The Lord blesses all such, and none can be truly happy without the gift of the Holy Spirit; and none can have that abiding in them, who will not consent to obey the Lord.

CHLOE LANKTON'S SELECTIONS.

Many of our readers are interested in the welfare of Chloe Lankton of New Hartford, Ct., who has lain on a bed of suffering some forty years, but no murmur escapes her lips. The following are some selections sent for our paper:—

JOYFUL CERTAINTY.—"Give us always such a certainty of eternal life, that we may be always joyful."

So prayed a friend at morning blessing, and the words have been like manna to me all day. A certainty of eternal life—what is it? A certainty that I have a home in heaven, that I have there a Father, a Father's house, a Father's love. Sure that Jesus is my elder brother, and that saints and angels are my kinsmen. Sure that my name is written in the Lamb's book of life, that Jesus' precious blood has blotted out my sins, so that they will be remembered no more. Sure that I shall one day dwell in that home where is no sin, no sorrow, no death. Sure that I shall reign with Christ through endless ages.

Oh, it should make me joyful at all times to have a certainty of all this. How can the little daily cares vex one on his homeward journey, who is sure he is almost there? Sure that all things are working for his good, and making him more fitted to dwell there?

But may we have this certainty? Paul had it; he said, "I know in whom I have believed." Job knew that after death he should see God. David was sure that the Lord was his Shepherd, and would be with him in the dark valley and shadow of death. Saints and martyrs of all ages have had this certainty of eternal life—joyfully looking forward to a better country—even a heavenly. And why not? Are we not sure that Christ died for us? That he loves us? And can we not also be sure that we love and trust him? He asked Peter, "Lovest thou me?" And surely he was pleased with Peter's earnest answer, "Thou knowest that I love thee." Why, then, do we not all seek for that certainty of eternal life which shall make us ever joyful?

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.—In the husbandry of the farm, the drill and not the plough gives the crop. If the land were left as the plough leaves it, there would be no crop but of thistles and weeds. The plough destroys every living thing, tearing up all, root and branch, and bringing all under ground; while the drill plants the seed, and, under the blessing of God, ensures a golden harvest and a full garner. The farmer might plough his ground ten times over, and yet never have a harvest, if that were all he should do. Nevertheless there is no antagonism between the plough and the drill. It takes both to make the land yield to the diligent hand its reward. In the husbandry of the kingdom, the law is the plough, and the gospel is the drill; and the deeper the plough is put in, the better the crop, provided always that the drill follows in due time, casting in seed in abundance.

The Countess of Huntington was once speaking to a workman who was repairing a garden-wall, and pressing upon his care the welfare of his soul. Some time after she spoke to another workman:

"Thomas, I fear you never pray, nor look to Christ for salvation."

"Your ladyship is mistaken," said the man; and on asking him what first led him to turn to Christ, he said, "I heard what passed between you and James, at such a time, and the word you designed for him took hold of me."

"How did you hear it?"

"I heard it on the other side of the garden, through a hole in the wall, and I never shall forget the impression I received."

Thus does the Spirit illustrate his own word. (Eccl. 11: 1–6.)

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

DANGEROUS WORK.

There are many positions of labor, and many posts of duty, which are apparently dangerous to the good name and healthful influence of the faithful, energetic servants of the Lord. Envy and jealousy will make an attack sooner or later on the side which is supposed by satanic and human weakness to be unfortified, where malice will do its worst. Perhaps no position of duty is as dangerous to fill as the offices of treasurer and disburser of the free-will offerings of the people in the various departments of the cause of Christ. The one who has the heart to yearn over the lost sinner, and act for the spread of the gospel by preaching, by tracts, by missions; or over the poverty, ignorance and degradation of a class of society, and acts to give what they have, and to beg of others, to benefit and raise them up to a better state of humanity, and to the blessings of christianity, often finds himself or herself occupying such a position without seeking or even thinking of it. Such become the mediums of the gifts or charities of the friends of the same cause, by common consent; and with a liberal heart and willing hands become the burden bearers of a great number of lesser charities to the ignorant, the defiled, the degenerate, and the poverty-stricken ones; until all their time is occupied, their strength over-taxed, mind over-worked, without the least item of earthly compensation, unless "persecution" may be properly called the earthly part of the legacy the Lord promised those who leave all for his sake and the gospel.

Such a position has been occupied to a greater or less extent by many of us in the cause of our soon coming Lord, voluntarily, and not by constraint or filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. In such cases we have seen and felt the need of work, of money, publications, food and clothing, and have begged of those who felt it less, and urged our suit for those who did not know their own destitution, or could not speak to those to whom we could, to beg. An interest has been awakened, material aid has come. It of course came to us in all forms, by friends, by personal gifts, by mail, by freight, by express. But who shall take charge of all these items, record them, acknowledge them, thank the donors in behalf of the needy; be the judge where, to whom, and in what proportions to apply each and all that comes?

There is work, care, anxiety, weariness, and perplexity, and above all, responsibility for somebody. The work must be done, and they who have the heart must do it. But the DANGER of doing it. Ah! Who of you, my brethren, would enlist to occupy such a post of duty? "What is the great danger? we do not see it. There is work and care it is true." Danger! Why the Devil is not dead, and he is always troubled to see Christ's followers WORKING OUT Christianity. He follows the trail of those who do it; runs up stream to the reservoir to destroy it. How will he do it? Do it, Why report the agent or treasurer to some vacilating, heady, envious, jealous, disaffected christians, who have felt neglected, and underrated; make them think there is dishonesty, selfishness, bad management, etc., etc., etc. The news runs all over the country by steam and ligthning. What is the object? To stop the work of Christ; and, if this cannot be done, to damage it. In doing this, the agents must suffer the loss or damage of reputation and influence. But there is a living God, and he never sleeps. Be not disheartened; "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." Brethren, be not deceived by the Devil. Give your sympathies to every faithful, self-denying, untiring agent of Christ, and help on the good work of missions by your prayers and your means. Be sure not to carry the Devil's mail bag.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"That infallible foreteller of the times to come, the famous Zadkiel, has looked into next year, and gives us a depressing account of our prospects. Saturn is very hard on Spain and Hungary through nearly all the year. In May 'Mars is still in Leo, afflicting Rome, and in some degree France also, while Saturn, retrograde in Sagittarius, afflicts Spain with many troubles.' Royalty is impartially singled out for misfortune all over Europe. In February Abdul-Aziz 'has a bad transit;' and the Emperor of Austria 'suffers from violence.' In May the King of Hanover has 'the moon, joined with Saturn, at his birthday;' a very bad sign. Two months later the King of Prussia is to 'meet trouble by the death of a female,' the King of Italy being at the same time threatened with Saturn, and doubts being expressed whether the Pope will live till the end of the year. Even our own royal family does not escape. Zadkiel observes that 'the Prince' (apparently the Prince of Wales) has 'M. C. square Saturn zod. con. 27 degrees 50, and Sun square Mars zod. con. 27 degrees 44.' These are very serious, and I judge very serious consequences, which I do not feel at liberty to explain more fully. If astrology were believed in, as I believe in it, these consequences might be avoided, so that perhaps much depends on the circulation of the almanac this year. Again, on the 9th of November 'the opposition of Jupiter to the sun, at the birthday of a well-beloved prince, will affect the state of his blood, which becomes inflamed and too abundant.'

Almost the only gleam of good fortune allowed is that of 'Jupiter, in trine to the place of her moon at birth, will confer strength and health on the Princess of Wales about the 21st of March.' A conjunction of the planets in June insures trouble in London and elsewhere, and may produce shocks of earthquake.' Moreover, it seems to denote a 'fall from power of the Ministry in this country.' In November, besides misfortunes to royal princes, the 'roughs' of London 'will give trouble, and very numerous and serious fires will fall hard upon the insurance offices.' On the 11th of March the moon seems 'rather afflicted,' and this points to 'many troubles and mighty changes among the Ministry, which will go nigh to be cast out of power, chiefly through the intrigues of female foes.' All this is enough to make nervous people quake in their shoes. Let us hope that the voices of the stars have for once deceived their prophet."

However ridiculous or presumptuous may seem this almanac maker's attempt at prophecy, it is worth observing that according to a correspondent of the New York Times, last year he foretold the great earthquake in Peru, and the impeachment of President Johnson. His almanacs are in great demand in England. Of course, without information from any such source, we know the future is big with great events. C. C.

THE LATE CONFERENCE AT BUCHANAN.

This convention of Advent Christians assembled at the Advent Chapel in Buchanan, according to appointment, as published in the Crisis and Voice, Tuesday forenoon, Nov. 24th, and organized by the choice of Elder Joshua V. Himes as Chairman, Elder John Couch as Assistant Chairman, and Elders Frank Burr and Wm. L. Himes as Secretaries.

The session was opened by appropriate devotional exercises, after which it was Voted, To appoint a committee of five brethren to prepare and introduce resolutions for discussion. Also a committee on business and finances; and a committee to prepare an address to the brethren at large and the public. These committees were as follows:—

Committee on Resolutions—Wm. Sheldon, John Couch, Frank Burr, L. C. Collins, and J. V. Himes. Business and Finances—O. S. Knapp, A. Richards, D. R. Mansfield, L. H. Davis, and Jonas Olson. On Address—Wm. Sheldon, Frank Burr, John Couch, Moses Chandler, and J. V. Himes.

During the sessions of the conference, the committee presented the following resolutions, which, after most interesting discussions, were unanimously adopted. The discussions in full, as published in the Voice, would doubtless interest the readers of the Crisis; but are by far too lengthy for publication, as they would nearly fill two pages of the paper. The first resolution submitted was as follows; with others in order as here given:—

OUR PAST MISTAKES.

Whereas, we, as a people, have looked for the return of Christ from heaven at too early a point of time,

Resolved, That no premature expectation, based upon a misapplication of prophetic measurements, can invalidate the grand fact, based upon the fulfillment of numerous prophecies, unmistakably indicating our nearness to the close of earth's history of sin, mortality, and death; and although some among us have been dogmatical and censorious in proclaiming their premature time computations,

Resolved, That while we repudiate this feature, which has been a detriment to the cause we love, we cannot repudiate those sacred numbers, even though we should make them only tributary to the great chain of events which mark our chronological nearness to our Savior's coming.

OUR PRESENT FAITH.

Resolved, That the second advent of Jesus is now "nigh, even at the door;" and this is signified by the prophetic periods, the fulfillment of prophecy, and signs of the times: and this truth should be preached to saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice that their redemption is nigh, and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, before the Master shall rise up and shut to the door.

ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, Any cause, whether good or bad, can be better advanced by united efforts, and

Whereas, United efforts can be made more effective by organization,

Resolved, That it is not only the right and privilege, but even the duty of the Advent-Christian people to maintain their church and conference organizations; not that we claim there is no genuine christianity outside of our organization, but as a distinct people we have a great dispensational truth committed to our trust, viz: the immediate, personal advent of Christ, and its kindred doctrines.

CONSOLIDATION.

Whereas, We can better advance the cause of truth by consolidating our entire strength and influence,

Resolved, That all Adventists truly owe to themselves and to their brethren the work of identifying themselves with us in an organized capacity—thus merging their moral, social, and financial influence and aid in the cause we love, and thus augmenting churches and conferences in strength and influence, and increasing their power to do good to perishing men.

DISTRACTION.

Whereas, In some instances confusion and distraction has been produced in our midst by ministers who claim the right to make some side issue the all-absorbing theme, pressing it to the great annoyance of the churches, with a view to divide them, and claiming, when remonstrated with, that they have a right to preach what they believe, and insist that they are at liberty to preach what they please;

Resolved, That although we would not restrict our brethren in the right to think and believe for themselves, we do deeply deplore and heartily repudiate that species of liberty which assumes the right to distract the whole body for the mere gratification of personal liberty to promulgate some side issue to the great annoyance of the body at large; in other words, we do not deem it advisable to so distort the principle of liberty as to make it sanction suicide, by plunging the dagger of cruel discord to our very heart, with our eyes wide open to the past workings of this ruinous principle.

PRACTICAL AND EXPERIMENTAL RELIGION.

Whereas, Correct theology is insufficient to save men, while the truth is held in unrighteousness; and

Whereas, Truth and righteousness should ever go hand in hand,

Resolved, That while we would not make the distinguishing and characteristic features of our faith of less importance than they are entitled to, nor throw them into obscurity in the least degree, we do most heartily recommend that our preachers make practical themes more conspicuous in their preaching; that they make more special and earnest efforts to lead perishing men to the fold of Christ by urging them to repent of sin; that they earnestly labor, as the ministers of Christ, both in private and in public, by protracted meetings and otherwise, for this specific purpose; and, furthermore, that we recommend to all our people that they make practical christianity more prominent, not only by faithfully keeping up the family altar and the prayer meeting, and private devotions, but in their daily deportment among the children of men, as the light of the world: for this is not only a Bible position, but one that harmonizes with our professed faith concerning our nearness to the day of God; and any other position falsely represents our precious faith and hope, and destroys its influence upon the minds of men around us.

Whereas, The Advent-Christian body of this continent, which has been called out of the world and the various sects, should be one in faith, hope, and work; and

Whereas, Unity of action is essential to the proper accomplishment of their great work for the present generation; therefore,

Resolved, That a General Conference of Advent Christians be called, to be composed of representatives from all the States and Territories of the United States, and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Resolved, That this conference shall consist of delegates from the several Advent-Christian Conferences of the United States and Canada, each conference being entitled to three delegates. Provided, that in States, Territories, or Provinces where there are no conferences, and isolated Advent-Christian churches exist, such churches may unite and send one delegate.

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed; three from the East, three from the West, and one from the dominion of Canada, who shall make arrangements for the time and place of meeting of said General Conference; Provided, that the place of meeting be as central as possible. We suggest Rochester, N. Y., or Buchanan, Mich.

The above action in reference to this proposed General Conference is subject to the approval of the several Advent-Christian Conferences.

On motion, it was unanimously

Voted, That the following committee of seven ministering brethren act as a committee to carry out the objects of the resolution: Eld. John Couch, Eld. S. G. Mathewson, and Eld. Miles Grant, of the East; Eld. Joshua V. Himes, Eld. O. R. Fassett, and Eld. William Sheldon of the West; and Eld. John Porter of Canada.

It is desired that the various conferences will take prompt action on the above resolutions, and report such action through the Crisis and Voice.

TENT MEETINGS.

Whereas, The tent-meeting enterprise in our midst, from a small beginning has assumed enlarged dimensions, and

Whereas, We are convicted that it might be rendered still more effective by an improvement in their management in some instances,

Resolved, That we recommend that, where it is possible, these meetings be continued till conviction matures, and men be led to a decision, and a church of believers be organized as the result of the meeting, if possible; for it is evidently a partial waste of time and talent to labor in a place only long enough to awaken partial conviction in numerous minds, when a little more effort, at the same time, would fully ripen those partial convictions into full decision; thus leading many to commit themselves before their convictions, not fully matured, subside, and terminate in positive unbelief for want of timely help to mature conviction.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Whereas, Men are reached through two important channels—through the channel of human reason, and human sympathy; and while men may be more securely reached through the sympathetic channel preparatory to satisfying the judgment or reason; and

Whereas, We should reach men through every possible channel; and especially through the most effectual channel; and

Whereas, Protracted meetings of a devotional character are important facilities in the accomplishment of this great work,

Resolved, That we heartily recommend to our ministers the importance of protracted meetings for the special purpose of leading men to seek the Lord while he may be found; thus making ourselves eminently a more practical, devotional, and working people, and not exclusively a theological people—a people who not only seek to enlighten the intellect, but who also make earnest efforts to reach the heart, and lead men from sin to holiness.

ON GIVING.

Resolved, That the time has come for the disciples of Jesus, who are prospered in this world's goods, to devote a large portion of their income to promote the cause of Christ. It is too late for Adventists to increase their wealth, or lay up larger treasures on earth, just as the Master is about to come and call us to an account.

MISSIONARY EFFORT.

WHEREAS, In pursuance with the command of our Savior to "go . . into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," the Advent body have organized a Missionary Society, in order to effectually co-operate in this the work of the christian church; therefore

Resolved, That the American Advent Mission Society has our warmest sympathies in its divine work of spreading the gospel of the kingdom for the enlightenment of our own and foreign lands; and we commend it not alone to the sympathies of our brethren at large, but also to their generous material aid; an aid which shall enable the Society to carry on the noble missionary work already so worthily begun.

* * * * * * *

We have enjoyed many excellent meetings during the history of our cause, but none better than this, so far as union of feeling and purpose are concerned. As to the action of the conference, we are confident that it has never been exceeded in importance by the action of any Advent body. We commend to our brethren at large a careful consideration of the resolutions adopted.

There were twenty-seven ministers present, and some eighty other brethren and sisters from abroad. Four were baptized during the week, one of them a grandson of Father Miller, from Pontiac, Mich. Seven were added to the church in Buchanan. Over two hundred sat down to the table for Communion on Sunday evening. We might speak of many items of interest, had we the space; but must forbear.

PULPIT STYLE.

I have often been pained (as a hearer) by the use of low and vulgar forms of expression, or what are termed "slang phrases," in the pulpit. Now there are several distinct reasons why the gospel should be preached with a certain gravity and purity of style; such as these:

First. The glorious truths of the gospel are eminently worthy a becoming and respectful form of expression. The language of Christ and the apostles is marked by purity, perspicuity, and consequent strength.

Second. Low and vulgar forms of expression in the pulpit often debase the imagination of the hearer, by the law of association, whereby degrading and vicious ideas are called up, resulting in the effect of linking thoughts and reminiscences, vile and unworthy it may be, to things sacred and holy. It would certainly be a great misfortune, if the language of the preacher should be such as tends to lower the morals of the hearer. But it would seem very desirable that there should be a certain nobleness and propriety of style maintained in the composition and delivery of a gospel sermon, for the sake of the elevating effect which such a style exerts, indirectly it may be, on the people.

Now although refinement and the cultivation of a pure taste and good manners do not supply the lack of religion, boorishness and vulgarity are utter incongruities when brought in contact with religion. Hence anecdotes merely ludicrous, or such figures of speech, however apt, as suggest improper ideas, should be avoided. "Be courteous." Heavenly wisdom is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated. When a preacher utters divine truth in the language of "Billingsgate," it is as if he were to array an angel guest in the mottled frippery of a "king's fool" or circus clown.—Northern Independent.

For the World's Crisis.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, MASS.

This is a new place for the peculiar features of our faith. In connection with Bro. Leavitt, we commenced meetings there Tuesday, Dec. 29th, and continued every evening and over Sunday (except the eve of the great snow). Had a good hearing, and seemingly much interest. I was also there yesterday. The interest continues, and more meetings are wanted; so we concluded to appoint more for the future, hoping much good will be the result.

I would say to our Brn. in Natick, Ashland, and vicinity, that we want their influence and help to sustain these meetings. Bro. Otis Chickering is solicitous that the meetings should continue, and the people be converted, and will do all he is able to sustain them. Now, Brn., lend a helping hand, by making the effort to meet with us when we have a meeting. L. BOUTELL.

Chelsea, Jan. 11th.

SHORT SERMONS.

My friends, I have forty reasons against long sermons; but for the sake of brevity I shall omit all but two.

1. Long sermons seldom effect the object of preaching—the design of the preacher is to convince, instruct, and persuade.

Now, to convince, it is not necessary to dig a channel to the understanding as long as the Erie canal—and, generally, two good reasons clearly presented, and powerfully urged, will produce more conviction than twenty. To instruct, neither a whole system of theology, nor a world of illustration, nor a vocabulary of words, are necessary. Such surfeiting the mind rejects. To impress, it is not necessary to thunder long and loud—the oak is riven by a single stroke of lightning—and to persuade, the man that cannot be moved in half an hour, will not be teased into submission in an hour and a half. So all beyond that is lost, and worse than lost; the lover of truth leaves the house of God with a weary body, a jaded mind, and a heavy heart, not because the preaching was not evangelical, or was inappropriate, but because of its unreasonable length.

2. Long sermons drive not a few from the house of God. How often is the excuse made—"I would attend church, but—but—who can endure an endless sermon?"

Such an apology may indeed arise from an aversion of the heart to hear the truth, but let the cause be removed, and this excuse, at least, will die.

TWO REMARKS; 1. We see one reason why some ministers are so unsuccessful in their preaching. Were they to condense their thoughts, and urge them home briefly, vividly and fervently, with the blessing of God, glorious results would follow.

2. Let not ministers complain that hearers sleep, nor of inattention, when they take the very way to produce it.—Lutheran Observer.

Correspondence.

From Bro. N. McCulloch.

BRO. GRANT:—Having had a desire for some time, to write a few words of encouragement to the scattered flock, I would say that the good Lord is still blessing us in Rochester, under the faithful labors of our beloved Bro. Pratt. We esteem him very highly for his work's sake, and for his watch-care over us. Truly he is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, giving to each a portion in due season. The Lord is giving him and us fresh courage, in seeing that his labors have not been in vain, in the Lord. Backsliders are being reclaimed, sinners are inquiring what they must do to be saved, and all seem impressed with the necessity of living wholly and entirely consecrated to God. This is as it should be. Lord help us all to sink out of self, and be given up to thee, for time and for eternity.

I have caught a glimpse, by the eye of faith, of a resting place for the weary saint of God, in that beautiful world to come, where the cold blast of winter shall never be felt, and where there will be none to suffer for the want of the comforts of life. In view of the nearness of the personal coming of Christ, and the literal resurrection of the dead, it sends a thrill of joy through my whole being, and I cry out with deep emotion of heart, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. The Lord will have a peculiar people, zealous of good works, doing his will, waiting for his Son from heaven, denying themselves of all ungodliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the Life-giver in all his glory, and the glory of his Father. May we all be prepared to meet him in peace, is my prayer.

Rochester, N. Y. N. MCCULLOCK.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

DEAR ONES IN JESUS:—My heart is rejoicing in God, and I feel that my feet are on the sure foundation. I am the Lord's, and he is mine. My soul is filled with praises to God, as I lie in my little room, in my bed, while my body is filled with the most excruciating pains. I have been passing through the fiery furnace, and have not got quite through yet. The fire seems to grow hotter every hour, but Jesus comforts me daily. God is my strength and my portion forever; praise his name. If I did not believe he would come very soon, I fear my patience would not last. Dear ones, do pray for me fervently. Do not cease to pray for me daily; and do not give up writing those heart-cheering letters to me. I have had but few letters; and I hear by a dear sister in Jesus, that many have been written which have not reached me. I feel very sad about it. And now, dear ones, will you all be so kind as to write me again, if you have not had any answer to your letters. Remember and write me immediately, and tell me if any of you, dear readers of the blessed paper, the "Crisis," have written to me, and had no answer from me yet. Free my aching heart, for I cannot give up these good letters. They are all the world to me, as it were, in my deep affliction. Keep on writing, and cheer the heart of your Sr. Thera.

Will dear Sr. Amy A. Stedman please give me her post-office address, and I will gladly answer her cheering letter. God bless you, my dear sister, eternally for your consolation to poor me. L. B. WEAVER.

No. Dana, Mass.

From Sr. E. B. Place.

BRO. GRANT:—We have no Advent preaching here, and the Crisis seems doubly dear to us. I enjoy reading the letters from the dear brothers and sisters scattered abroad; and I cannot tell you how it cheers my heart to think we shall soon meet face to face those whom we now know only by the dear words of comfort they have written.

This last year has been a sad one to me. I have been called to lay my two little ones away to rest, until Jesus comes and brings them from the land of the enemy. I thought we should have to give up the Crisis this year; but I stopped drinking tea and coffee last year, and my husband has concluded to stop using that filthy weed, tobacco, and I think that will more than cover the expense of the Crisis. And instead of feeding our bodies on poison, we shall be receiving words of light and encouragement to help us on through the trials and conflicts of this bitter life.

Your Sister, looking and longing for that blessed appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, E. B. PLACE.

Dement, Ill.

From Bro. J. Wendell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just returned home, after an absence of about four weeks, during which time I tried to preach the word faithfully in Woodhull, Jasper, Dansville, Rogersville, and at the conference at Honeoye. While at Dansville, I received a telegram informing me that my horse (which cost me over one hundred dollars) was accidentally killed. It is a serious loss to me, as the horse is not paid for. If any of God's children will help me bear this burden by their contributions, it will be most thankfully received.

I have received from Bro. D. Cogswell, Dansville, $5.00; from Bro. Wm. Whitman, $5.00; from Bro. B. C. Simonds, $5.00; from Bro. Ira Allen, $5.00. J. WENDELL.

Edenboro, Pa., Dec. 29th, 1868.

BRO. L. B. WYNNE, Washington, D. C. Nov. 20th, writes:—"I am stronger in the belief of the advent and personal reign of Jesus, than when I talked with you two years ago. Things look plainer than at that time. Many strong men here begin to see 'signs.' A lawyer, seventy-two years of age, told me, that although he had not read the Bible as much as some men, yet things around us at this time have a startling significance. And so of many.

I am solicitous for the immediate future of our country, and of the world. Never did grand and terrific events succeed each other in such rapid succession; and never were they so little heeded. God help our blindness and give us strength and faith to pray."

BRO. CHAS. LOWE, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "My intentions are still to go south. The Lord is blessing me with more light on the Bible. Brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, for the coming of Jesus is near at hand. May we all be found clothed in the robe of Jesus' righteousness, and washed in his most precious blood, and sanctified by his Holy Spirit, and be ready to go with him in to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

BRO. S. TENNEY writes:—"The interest among Father's children at North Norway is good. Many are resolved to gird on the armor anew, and live more devoted. The social meetings are good, and well attended. Brethren, pray for us. To God be all the glory."

Obituaries.

RAYMOND. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Floyd, Floyd Co., Iowa, Jan. 1st, 1869, Sister Emma M. Raymond, wife of Bro. Alonzo Raymond, and daughter of C. C. and S. S. Burroughs, of Rockford, Ill., aged twenty years, three months, and twenty-two days.

Sister Emma embraced christianity last spring, and received baptism at my hands. Her life was characterized by christian meekness, and she lived to be loved by all who knew her. She left a good evidence of her hope in Christ and the resurrection. The funeral was attended in the M. E. church by a large concourse of people. Words of comfort by the writer, from John 11: 25, 26. We laid her in her resting place, her infant by her side, to wait till Jesus comes to raise the dead and give eternal life to all who believe in him.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

GOODBREAD. Jacob Goodbread, of Suwanee Shoals, Columbia Co., Fla., died Nov. 13th, 1868, aged fifty-eight years.

He was one of the first fruits of our labors in that neighborhood. He was baptized, and went cheerfully forward in all of his duties, and was one of the most active ones in starting a new church. Before he died, he said "the sting of death had no pain to him." He was a christian indeed, and died in strong expectation of soon being awakened by the voice of Jesus, and made like him. One is laid away to sleep in Florida, as the fruits of the flying message of the gospel of the kingdom. One daughter and son have been baptized also. May they not mourn as others who have no hope. I hope all the rest of the family may so live as to meet him in the kingdom.

P. A. SMITH.

PERSONS. Died of apoplexy, in Canadice, N. Y., Nov. 30th, 1868, Sr. Emma Jane, wife of Bro. Levi Persons, aged thirty-two years, six months, and six days.

A husband in deep affliction, with two little ones at his side, mourn the loss of a devoted and affectionate wife and mother. One year ago, while engaged in a series of meetings in Honeoye, Bro. and Sr. P. confessed the Savior and professed faith in his saving grace.

Services were had in the Presbyterian meeting-house in Honeoye, it being my lot, assisted by Bro. I. Allen, to speak words of comfort and warning to a large circle of relatives and friends, who bore from their midst to her silent resting place one beloved in life and lamented in death.

E. S. JENNINGS.

LUCAS. Died, of pulmonary consumption, in Thomaston, Conn., Dec. 25th, 1868, Bro. Henry C. Lucas, aged fifty-two years.

For the comfort of his friends, we are happy to say that he was a patient sufferer, and called his sufferings light compared with what Christ suffered for him. Bro. L. early embraced the "Advent" faith, and was a firm believer to the end. Words of instruction and comfort were spoken on the funeral occasion, from the words of Christ,—"Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." L. S. LUDINGTON.

MILLAR. Died in Blackstone, Mass., Dec. 12th, 1868, Mary H. H. Millar, of membraneous croup, aged four years, nine months, and five days.

M. R. PHETTEPLACE.

ROBERTS. Died in Alton, N. H., Dec. 28th, 1868, Mrs. Lovey Roberts, aged sixty-six years.

She experienced religion in her youth among the Freewill Baptists, and by the faithfulness of her brother, Benjamin Baker, in 1843 embraced the doctrine of Jesus' soon coming, which she loved till her death. May her two remaining daughters still strive, and meet her when clothed in immortality. Sermon by the writer, from John 14: 1-4

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Jan. 4. A writer in the Times discusses the present situation of France. He says the year ends with the most precarious peace the world ever saw; pronounces M. Rouher a mere maire du palais; notices the growth of domestic sentiment in France, and declares that the Emperor must either check the press or abandon personal government.

Telegraphic reports have been received from Alexandria of an earthquake at or in the neighborhood of Tabreez, a Persian city of about 60,000 people, on Sunday last.

Jan. 5. It is said that Greece will introduce the claims of the Cretans in the Conference about to meet in Paris, and will demand that they be allowed to declare who shall be their rulers by plebiscitum.

FLORENCE, Jan. 5. The country is now perfectly tranquil. The recent disturbances caused by the collection of odious taxes were fomented by the reactionists.

LONDON, Jan. 6. The feeling amongst the tenantry in some parts of Ireland is very bitter against land holders, and many cases of agrarian violence are reported.

PARIS, Jan. 5. A Carlist conspiracy has been discovered in Barcelona with ramifications in Saragossa and other places. Many persons have been arrested, implicated in the conspiracy, among them Costello, a noted Carlist. The Peasants in Andalusia, pressed by poverty, have organized into plundering parties and are pillaging the rich land owners.

MADRID, Jan. 5. Four insurgents at Malaga fired into a party of refugees while under the protection of the American flag. The General in command at Malaga had the offenders arrested and punished, and has since communicated with the Commander of the American squadron in the Spanish Government in the case.

VIENNA, Jan. 8. The Presse of this city, asserts that the representatives of the Greek Government at the Paris Conference will not be permitted to offer any proposition, but will attend only for the purpose of giving information in regard to the subjects under discussion. The Conference will frame a project of settlement which it will be the duty of Greece to adopt after its acceptance by the Sublime Porte, and withdrawal of the Turkish ultimatum.

PARIS, Jan. 5. The Patrie says that the sympathy in France with the objects of the Chinese Embassy is so great that Mr. Burlingame is as sure of success here as in England.

The La Turquie (newspaper) asserts that Russia urges a meeting of the Conference now that Crete is quiet, with the view to prevent the expulsion of the Greeks from the Ottoman territory. It intimates that the representative of the Porte will leave the Conference if this point is introduced for discussion, and warns Russia of the danger of another Crimean war.

Jan. 6. Mr. McMahon, the American Minister to Paraguay, had had an interview with President Lopez, and the result was undertood to be eminently satisfactory, full atonement for the recent outrages to the American flag having been guarantied.

MADRID, Jan. 6. There have been quite formidable Republican demonstrations at Seville and Jerez de la Frontera.

At the latter city the insurgents made a futile attempt to obtain arms and ammunitions from the arsenal. General Caballero de Rodes immediately sent a strong force of soldiers to hold the town and remove the arms to Cadiz for safety.

Gen. Prim, in an official circular, declares that the Provisional Government does not intend to disarm the volunteers.

LONDON, Jan. 9. Advices from Candia by mail fully confirm the previous reports of the submission of the Cretans to Turkish authority.

PARIS, Jan. 10. The Conference for the settlement of the dispute between Greece and Turkey met in this city yesterday. Their first session was a long one, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon and terminating at eleven o'clock at night. The Greek and Turkish representatives manifested a very conciliatory disposition, and a peaceful result to the deliberations of the Conference is looked forward to with confidence. The next session will take place on Tuesday, Jan. 12.

DOMESTIC.

Buffalo, Jan. 3. The suspension bridge at Niagara Falls was thrown open to the public yesterday noon. A four-horse carriage, containing Hollis White, Vice President of the Bridge Company, Samuel Keefe, Engineer, B. W. Smith, Superintendent, and Wm. Pool, editor of the Niagara Falls Gazette, passed over, followed by crowds of pedestrians. The bridge is the longest span on the continent.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 6. A shocking accident occurred in this city this evening, by which eight persons were killed and thirty seriously injured. The floor in the school house of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church gave way while it was crowded with people attending a holiday festival, and three hundred or more persons went down, and several were instantly killed. The wildest excitement ensued, and it was some time before the wounded could be taken from the debris.

FOND DU LAC, WIS., January 5th. One of the most daring robberies ever recorded was committed here about two o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the depot of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad. A very worthy young man by the name of Chapman was passing near the passenger depot, when directly opposite the gate leading into the yard, was accosted by a stranger and asked if he would "go in and give him a lift." He at once acceded to the request, and was no sooner inside the gate than he was struck upon the head with a slung-shot, and in an instant, more a dirk was thrust into his throat, with the evident intention of severing the jugular vein. This being done, the fiends made a slash at the pocket of his pants (which contained about a hundred dollars, which they secured), cutting him badly about the groin. All this must have been accomplished in less than half a minute, as persons were passing and repassing continually. It is supposed that they jumped on board the train about starting north, which was standing upon the track within a hundred feet of the bloody scene.

When such desperate recklessness as this is exhibited at mid-day, in such public places, it is difficult to determine when we are safe.

A GIGANTIC PROJECT.—Mr. L. Brady, late Engineer in the U. S. Navy, has matured a plan for doing away with the East river at New York. He thinks that the ruin of the harbor, if the East river remains open, is imminent and inevitable. To save the harbor he has projected a dike from the South ferry across the shallows to Brooklyn. This dike he would have several hundred feet wide, with ample dock room, and space for streets and warehouses. The docks on the upper side would accommodate the Sound steamers and Eastern commerce. Those on the lower side, the various lines of ocean steamers. From these docks and warehouses, Mr. Brady calculates an income which in a few years would pay the cost of the whole work, which he estimates at $10,000,000. He anticipates some opposition to the project from the Eastern States, but thinks the advantages to New York and the West are more than sufficient to compensate for any damages which might be done to the trade and commerce of New England.—Journal.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN IOWA.—The Constitution of Iowa requires that in the State University women shall be admitted to all the classes and in all the departments on the same terms as the men. The institution is not fully organized. In the academical department women form thirty-two per cent. of the freshman class, seventeen per cent. of the sophomore class, and seven per cent of the junior class. There are no females in the senior class nor in the law department, which was organized last September. The medical department will not go into operation until September, 1869.

ECLIPSES IN 1869. There will be four eclipses this year, two of the sun and two of the moon. Two of them will be visible on the continent. The first will occur on the 27th inst. At Boston the moon will enter Penumbra at 6. 34 P. M., and leave at 11. 14 P. M. The middle of the eclipse will be at 8. 54 P. M.

A total eclipse of the sun will occur on the 7th of August and will be visible to North America and Eastern Asia. It will begin at Boston at 5. 24 P. M., and end at sunset.

Passing Events.

☞ A gentleman from Sumner, Me., who has kept an account of the amount of snow that has fallen this winter, states that the total of his measurements is fifty-seven inches, or only three inches less than five feet. He has kept such an account for fourteen years; but has never noted so great an amount up to this time in any passing year.

☞ The foundations of Peru are still unsettled. At Arica earthquakes are constantly felt, accompanied by the earthquake waves. On the 9th of December the motion was almost as severe as on the disastrous 13th of September, and the sea rose and fell in rapid succession, about two feet during the night.

☞ A correspondent of the New York Times at Bayonia, Cuba, says the revolutionary chiefs have concluded to issue a proclamation making all slaves free, and fixing a day after which they shall receive pay for their labor, and they propose to carry this resolution into immediate effect.

☞ When the Pacific Railroad is completed, a tour round the world, all the way by rail and steamer, 32,000 miles, will take eighty days and $1,500.

☞ Chicago built $20,000,000 worth of new buildings last year, laid thirty miles of water pipes, twenty-one miles of Nicholson pavement, thirty miles of sidewalk and seven miles of sewers.

☞ London is growing so rapidly that its population will soon be 4,000,000. The metropolitan police, of 7,800 members, have to control and patrol a district of thirty miles in diameter.

☞ England has rejected the Armstrong gun after expending upon it millions of pounds, and knighting the inventor. The breech-loading guns are also to be replaced by muzzle loaders.

☞ The commercial war between England and Russia in Central Asia has terminated in the defeat of the latter. Russian goods are threatened with total expulsion from the market.

☞ An American traveler, who is now in Europe, writes home that of all the cities in the world Paris is the most beautiful, London the dingiest, and New York the dirtiest and worst smelling.

☞ Sundry flocks of wild geese have been seen during the past ten days flying northward. This has generally been considered a sign of the breaking up of winter; and, so far as we are informed, this early migration is very unusual.

☞ The Siamese Twins have reached Liverpool. After a tour through Great Britain, giving exhibitions to repair their broken fortunes, they will proceed to Paris to have the ligament that binds them together severed.

☞ Latest news received in London from Africa confirms the recent report relative to the safety of the great American traveler, Dr. Livingstone. It is said he is somewhere in the vicinity of Lake Nyassa, near the confines of Zanzibar.

☞ Four thousand miles of railway have been completed in Hindostan, and one thousand more are projected or commenced. The discovery of gold in Ceylon has created a demand for a line to the metalliferous district.

☞ John Allen, of Water street revival notoriety, has closed his dance-house, and become morose, surly, dogged and sullen. He is disappointed with the turn affairs have taken. His old business is gone.

☞ Brazil has dispatched agents to England to recruit soldiers for her army on the Parana. Two hundred and fifty men arrived in a recent vessel.

☞ There are said to be but three healthy kings and queens in Europe.

Mass. A. C. Conference.

To the churches in Mass., looking for the consummation of "our hope," greeting: Whereas, the time for holding the next quarterly session of our State conference is at hand; and whereas, the Bethel church in Springfield have requested said session to be holden with them, commencing Wednesday, Jan. 13th, to continue over the following Lord's day; therefore, an invitation is hereby extended to all the Advent churches in the State to send delegates to said session of the conference; also to preachers in this and adjacent States to join with us in one more effort for God. And may God add his blessing.

Per order, E. OWEN, Clerk.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday, Jan. 27th, and hold over the following Sunday. Let this meeting be made a special subject of prayer that God's blessing may be on his people, and that good may be accomplished. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec. of Conf.

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing. N. G. REED, President.

L. F. COLE, Secretary.

Maine East. Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in Cushing, at the lower house, commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 28th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go to this meeting prepared to work for the salvation of the perishing. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will call on Brn. N. Hathorn, Wm. Stone, Wm. Morton, and Simon Davis.

For the brethren, JER. CARR.

Going South.

The Lord willing, I purpose to start for the South about the 20th of this month, to labor as the way may open before me. For this reason all my appointments after this date are withdrawn. Brethren, pray for us. J. A. LIBBY.

Notice.

The Conn. A. C. Conference, which was noticed in the Crisis to be held in New Haven, Wednesday, Jan. 6th, 1869, is postponed until Jan. 27th, 1869. The church in New Haven are building a chapel, and it will not be finished until the 27th, and ready for the reception of the conference, at which time their hearts will be open to receive us with cordial welcome. We have some very important business to attend to at this conference, and we hope that every church in the State will send one or more delegates, and all the ministering brethren will be present. Let all pray that God will crown our efforts with everlasting good.

B. HITCHCOCK, President.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garrigues, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. AN EXPOSITION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, my mail, 10 cts.

4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God, Matt. 21: 43; what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

8. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

9. THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL, Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts., by mail, 10 cts.

10. RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 66 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

THE GLORIOUS DAY.

The glorious day will soon be here,
The day of hope, the day of fear;
The day of joy for all the blest,

The glorious day! the christian's day,
For which so often he doth pray,
Is drawing nigh, as oft foretold
By holy men and seers of old.

The glorious day! O, who can pray
To have it come without delay,
And know that Christ in judgment comes
To part us from our loving ones?

O, loving ones, to Christ now come,
Prepare for Canaan's happy home;
Forsake your sins, with follies part,
In Christ believe, give God your heart.

The glorious day is rolling on,
The gracious work is almost done;
O, happy day for all the blest,
The day of hope, the day of rest.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CAPTIVITIES OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.—No. 1.

HISTORICAL.

There have been five captivities of Israel and Judah since they sojourned in and came out of Egypt under Moses, and prior to their last and final dispersion by Titus, the Roman General, under Vespasian. Of these captivities two were of Israel and three of Judah. The first one, of Israel, by Tiglathpileser, king of Assyria, is recorded in 2 Kings 15: 29. The second one, of Israel, was by Shalmaneser, also king of Assyria, son of and successor to Tiglathpileser, and happened in the fourth year of king Hezekiah or the seventh of Hoshea,—taking Samaria in the sixth year of Hezekiah and ninth of Hoshea, the war lasting three years, the record of which may be found in the following Scriptures: 2 Kings 17: 5, 6; 18: 9, 10; 11: 12; 17: 22, 23.

From this Israel has never returned, as stated in the last verse quoted. 2 Kings 17: 23. Here one of the two houses of Israel (i. e. of the two dynasties, or lines of reigning kings, the ten tribes) were lost "unto this day." These ten tribes separated from the house of David, under the reign of Rehoboam, son of and successor to Solomon, revolting from him, and choosing Jeroboam, son of Nebat, for their king. 1 Kings 12: 1–20.

From the time in which the Hebrews came out of Egypt, they had no king over them for four hundred and fifty years, but were governed or ruled by "Judges," of whom, Othniel, Caleb's youngest brother, was the first; up to which period the governing power had been lodged in the hands of ruling "elders" (see Judges 2: 7); or "counsellors" (Isa. 1: 26); and then followed the judges (Jud. 2: 16; 3: 9; 10: 11.) Of these, Samuel and his sons were the last; and afterward they desired a king, and God gave unto them Saul, the son of Cis, of the tribe of Benjamin; then David, and then Solomon.

Now Jesse, the father of David, was a Bethlehemite, or, in other words, of the tribe of Judah; hence the phrase—"Bethlehem of Judah," (Jud. 17: 7, Micah 5: 2); and up to as well as all through Solomon's reign, down to Rehoboam and Jeroboam, the entire twelve tribes had been called "all Israel," also "the house of Israel"; but the choice of David from the tribe of Judah and God's covenant with him to perpetuate his rule, kingdom and dynasty, gave rise to the phrase—"House of Judah," which is a synonym with "house of David." Up to David's time, "house of Judah" was only used in its tribal sense; but now, as designating the line of royal descent, in or from Judah, by David's legal heirs or successors. See 1 Sam'l. 24: 20; 2 Sam'l. 7: 15, 16; 1 Chron. 17: 13, 14; 2 Kings 8: 19; 2 Chron. 21: 7.

But few men will turn to passages referred to, and as the terms "two houses". . . and "both houses of Israel," in their origin and signification, are important considerations, we will here produce some of the most direct Scripture to prove that these terms arose out of the defection of Israel, under Jeroboam, and their revolt from Rehoboam, or Judah. As Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem one day, the prophet Ahijah met him, having on a new cloak (1 Kings 11: 29), which he rent in twelve pieces, saying to Jeroboam, "Take ten to thyself; for the Lord will rend the kingdom of Solomon, and give ten tribes to thee:" (Jeroboam was an Ephrathite, or an Ephraimite of Zereda, a city of Manasseh; and this is why "Ephraim" is so often put for the ten tribes, or Israel: as, "Ephraim is joined to his idols,". . . alluding to the idolatry of the ten tribes. 1 Kings 11: 26.) "I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and give it to thy servant." Not in your (Solomon's) days, for David thy father's sake, but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son (Rehoboam.) But I will not rend away all the kingdom: but will give one tribe to thy Son." 1 Kings 11: 11–13. "The Lord would not destroy Judah [the one tribe] for David's sake." 2 Kings 8: 19. "The Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that he had made with David." 2 Chron. 21: 7. "And Solomon slept with his fathers, . . . and Rehoboam, his son, reigned in his stead." 2 Chron. 9: 31.

Then came the request for a reformation in the affairs of the administration of the government; the rejection of the old men's counsel, after three days deliberation, and the adoption of the young men's advice, as recorded in 1 Kings 12: 1–16; and then came the cry of revolt,—"What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David. So Israel departed unto their tents . . . and . . . rebelled against the house of David unto this day. And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again [i. e. from Egypt, ch. 11: 26–40, and 12: 2], they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel; there was none that followed the house of David [i. e. Rehoboam], but the tribe of Judah only" (v. 20); but as for the children of Israel, which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them." v. 17. "And when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah with the tribe of Benjamin, . . . to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam, the son of Solomon." 1 Kings 12: 21. The same thing is recapitulated in 2 Chron. 10 and 11. "And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually." 2 Chron. 12: 15.

During this defection between Judah and Israel, and under the reign of Omri, the city of Samaria was built, and became the capital of the kingdom of Israel (i. e., of the ten tribes), until taken by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, as already stated. When Esarhaddon sent the Cuthites to inhabit this region, they did not think worth while to repair Samaria, but dwelt in Sechem, making it their capital. Herod the Great, however, restored it to its ancient splendor, and gave to it the Greek name Sebaste, by which it is never spoken of in the New Testament.

In these captivities of Israel and Judah, we have not (nor did we intend to) embraced the subjoined seven servitudes of the Hebrews, the first of which was under Rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia, eight years from which they were delivered by Othniel. Jud. 3: 1–9; 10: 11. The second, under Eglon, king of Moab, about twenty years, rescued by Ehud. Jud. 3: 12–14, and 15–30. The third under the Philistines, and delivered by Shamgar; time indefinite. Jud. 3: 31. The fourth under Jabin, king of Hazor, twenty years; delivered by Deborah and Barak. Jud. 4: 5. The fifth, under the Midianites, seven years, Jud. 6: 1–6; from which they were delivered by Gideon. 6: 7–40, and 7. The sixth under the Philistines and the Ammonites, eighteen years, 10: 6–9, when they were delivered by Jephthah. 10: 10; 12: 6. The seventh was of forty years' duration, under the Philistines. Jud. 13: 1.

In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes (Jud. 1: 25) unto the days of Samuel, who judged Israel forty years, and of him they asked a king. 1 Sam'l. 8: 5–22.

PIC-NIC RELIGION.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

"Sitting down to eat and drink, and rising up to play."

"While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way."—MATT. 13: 25.

President C. G. Finney, the revivalist, alluding to these revival-killers and soul-destroyers, remarks thus:

"Often when it comes the time of year to work, when the evenings are long, and business is light, and the very time to make an extra effort—at this moment somebody in the church will give a religious party. And then some other family must do the same, to return the compliment. Then another and another, till it grows into an organized system of parties, that consume the whole winter.

"This is the grand design of the devil, because it appears so innocent and so proper to promote good feeling, and increase the acquaintance of christians with each other. And so, instead of prayer-meetings, they will have these parties. The evils of these parties are very great. They are often got up at great expense; and the most abominable gluttony is practiced at them.

"But it is said they are christian parties, and that they are all, or nearly all, professors of religion who attend them. And furthermore, they are often concluded with prayer. Now I regard this as one of the worst features about them; that after the waste of time and money, the excess in eating and drinking, the vain conversation and nameless fooleries with which such a season is filled up, an attempt is made to sanctify it and to palm it off upon God, by concluding it with prayer! Say what you will, it would not be more absurd, or incongruous, or impious to close a ball or a theatre with prayer.

"But I shall advise any congregation who are calculating to have a circle of parties, in the mean time to dismiss their minister, and let him go and preach where the people would be ready to receive the word and profit by it, and not have him stay and be distressed, and grieved, and killed by attempting to promote religion among them, while they are engaged, heart and hand, in the service of the devil! Professors should never get up anything that may divert public attention from religion. In relation to giving parties, say what you please about their being an innocent recreation, I appeal to any of you, who have ever attended them, to say whether they fit you for prayer, or increase your spirituality, whether sinners are ever converted in them, or christians made to agonize in prayer for souls."

TESTIMONIAL No. 3. The New York Recorder speaks thus: "Passing by the envies and evil-speakings, the unkind recollections, the erroneous ideas of benevolence engendered, they place the church of Christ in a false position before the world. No pecuniary profit can compensate for the injury done by this false position."

TESTIMONIAL No. 4. From the Earnest Christian:

"Pleasure rules the hour. It is fearful to witness the inroads which worldly pleasure is making upon christianity. With the avowed design of keeping the young people under the influence of the church, the weekly sociable is instituted, and fun and frolic prevail. To pay the preacher, a donation-party is held, and old and young, professor and worldlings, devote the evening to feasting and merriment. Festivals, pic-nics and excursions, oyster suppers and lotteries, are resorted to, for the purpose of replenishing the funds, or reviving the flagging interest—not religious—in the prosperity of the church. We object to one and all of these various expedients to promote the cause of Christ.

"1. They are directly contrary to all the examples given us by Christ and the apostles.

"2. They practically educate the people in impiety. Pure religion requires not merely right actions but right feelings. It would seem as if Satan has so contrived it, that the church is systematically trained to perform her most pious acts from selfish motives. The punctuality of the children in the Sabbath-schools is rewarded by a pic-nic or festival. The lessons are learned, not that the scholars may be made wise unto salvation, but that they may win a prize, and receive public commendation. Church pride, family pride, and personal vanity are strongly appealed to, to swell the contributions for the missionary cause. Revivals are sometimes sought to be promoted, that the pecuniary burdens of those who sustain the church may be lessened.

"3. They seek to unite Christ and Belial. They would join together, in loving harmony, what God has forever put asunder. They obliterate the distinction between the church and the world. Their avowed object is to bring worldlings under the influence of christianity. To accomplish this end, christians spread a banquet, which the veriest libertine can enjoy, and sit down with him, with apparent gratification, to the sumptuous repast. To attempt to lead men, in this way, to 'deny themselves, and take up their cross and follow Christ,' is as wise as would be the effort to reform a drunkard by giving him wine. Boys are not trained to habits of sobriety by feeding them sugar, saturated with brandy. The appetite thus created or revived, will soon demand stimulants of a stronger character. As long as theatrical performances are countenanced in the Sabbath-school, professing christians will quite likely attend the full-grown theatre. If Christ has no concord with Belial, why then this persistent effort to keep up an unhallowed alliance between the children of God and the sons of Belial?

"4. They grieve the Spirit of God. Where that dwells, there is solemnity. Many a conviction has been dissipated by the levity prevailing at the social gatherings of the church. Many a hopeful convert has taken the first step toward backsliding in the donation which followed the revival in which he was converted. You cannot have the Spirit of God and feast and frolic with the world.

"5. They practically deny Christ. Has he not said to his true disciples, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world"? If Christ is with his church, will he not, if his followers are faithful, so assist them that they will not need to go to the world for help? Christ's church is dear to him. He bought it with his own blood. He cares for all its interests, and it grieves him that the church should throw off all dependence upon him, and 'go down to Egypt for help.' She is his bride; and what would a bridegroom think of his betrothed, if she should, when his aid was freely proffered, go to his enemies for assistance? Look at the spiritual death that prevails, and see how large a share the practices complained of have had in producing it. See how many ministers—once mighty men of God—have been shorn of their locks, and have lost their power in the lap of this modern Delilah, and are now sightless giants, toiling upon the tread-mill of lifeless ceremonies! See how wide is the departure from apostolic usage; how the young and old are educated to be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; how Christ is dishonored and denied, and the Holy Spirit grieved!

"Never countenance them with your presence. Let not love for your pastor, nor desire for pleasing your brethren, nor dread of singularity induce you to assist in attempting to force Christ into an alliance with the world, which he utterly abhors.

"'We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age, on ages telling,
To be living is sublime!'"

"That the church is rapidly conforming to the spirit and pleasures of the world none can deny. The most alarming features lead the way, and the people blindly follow. The New York papers contain an account of a 'Tin wedding.' Tuesday evening being the tenth wedding-day* of the Rev. —— of —— church, he gathered his friends together, to the number of over eight hundred, in the spacious lecture-room of his new church. Rev. and Mrs. . . . began to enjoy the sport. On some unusual or valuable article in the tin line being given, the reverend gentleman would feel impelled to make a speech. His remarks would call out replies, which were listened to with great good-humor by all present, who enjoyed the keen sallies of lay or clerical wit. The evening passed away merrily.' May we not say devilishly? 'We know that God's Spirit writes on truly awakened hearts' the necessity of avoiding evil of every kind.

What would John Knox or Jonathan Edwards have thought of a scene like this in the house of God? The Chicago Tribune gives a full report of a 'Banquet to Bishop ——, at the Sherman House, Chicago, Ill., attended by upwards of one hundred of the ministers, laymen, and other prominent members of the —— church of this city.' The evening was filled out with toasts and responses.

In respect to this affair, a beloved minister, in the traveling connection, writes us, 'My soul sickens within me at the sight and the terrible consequences that must follow from such examples.

'Would not John Wesley have denounced, far more strongly than we are capable of doing, the conduct of a Bishop and popular minister in consenting to a banquet being given to honor him in a genteel rum-selling, gambling hotel, where hundreds of young men are ruined, and that too in the neighborhood of his own house?'" †

* Touching the disgraceful scenes of this "tin wedding" in Brooklyn, N. Y., the half has not been told. Those familiar with the facts in the case, assure us that the whole proceedings were, ridiculous in the extreme, shockingly disgusting, enough to cause angels to weep, and Satan to blush! How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! . . . The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed? as earthen pitchers.

† Think of it, reader, grave bishops, elders, teachers of the meek and lowly Jesus, assembling at a gambling, rum-selling hotel, feast to repletion, drink toasts, crack jokes, make funny speeches, have a jolly time! Could any thing please Satan better?

A MIRACLE DEFINED.

The following definition of a miracle by a Scotchman is very well put, and the illustration is also an apt one, which may relieve some minds perplexed by the cant phrases of skeptics:

"Well, you may say what you please," said Smith; "I for my part cannot believe that God would first impose laws on nature, and then go to violate his own laws. What would be the use of making them if they are to be readily set aside?"

"I dinna ken, sir," said uncle, very reverently, "what God may do, or what he winna do; but I don't regard a miracle to be a violation o' the laws o' nature. There's nae violation o' the laws o' nature, or rather the laws o' God, that I ken o', save the wicked actions o' wicked men."

"And what then," asked Smith, "do you make a miracle to be?"

"I regard it," said uncle, "to be merely such an interference wi' the established course o' things as infallibly shows us the presence and the action o' a supernatural power.—What o'clock is it wi' you, sir, if you please?"

"It is half past twelve, exactly, Greenwich time," replied Smith.

"Well, sir," said uncle, pulling a huge old time-piece from his pocket, "it is one o'clock wi' me; I generally keep my watch a little forrit. (A little forward.) But I may hae a special reason the noo for setting my watch by the railway, and, as ye see, I'm turnin' the hands o't around. Noo wad ye say that I had violated the laws o' a watch? True, I hae dune what watchdom wi' a' its laws could nae hae dune for itself, but I hae dune violence to nane o' its laws. My action is only the interference o' a superior intelligence for a suitable end; but I hae suspended nae law, violated nae law. Weel, then, instead o' the watch, say the universe, instead o' moving the hands, say God acting o' himsel', and we hae a' that I contend for in a miracle; that is, the unquestionable presence of an Almighty hand working the divine will. And if he sees fit to work miracles, what can hinder him? He has done it afttener than once or twice already; and wha daur say that he'll not do't again?

Early one morn in winter,
On the holy Sabbath day,
A little group of christians
To the seashore sought their way,
To consecrate themselves to God
By a baptismal vow;
The love of Jesus in the heart
Was mirrored on the brow.

The raging storm the night before
Had gently passed away;
Propitious for these christian friends
Was that holy Sabbath day.
The heavens smiled above them,
As the sun in splendor rose;
Sweet emblem of the Savior's love
That in the christian glows.

God sealed their vows in heaven,
And lovingly looked down;
While Jesus whispered tenderly—
The cross before the crown.
A crown awaits each faithful heart,
Each self-denying soul,
That carries cheerfully the cross,
Quite to the heavenly goal.

— Truth has never need of error, and shades add nothing to light.

— Many have suffered by talking, but few by silence.

— The heart must leap kindly back to kindness.

— Most misfortunes may be turned into blessings by waiting the tide of affairs.

— Only trust thyself and another shalt not betray thee.

— A faithful friend is one who will give me one loaf when he has but two.

— We do not want precepts so much as patterns.

— Better than he who wipes away a tear, is he who prevents it from starting.

— Sorrow is the furnace that melts selfish hearts together in love.

— Strive to make every body happy, and you will make at least one so, yourself.

— All human virtues increase and strengthen by the practice and experience of them.

— To do good to our enemies, may be said to resemble the incense whose aroma perfumes the fire by which it is consumed.

— The worthiest people are the most assailed by slander; as that is the best fruit the birds have been picking at.

— A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain, while witty sayings are as easily lost as pearls slipping from a broken string.

— Disappointments feed and nourish us in the desert places of life, as did the ravens the prophet in the wilderness.

— See that each hour's feelings, thoughts and actions are pure and true, then will your life be such.

— Four things come not back: the broken word, the sped arrow, the past life, and the neglected opportunity.

— Sin is bad in the eye, worse in the tongue, worse still in the heart, but worst of all in the life.

— No company at all is preferable to bad; we are more apt to catch the vices of others than their virtues.

— The good man's life, like the mountain top, looks beautiful because it is near to heaven.

— Advice, like the snow, the softer it falls the longer it dwells upon and the deeper it sinks into the mind.

— Some minds are like seives; they retain all that is worthless, while that which is good passes through them.

— Harsh words are like hailstones in summer, which, if melted, would fertilise the tender plants they batter down.

— A man is not like steeped tea leaves; but the more strength and virtue you draw out of him, the more is left within him.

— You may gather a rich harvest of knowledge by reading, but thought is the winnowing machine.

— He who is master of the fittest moment to crush his enemy, and magnanimously neglects it, is born to be a conqueror.

— Heaven sends us ten thousand truths; but because our doors and windows are shut to them, they sit and sing awhile upon the roof and then fly away.

— Charity is never lost; it may be of no service to those it is bestowed on; yet it ever does a work of beauty and grace upon the heart of the giver.

— The violet grows low and covers itself with its own leaves, and yet of all flowers yields the most delicious and fragrant smell. Such is humility.

— If you want to annoy and puzzle and baffle a man full of tricks and duplicity, you have only to practice a straight forward and simple integrity.

— He is below himself who is not above an injury. Plato said that when an injurious speech was offered to him, he placed himself so high that it could not reach him.

TAKE FREELY.

A ship was sailing in the southern waters of the Atlantic, when they saw another vessel making signals of distress. They bore down towards the distressed ship and hailed them. "What is the matter?"

"We are dying for water," was the response.

"Dip it up then!" was answered. "You are in the mouth of the Amazon River!"

There those sailors were thirsting and suffering, and fearing, and longing for water, and supposing there was nothing but the ocean's brine around them, when in fact, they had sailed unconsciously into the broad mouth of the mightiest river on the globe, and did not know it. And though to them it seemed that they must perish with thirst, yet there was a hundred miles of fresh water all around them, and they had nothing to do but to "Dip it up!"

Jesus Christ says, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." "And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come, and whosoever will let him come, and take of the water of life freely." Thirsting soul, the flood is all around you; "Dip it up!" and drink and thirst no more.—Earnest Christian.

DEATH OF ELD. B. W. WILKINS.

Another servant of Christ has fallen here by the hand of death. Bro. B. W. Wilkins died at our Mission House in this city, Monday morning, Dec. 21st, 1868. He came here from La Grange on Friday, the 11th inst., weak and exhausted, and with the impress of death upon his countenance. It was plain to be seen that his work was nearly done. But hoping that his life might be prolonged, and unwilling to assume all the responsibility in his case, I called in one of the most experienced and skillful physicians in the city. All was done for him that could be, but he continued to fail and sink, and at the end of ten days after his arrival here he fell asleep.

His disease was indigestion, an entire loss of the powers of the stomach. Nothing which was taken remained upon the stomach; consequently he died mainly from want of nutrition, growing weaker and weaker until death took place.

During his sickness here he said but little. Much of the time his weakness was so great that it was with difficulty he expressed his wants, and often had to do this by motions of the hand. He desired to live, but had no terrors in view of death. He wanted to do more for Christ among his people here. The work in which he was engaged engrossed all his mind. He prayed to be raised up that he might finish the work begun at La Grange, where he was laboring with so much success. He was anxious to know what his fate was to be. The day after he arrived he said to me:

"I have prayed the Lord to show me what he is going to do with me, but I have got no answer; all is dark. I wish I did know."

The same day he received a letter from his wife, which he wished me to read to him and answer. I did so, and he seemed satisfied and at rest. After this he made no allusion to his family or home until the day before he died. Sunday morning, just twenty-four hours before his death, as I was sitting alone by his bedside, he reached out his hand, and on my taking it in mine, he said with distinctness:

"Farewell! I am dying. Tell my wife that I die in peace. I am a great way off."

Here his strength and voice failed, and he said no more. During the day (Sunday) I asked him if he wished to send any word to his daughter. He made no reply, but there seemed to be a struggle of thought and an effort to speak. From this time he sank rapidly, and no means we could use could rally him. He died the next morning about five o'clock. Throughout the night he suffered considerably, but died without a struggle, breathing his last so gently that we could hardly tell when he ceased to live.

We procured a good black-walnut coffin, neatly trimmed, in which we laid him, and placed it in the chapel, where friends came at all hours of the day and night to look upon and take farewell of one they so dearly loved. As is the custom here, the night was spent in singing and praying by some twenty or more, who came to watch around the corpse. All through the long hours of darkness could be heard the voice of prayer and song in our chapel.

The funeral took place on Tuesday at twelve o'clock from the chapel. It was a solemn hour. The writer read portions of Scripture and spoke upon the character of the deceased, and his work among the Freedmen. Prayer was offered by the minister of the middle Baptist church, who kindly came to visit Bro. W. in his sickness, and also to attend his funeral.

We buried Bro. W. in the same Cemetery with Sr. Northrup—Elmwood, in a pleasant spot, near the foot of a large tree. A head-board is set up, with his name upon it, so that his resting-place can be found by his friends if they should ever seek it. Reading of the Scriptures and prayer was offered at the grave. We also sung Bro. W.'s favorite hymn and his own tune—

"We are almost down to the shore."

We saw him covered up, and the board placed at the head; and then turned our weary eyes and feet away, bidding farewell to another servant of God and fellow laborer. May the morning soon come when these shadows and gloom shall flee away, and these two faithful ones be called up to behold a bright, eternal day.

God bless the dear family of our brother. May friends help and comfort them in their need and sorrow. I. L. LESLIE.

THOUGHTS UPON THE NEW YEAR.

The world has its boundaries, its highways and landmarks. So time has its epochs and way-marks; and its great pendulum has just measured off another cycle of the world's existence. Its clock has just struck 1869. What record has it made for us?

There is a machine attached to the engine upon many of the steamboats, which indicates the number of the revolutions of the wheels; but this machine does not tell more accurately the movements of the engine, than the recording angel has written down every act of our lives. And how would it bear review? Are there not many things, if we had the power, we would erase? some blank page we would like to fill up? But the day-book and ledger are filled and closed, to be opened at the great reckoning day.

But what are our resolutions for the coming year? What minister of the gospel will preach as he has never preached before? What philanthropist will double his zeal and energy for the cause of suffering humanity? What Sabbath School teacher will be more faithful to his class? What young man will abandon his habits of intemperance and pursue the road to ruin no longer?

These are questions which naturally occur at the commencement of a new year. How shall we meet them? What are our resolutions and aspirations for the coming year? "Upward and onward" should be our motto.

Taking leave of the past year is like parting with an old familiar friend, never to meet again. All its pleasures and hallowed associations are gone forever; but we are introduced to another, untried; and it depends upon our walk and conversation whether we make this friend our agreeable companion. Let our words and actions be such that it will have no cause to write bitter things against us. * D. N. SMITH.

—The true christian ought to be the bravest of men, for a good conscience and a consciousness of divine protection takes away all thought of fear. He ought to be brave in battling against all forms of evil in the world, brave in contending for the right even when he stands alone.

THE EVER FLOWING FOUNTAIN.

The most remarkable fountains in the world are those which the Emperor of France has in the garden of his palace, at Versailles, near Paris. These fountains are very large, and when in full play throw several hundred jets or streams of water at once. It cost several millions of dollars to make these fountains, and every time they play, which, however, is only on particular occasions, they cost ten thousand francs, or two thousand dollars.

There is a costlier fountain. It is filled with blood. It was opened for sin and for uncleanness. It was opened at a greater expense than all the fountains of earth combined. From the wounded side of Jesus, the Son of God, it began to flow, and has continued to flow for more than eighteen hundred years, and will never cease to flow until the last sinner is saved.

This fountain is not opened only on particular occasions, nor at certain seasons. It is always accessible. It has never ceased to flow for a single moment. It is always full. The stream which flows from it is always the same. What it did for the apostles it will do for you.

It flows for all. Dr. Kane found it all unfrozen amidst the icebergs of the Frigid Sea. Dr. Livingstone found it all undried and flowing freely through the burning plains of Africa.

Come to the fountain. Come with all your sins. Come with all your uncleanness Come with all your wounds. It will wash you, quench your thirst, heal your wounded spirit, refresh and strengthen you. Come with the simple, only plea that it was opened for you. Come and wash in its purple flood, and be made every whit whole.

It is freely opened. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price." COME!—S. S. Times.

KILLING TICKS ON SHEEP.—All concur that dipping the lambs into a decoction of tobacco, strong enough to kill ticks, is the most effectual mode of removing these parasites from the flock. The time of our correspondents' dipping them, varies from two or three days, to two weeks after shearing the dams. We prefer the latter time, so that all the ticks on the ewes shall have had time to get (as they will) on the lambs.

TO KEEP MEAT FRESH.—Simply immerse it in buttermilk. This will keep it for several days, when the milk should be changed, and fresh milk substituted. In this way, beef, veal, &c., can be kept for several weeks, and it will be as sweet and fresh at the end of that time as when first put in.

MOTHS.—A small piece of paper or linen, moistened with spirits of turpentine, and put into a bureau or wardrobe for a single day, two or three times a year, is a good protection against moths.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

"TRY! TRY!"

"Ho! Stop the train! Ho! Ho! shouted Sam Fuller and his little sister, as she held up her arms and he flourishing his cap, to attract the attention of the engineer. But why did they wish to stop the train? Did they want to travel by it? I will tell you as well as I can remember the story:

Samuel's parents lived in a cottage some little distance from a small town, and not far from a wood, where blackberries grew in great abundance in the autumn. One fine morning he asked his mother to permit him and Jennie to take the basket and go and gather blackberries. She gave her consent, but particularly cautioned them as they would have to cross the railway to get to the wood, to look up and down the line and see that no train was coming. This they promised to do, and went on their way singing as they went. When they came to the railway they looked first up, then down the line as they had promised.

"What's that?" said Samuel, "I do think its something across the rails; let's run and see." They ran a few yards, and then they saw that an old tree had fallen on the rails, blocking up the way. "Oh dear," said he, "what shall we do? The train will soon be here, and the people, perhaps, will all be killed."

"Let us run and tell them to stop," said Jenny.

"But they won't stop for us," said her brother; "they'll think we are making fun of them, and they wont see the tree until they have turned the corner of the wood."

"Let us try! oh, do let us try," said the little girl; and they did try. They ran up the line as far as they could to meet the train, shouting and holding up their arms. The driver of the train was looking ahead, and seeing the earnest and excited actions of the little ones—for the noise made by the engine prevented his hearing their shouts—he thought there must be something wrong, and shutting off the steam, brought the train to a stand-still just in time to prevent a serious accident.

Several of the passengers got out of the cars to assist in removing the tree, and before they proceeded on their journey, all were loud in their thanks to Samuel and his sister for the very great service they had rendered them. One old gentleman said, "How lucky that little boy saw the fallen tree and saved us from injury!"

"Nay," replied a widow, who heard the remark, "don't say it was 'lucky,' sir, but say"—and she fondly pressed to her bosom her two fatherless children, who were travelers with her,—"how good it was of our Father in heaven to send the dear children this way, and put into their hearts to try, to save us from accident." And the widow was right.

It seemed a very hopeless thing, didn't it, to attempt to stop the train? but none of us know what we can do until we "TRY."

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

My dear children, some months ago I read an account of a poor man who was shut up in prison, and I wish to tell you something about him. When he was a little boy, he yielded to temptation, and did a great many wrong things, and kept on doing wrong things until he became a man; and at last he did something so very wicked that he was put into jail; and when he had been tried, the Judge said that he must be sent to the state's prison for life. Was not this very sad? Poor man! he could no longer hear the pleasant voices of his friends; he could not see the blue sky or the pretty flowers, neither could he walk abroad in the lovely green fields, to listen to the sweet notes of the little birds—but all day long he was confined in the dark gloomy prison, lonely, sad, and sick.

One day a kind christian gentleman went to see this poor man, to tell him about the tender, loving Savior, and to beg him to come to this dear Savior, and pray to him to help him repent of his sins, that he might become the child of God, and be happy. After the gentleman had talked awhile about Jesus, he spoke to the poor man about his mother; and at the very mention of her name, he burst into tears, saying, "Oh, my dear, dear mother! She used to teach me to read the Bible and to pray. My parents were christians!"

"Then," said the gentleman, "if your parents feared God, and taught you to pray, why is it that you are thus shut up in this gloomy prison?"

"Oh!" said the poor man, "I can answer you in one short sentence, "I did not obey my parents."

Now, my dear children, remember this, "Obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right."—Eph. 6: 1.—Herald of Peace.

SOWING LITTLE SEEDS.

Little Bessie had got a present of a new book, and she eagerly opened it to look at the first picture. It was the picture of a boy sitting by the side of a stream, and throwing seeds into the water.

"I wonder what this picture is about?" said she; "Why does the boy throw seeds in the water?"

"O, I know," said her brother Edward, who had been looking at the book; "he is sowing the seeds of the water-lilies."

"But how small the seeds look!" said Bessie. "I seems strange that such large plants should grow from such little things."

"You are just sowing such tiny seeds every day, Bessie, and they will come up large, strong plants after a while," said her father.

"O no, father; I have not planted any seeds for a long while."

Bessie looked puzzled, and her father smiled and said, "Yes, I have watched you planting flowers, and seeds and weeds to-day."

"Now I know that you are joking, for I would not plant ugly weeds."

"I will tell you what I mean. When you laid aside that interesting book, and attended to what your mother wished done, you were sowing seeds of kindness and love. When you broke the dish that you knew your mother valued, and came instantly and told her, you were sowing seeds of truth. When you took the cup of cold water to the poor woman at the gate, you were sowing the seeds of mercy. These are all beautiful flowers, Bessie. But I hope my little girl has been planting the great tree of 'love to God,' and that she will tend to watch it until its branches reach the skies and meet before the throne."

WATCHING ONE'S SELF.

"When I was a boy," said an old man, "we had a schoolmaster who had odd ways of catching idle boys. One day he called to us. "Boys, I must have closer attention to your books. The first one of you that sees another boy idle, I want you to inform me, and I will attend to the case."

"Ah!" I thought to myself, "there is Joe Simmonds, that I don't like. I'll watch him; and, if I see him look off his book, I'll tell." It was not long before I saw Joe look off his book; and immediately I informed the master.

"Indeed!" said he. "How did you know he was idle?"

"I saw him," said I.

"You did! And were your eyes on your book when you saw him?"

I was caught; and I never watched for idle boys again.

If we are sufficiently watchful over our own conduct, we shall have but little time to find fault with the conduct of others.

READ AN HOUR A DAY.

There was a lad who, at fourteen, was apprenticed to a soap-boiler. One of his resolutions was to read an hour a day, or at least at that rate, and he timed himself by an old silver watch left him by his uncle. He stayed seven years with his master, and when he was twenty-one he knew as much as the young squire did. Now let us see how much time he had to read in seven years, at the rate of one hour each day. It would be 2,555 hours, which, at the rate of eight reading hours per day, would be equal to 310 days; equal to forty-five weeks; equal to eleven months—nearly a year's reading.

HOW NATURAL.

A little boy was once in a complaining mood. His dinner did not suit him, so his father made that right; then his cup did not suit him, so one was brought that did; then his chair was not right, and father took him in his lap, saying: "Are you all right now?" He looked around the room, and seeing the cat crossing the floor with tail erect, he said, in a vexed voice, "There! the old cat's tail sticks up!" and burst out crying. The old cat's tail was, in his case, the straw that broke the camel's back, but many of the complaints of older persons are just about as reasonable.

ADVICE TO YOUTH.—Live as long as you may, the first twenty years form the greater part of your life. They appear so when they are passing, they appear to have been so when we look back to them; and they take up more room in our memory than all the years that succeed them. If this be so, how important that they should be passed in planting good principles, cultivating good tastes, and strengthening good habits; fleeing from all those pleasures which lay up bitterness and sorrow for all time to come. Take good care of the first twenty years of your life, and you may hope that the last twenty years will take good care of you.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE FORMER THINGS ARE PASSED AWAY."

There's a land of rest for the weary,
A home where all are glad,
Where the heart that is lone and dreary,
Will never more be sad;

Where no ties will ever be riven,
No farewells spoken there;
No sad, suffering one at even
Will sigh for morning there.

No longing there for the voices
Whose tones are heard no more,
For the dear familiar faces
That come not to our door.

No graves in that land of glory,
No death-bed scenes are there;
No march to the cemetery
To bury the young and fair.

No orphans weeping and friendless,
No widowed hearts are there;
No wanderer lone and homeless,
No want or woe or care.

Oh, it will be a world of splendor,
Where skies are ever bright,
Where no storm-clouds e'er will gather,
To dim the pure sunlight.

We may speak of freedom from sadness,
From sorrow and from sin,
But to tell of the joy and gladness
Would take an angel's pen.

All this, poor helpless mortal,
Thy Savior hath bought for thee,
He hath passed through death's dark portal
To set the prisoner free.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

DEGREES OF PUNISHMENT.

A very common and ready objection to the equity and righteousness of death, as the Bible penalty of sin, is the seeming equality of the punishment. It is said there is no gradation in the penalty as there is in the offence; that men very unequally wicked, are treated exactly alike in the retribution, and that there is a principle of in-equitableness in such a system of administration, which must be incompatible with the justice of God. Well, let us give this objection a little looking at, and see if it is valid.

The wicked are all to be destroyed indeed, and the destruction is everlasting. So far, they all fare alike in being all eternally dead. And yet, if we consider a little, we shall see how the punishment of death, with its attending circumstances, may vary very greatly in gravity to the condemned. First, and yet perhaps, not most valuable as a true solution of the fancied difficulty, is the fact that the physical agony of the lost may differ both in intensity and duration. Nothing would be more feasible, certainly, as an incident of the perdition prior to its accomplishment. We make no allegations. A wise man would beware of venturing assertions where the Bible is reticent. When addressed with the inquiry, how much longer or more sorely is an outrageous sinner to suffer than one of less heinous and culpable character, of course we reply, we neither know, nor know how to know, for God has not told us. (We except from the account the judgment of the devil in revelation.)

We are perfectly certain that great variations in the intensity of suffering are possible. A resurrection body far more acutely sensitive in one case than another, is a possible realization to the culprit called to judgment. Still all questions of differing and excessive susceptibilities to pain, are things of conjecture only, and not of knowledge. So much for the incident of physical pain, with the memorized item that not physical pain, but death is the revealed penalty of sin. With the in-evitable end of life, sin and pain must also come to an end.

Second. But how then is the objection answered yet? Let us look further. With death ensues the loss of inconceivably glorious, and once perfectly possible and oft proffered opulence, honor, and fruition of immortal joys. And these were the inalienable attachments of perfect and immortal life. O, unspeakable and immeasurable loss! Tell me, if you can, the consternation and agony of that man who sees all this interminable extent and swelling aggregate of blessed wonders, lost by the most wretched infatuation and reckless neglect. Is death no penalty of adequate severity, when it compels this loss, and when the summits of glory but glitter a moment, to the view of him who failed of all by his own fault, and who takes in one terrible glance, the measure of the forfeited estate? Is it needful for eternal duration to drink into its abyss his interminable knowledge, when a few moments of such horrified consciousness, are filled with a panorama of infinite treasure sacrificed to folly?

Along with the uniform and sweeping penalty of death there are a thousand gradations of loss. The man of intellect and wealth has sinned transcendently in robbing his God of the service he owed. Had he been wise and true to his privilege and responsibility, he had gained glorious trophies for Jesus. He had failed, and so he fails of the highest dignities of heaven, it may be. The judgment will unfold the dreadful folly of great powers debased, perverted, and wasted. If he who was so endowed was a more guilty fool than his less favored neighbor, so also he will become by far the more signal loser.

Third. Some men's shame and mortification will be greater on other grounds. Take the perfect worldling, who lives only to aggrandize himself. With a scent as keen as the vulture's, he has flapped the air with the pinions of his ambition after gain. He is rooted in the earth. His home, his love, his hope, his labor and laying up are all here. He feeds and fattens on the aliment which serves his sordid appetites. Is he not a greater sinner than a poor man who loves the world less intensely, and seeks its baubles less keenly? He lives as if he were to live forever, and that right where death is a perpetual monitor, and in spite of the protestations of religion against so great impiety. Is the transgressor rooted here? He shall be rooted out. Judged and rejected by how much he has been the greater sinner, will he be more sorely mortified and disappointed.

In a word, every higher vault of ambition will have a greater fall. Every intenser love of vanity will have a sorer mortification. Every stouter struggle and intenser rivalry of pride will meet a more deadly and dreadful rebuff. Every more violent passion, or longing avarice will be more fatally crucified with the day that brings in that great fiery flood, in which all the unhallowed lusts and loves, joys and hopes of men shall be drowned.

Fourth. Incidental to the dreadful doom of everlasting death, is the awful ordeal of the judgment. Here are arraigned the countless multitudes overhung with the frowning menace of a broken law. Here stand the characters stained with every shade and grade of crime, sinners of every record and enormity of guilt, without any excuse or shelter, penetrated with the light which reaches to the most hidden thought, and searches up the most recondite or shrinking imagination and act of the past. Conceive who can, the strictness, the severity, the terrible thoroughness of this inquisition. Thronged with the crushing recollections of innumerable misdeeds, the wretched myriads, in speechless confusion, or with unavailing appeals to the virtue of outwardly good acts, await their fate. Their dreadful memories are as various as the thousand differences of known wickedness among men. All are alike condemned, but not all with terror equally intensified. There are degrees of guilt, and these are exactly represented by those memories revived, for which no law of justification by faith can now furnish solace, or bring a sweet and everlasting solution in peace.

It is needless to continue. The contrasts or gradations are obvious. One thing is certain: there will not be wanting in the least any or every varying severity of punishment, which a Judge both wise and just may decree, or the occasion itself comprehend. But of all this we know nothing in detail by revelation. Jesus will judge the wicked by his own word, and by the law, whose fixed and imperative penalty is death.

But some are not satisfied with this. They demand through the inculcations of their theological doctrine, the penalty of suffering forever. They know not what they say or do. They plead the tremendous exactions of eternal justice, forgetting the positive penalty justice has explicitly set beforehand, and also the very simple truth, so simple a child can understand, that your proud son of outcast Adam is not immortal in the smallest drop of blood, fibre of muscle, atom of cerebrum, molecule of bone, vapor of breath, or in anything whatever under heaven that constitutes or inheres in man, or any part of him. O, what a simple solution of terrible mysteries is this single, simple truth. Would to God that men would receive it. But they are snared with the fiction of the fiend, and know it not. Blessed be God, we can see and feel and believe that there is nothing wanting to meet and testify the majesty of the law, in the premonished reality of death as the penalty of sin, a penalty as immutable as heaven, and as inevitable as fate. God Jehovah is Master of the situation. The Lord Jesus Christ will come in glory and sit upon his own throne.

That death is an adequate penalty, will be one day realized. Do those who deny it receive in their minds the full magnitude of it? Is there nothing superficial in their survey? Have they thought earnestly, patiently, profoundly on such a matter, or with only a hasty, sidelong glance? The eye blurred with looking at the sun, sees all things thereafter for the time darkly, or with films and discolorations. It may not be the best possible illustration, but may serve as a hint to show how gazing into the flames of an eternal hell of torment may disable the eye from measuring the darkness and silence of that everlasting night which shall succeed the perdition, or burning of the wicked. Death is dreadful enough. Let us not multiply or parade circumstances purely fictitious, in the view of a burning that never can end, because the life enclosed in it can not expire; because the intelligence can not be extinct, nor the creature destroyed. A fire burning for ever, because it can not accomplish the work of fire, burning on in an everlasting failure, unless the specific end be torture! Is this the will of God? Is it a Divine fiat, or a Bible fact?

Let the thoughtless sinner pause and think. Let him dread the certain and merited end of sin, which shall be the end of life, and all that is good or glad or hoped for in life. Let him pause on the brink of the gulf. Let him hesitate before he step off the verge. Let him draw back from the mighty, dread abyss. Let him turn to God and live.

Dec. 1st, 1868. C. COLEGROVE.

ADVENTISM—"IS IT FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?"

The chief priests and elders came to Jesus as he was teaching and said, "By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?" Instead of a direct reply, the Lord asked them in regard to the baptism of John: "Whence was it? from heaven or of men?" If the priests failed to answer this question, they could not have their question answered. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, "If we shall say From heaven, he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? But if we shall say, Of men, we fear the people: for all hold John as a prophet." So they replied, "We cannot tell."

There is a great weekly paper published in America, which claims to be one of the oldest and the very greatest religious weeklies in the world. From an intimate acquaintance of many years with this New York Observer, I think I can give a fair and unprejudiced view of at least one of its departments. The Observer professes to be free from all sectarianism, and gives a weekly report from nearly all denominations. Glancing at this department you will see Presbyterian. Episcopal, Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, German Reformed, Lutheran, Roman Catholic, Mormon, Unitarian, Universalist, and various other sects mentioned, but Adventism, never!

I have noticed this studied silence for years, and have sometimes given a passing thought as to why it is that all other sects good or bad (in the opinion of the Observer) are mentioned, while Adventists are never alluded to, at least under the head of this department. It cannot be on account of the smallness of their numbers, for some of the sects to which they often allude are less numerous than Adventists. It cannot be on account of the errors of doctrine, for some of those reported are regarded as utterly unchristian or antichristian by the editors of the Observer. It cannot be because there are no periodicals at hand, from which to derive a report of the progress of the cause. The number of such periodicals, and the extent of their aggregate circulation, would surprise some of those who think there are but few interested in this subject. Then why is it that Adventism is never mentioned? Is there a Gamaliel in the councils of the Observer, who says, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone, ... lest haply ye be found even to fight against God"? This cannot be the reason of this silence; for a report of progress drawn from the organs of the denomination would not necessarily either approve or disapprove of our views.

I will not here venture to guess at the true reason, but would ask the Observer itself to give a fair, candid and correct answer from its own stand-point.

But the question which is most pertinent and of greatest moment is this: "Is this doctrine from heaven or of men?" The doctrine of the second coming of Christ is evidently a Bible doctrine. Let any honest Bible student contrast the Scriptural evidence of this doctrine, and weigh that evidence in the balance with that of the immortality of the soul, and the endless torments of the lost, and then decide which has the best right to the title of Bible doctrine. Also weigh the evidence of the conscious state of the dead, with the Bible evidence against that view, and decide impartially whether Adventists have not a sure foundation, even the Eternal Rock, upon which they can rest their faith. Adventism, in short, is the Bible itself—nothing more, nothing less. We pledge ourselves as Adventists to receive the whole Bible, to believe it, obey it, and eventually to stand or fall with it. Fairly disprove from the Bible, correctly interpreted, either of our doctrines, and we hold ourselves ready to renounce that doctrine.

"Bring forth your strong reasons," and show us if you can the better way. It may be easy to pick up here and there a palpable error held by one or more individuals among us—for we admit there is a great diversity of opinion on minor points; but the sum and substance of Adventism is the Bible truth in its primitive purity. Heresies among Adventists no more disprove this than did heresies in apostolic times disprove the truth of the Gospel.

In conclusion, we affirm that no man can be an Adventist, strictly and correctly speaking, unless he is in the truest and highest sense a Christian. It is possible for a man to "believe and tremble" as the demons do. But to look for the speedy personal coming of Christ, and long for it with love unfeigned, at once proves a man to be both an Adventist and a Christian. We conclude by repeating the question at the head of this article: "ADVENTISM—Is it from heaven or of men?"

CHRISTIAN STABILITY.

We live in a time when firmness and decision of Christian character is very much needed by those who are called into the army of the true and living God; when every soldier of the cross needs on the whole gospel armor, and to stand firmly and boldly at his post of duty.

When a ruler sends out an army to meet a foe, he expects his men to be firm and true, ever at their post; ever ready to obey the commands of their superiors; ever watching for the approach of the enemy; ever ready to repel him in every instance.

So with the soldiers of Jesus; we should ever be on the watch for the approach of the enemies of his cause and of our souls.

We are living in a time when wickedness abounds; when the enemies of the cross are bold, even defiant, attacking the cause of truth on every side. It needs continual watching to keep the enemy out of our own hearts. He is ever on the alert, ever seeking how he may gain access to our hearts, and so set us in array against the cause of our Lord. Let our faith be strong and unwavering in the Lord and his truth. Let us quit ourselves like men in this great and glorious cause. Let us be valiant for Jesus, fighting the good fight of faith, keeping on the whole armor, armed with the weapons Jesus gives us. Let us be strong in the Lord, ever trusting in him and his word. Jesus is our great Captain. He will lead us on to victory, and we shall overcome all our enemies, and gain the glorious inheritance in a little while.

But to do this we must be bold and firm, decided in our course of action; standing firmly at our post, facing the foe, attacking his strong holds. The battle will soon be won, the enemy routed, the victory won. Then let us not faint or fall out by the way, but keep in the ranks, marching steadily on till we reach the promised land.

We are hastening on to that day of days, when wickedness will be done away; when those that do wickedly will be destroyed from the face of the earth, together with Satan, the instigator and father of it. Now he is employing every agency in his power to drive the men of God from their post; but soon he will be powerless and all his agencies at an end; the true and faithful soldiers of the cross will receive their final reward, and reign with their noble Captain and Redeemer for ever. Soon the warfare will end. Then on, with courage, a few days more. Stand up boldly for Jesus and his cause, till he comes to judge the world, destroy his enemies, and take his ransomed ones home.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER TWO.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 JOHN 3: 8.

3. The devil the author of death.

It is a fact too clearly stated in the Scriptures for any one to deny, that the devil is the author of death. The apostle says: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men." Rom. 5: 12. Now, as the devil is the author of sin, and sin is the cause of death, we find that it was by means of the devil that death was introduced into this world. But in Heb. 2: 14, we read that Christ will "destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." As, therefore, the devil is the author of the Adamic death, all who die in this world in consequence of sin entering it, must be made alive by or through Christ, as stated in 1 Cor. 15: 22,—"For as in [by or through] Adam all die, even so in [by or through] Christ shall all be made alive." It does not say that all shall have "life"; but all will be "made alive." "Life" is a noun; "made alive" is a verb. And this verb made alive is from the Greek yoopoieo, and is the same word that is rendered "is quickened" in the thirty-sixth verse. This same word is also rendered "quickeneth" in John 5: 21; and in 1 Tim. 6: 13, "quickeneth all things," etc.

Now as Christ is not the author of death, but the "author of life" (Acts 3: 15), he will destroy the death of which the devil is now the author; and also the devil himself, as the apostle says, "He also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2: 14.) Here, again, our rule of nine words exactly applies.

4. Christ the Savior of all men.

In proof of this, that all men will be saved from the Adamic death, we give the following from 1 Tim. 4: 10:—"For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe." Again in Heb. 5: 8, 9,—"Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." So we see that Christ is the "Savior of all men [from the Adamic death], especially of those that believe." All will be saved from the first death; but to those who "believe," and serve the Lord fully, to such he will impart an especial salvation; which will not only be a salvation from the Adamic death, but it will be an "eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

Thus we learn how Christ is the Savior of all men from the death which the devil introduced into this world; and hence, how he will be the destruction of "the works of the devil" in this particular also. This proves that the wicked dead, who die in consequence of Adam's transgression, must live (the verb) again from that death, in consequence or by means of Christ. But they must die again for their own sins; because they can never be in any other way rewarded for their own sins, as the "wages of sin is death." But they must, according to Peter's testimony, "utterly perish in their own corruption."

Here, then, is more proof that the wicked dead must have a resurrection—must live again from the first death—and then be destroyed "soul and body" in the gehenna fire; and so "the rule of nine words" appears here also.

Although the wicked are now in hades, they will not always remain there; for the Lord will "destroy both soul and body in gehenna fire." Matt. 10: 28. Now, as gehenna fire, for the wicked, does not as yet exist, the wicked must be raised from hades, or they can never be destroyed soul and body in gehenna fire. This view is in harmony with Job 21: 30, which declares that the wicked "shall be brought forth to the day of wrath"; that is, they will be brought forth from hades, and destroyed in gehenna.

This passage in Job does not say—"the day of wrath came to them and brought destruction," as a late writer on this point has asserted; but it says that "they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." This is the same as taught in Rev. 20: 13, 14:—"Death and hades delivered up the dead," and "they were cast into the lake of fire." This does not say, as the same late writer above alluded to asserts—"that the wicked are left in death and sink to gehenna!" To deliver up from hades, is quite different from sinking down through the bottom of hades "to gehenna"! We must believe Job, who says, "They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." This is in perfect harmony with the language of Christ in John 5: 28, 29:—"All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; . . . they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

Lynn, Mass. T. M. PREBLE.

BAPTISM.

The following is a part of a sermon reported in the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 19th, 1868. It was delivered in the Christian Church, Sabbath evening, Oct. 18th, by Elder J. S. Sweeney. It is worthy of a careful reading.—ED.

What is baptism? That is, what is the thing done when a person is baptized? I shall endeavor to do little more than to state as fairly and distinctly as I may be able, the question, the positions of parties to it, and what is claimed and what conceded by those parties.

The word baptize is not strictly an English word, but a Greek word, merely Anglicised and transferred, rather than translated into the English version of the Bible. What then, is the meaning of this word translated into English? In other words, has the Greek word baptize a competent representative among the words of the English language? I believe it has, and that immerse is that representative. To the question, What is baptism? I answer, simply immersion. Herein I agree with all Baptists. We constitute one party to the question. Our position, whether correct or not, has certainly the merit of being simply unequivocal. It can be understood by any one. Baptism is simply immersion—no more, no less. On the other hand, Pedobaptists, so called, give no definite answer to this question. They never define the word baptize, but claim that baptism is something, just what I have never been able to learn from them, and that immersion, pouring and sprinkling are all equally valid modes of administering this same thing. I mean only to say this is true of Pedobaptists in this country, and at the present day. And, holding and practicing as they do, how can they afford to define the word baptize? Suppose they were to say it means immerse, what Scripture authority would then remain for pouring and sprinkling as they do? And, were they to say it means pour, then, what authority would they have for immersing and sprinkling? And again, were they to define it sprinkle, then they would be left without any sufficient authority for immersing and pouring. The fact is, if they define this word at all, they must give it a definition broad enough to cover their whole practice; and, should they define it to mean immerse, pour and sprinkle—and nothing short of this will cover their whole practice—then they would have to immerse, pour and sprinkle one before they could claim to have him fully baptized. Or, should they define it to mean immerse, or pour, or sprinkle, then they would not only involve themselves in a most palpable absurdity, but would fall under the necessity of informing us when it has one and when another of these opposite meanings. Thus we see why it is that they never define this word. What they are pleased to style "liberal practice" will admit of no sharp definitions. But this I deem a sufficient and a fair statement of the positions of the parties to the question under discussion.

Next, I will notice what is claimed and what conceded by the parties in the controversy. Immersionists claim that in classic Greek literature the word baptize is invariably used so as to involve the idea of immerse—that in every instance of its occurrence in Greek literature it must, if translated at all, be translated into immerse or some of its English equivalents, in order to make sense of the passage in which it stands. A small volume, entitled "Baptizien; its meaning and use," published by the American Bible Union, contains, it is claimed by the learned author (Dr. Conant) all the instances of the occurrence of this word in classic Greek—by an examination of which the English scholar even may satisfy himself that it has this uniform meaning. And pedobaptist scholars very generally concede that the word does usually have this sense in classic Greek. They claim, however, it is just to say, that it sometimes means dye, wash, stain, etc. But, so far as known to me, no scholar has ever translated it either pour or sprinkle. Justice requires, also, the further statement, that Pedobaptists very generally claim that in the New Testament this word is used in a peculiar, and therefore not in its classic sense. This I deem a fair statement of what is claimed and what conceded as to the use of the word baptize.

All the Greek lexicons of any note define this word to mean immerse, or what is equivalent to it, and very generally give this as its primary meaning, not one of them, so far as I know, defining it to mean pour or sprinkle. They do, however, I cheerfully admit, give also, wash, dye, stain, and so forth, as meanings of the word, but they very generally give these as secondary meanings, and I think very properly. Some of them are so careful as to say it has these meanings only by consequence. We will notice an example or two. Bailey says: "Baptism, in strictness of speech, is that kind of washing which consists in dipping, and when applied to the christian institution, so called, it was used by the primitive christians in no other sense than that of dipping." Dr. Scott's edition of 1772. Alstedius says: "Baptism, to baptize, signifies only to immerse, not to wash, except by consequence." These lexicographers, too, were Pedobaptists and of course inclined to favor their own practice as far as their honor and reputation as scholars would permit them to; yet when they gave wash as a meaning of baptize, they were careful to say it has such a meaning only by consequence. How the word has these consequential meanings it is easy to see. Baptize means wash just in the same sense that the English word immerse does. Anything immersed may be washed, dyed or stained, as a consequece of the immersion; whether washed, dyed or stained depending upon the character of the element in which the immersion is performed. By metonymy the consequence of an action may be put for the action itself. In this way we frequently put wash, dye, stain, and so forth, for the English word dip. When a dyer dips an article into the dye we say he dyes it, when, in strictness of speech, he only dips it, and, as a consequence, the article is dyed. And when the washer dips an article into the water we say he washes it, when in fact he only dips it, and the consequence is that the article is washed. But who would, therefore, conclude that dye or wash is the real meaning of the English word dip? Certainly, not even a small schoolboy. It would be a wonderful word to mean really and primarily to wash, and also precisely the opposite, to dye! These opposite ideas can only be attached to the word by metonymy.

The question then arises, Are we to take the word baptize, in the New Testament, in this secondary, consequential sense? or shall we take it in its primary, usual, and most known signification? The Bible, we know, gives no special rules for the interpretation of its words. When the Savior commanded that men should be baptized, he gave no intimation that he used this word in any other than its usual significance. If he had used this word, or any other words, in a peculiar sense, without giving any clue to the fact, his language would have been a deception, instead of a revelation of duty. I conclude, therefore, that we must accept and interpret this word, when used in the New Testament, by the ordinary rules of interpretation. And I refer to a rule given by Sir William Blackstone, in his well-known commentaries: "Words of a law are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification, not so much regarding the propriety of grammar as their general and popular use." This rule of interpretation carries common sense upon its very surface. It affirms just what is sensible and true. It is a rule by which both translators and interpreters must be governed, the only exception being in cases where the circumstances of its use demand for a word a secondary meaning, to preserve the sense and congruity of the passage in which it occurs.

As, therefore, the word baptize stands in the New Testament without any express qualification, we must accept it in its current, usual, and most known signification at the time it was used—which confessedly was immerse—unless the sense or congruity of Scripture language will suffer by a literal translation of it. In the record of John's administration of this rite we will notice a few passages: "And there went out to him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan." "Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee and was baptized by John in Jordan." "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." And again: "And John was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there." To read were immersed of him in the river, makes good sense. Between this rendering of the word and the fact that the baptizing was done in the river, there is no incongruity; while to substitute either pour or sprinkle for baptize will destroy the sense and congruity of the language. Poured in the river of him!—that is, the people were "poured in the river" of John—would be rather an awkward, not to say absurd reading. And to say Jesus was immersed in Jordan of John, conveys sense, and between such reading and the fact that Jesus "when he was baptized went up straightway out of the water," there is no such palpable incongruity as is created by the substitution of either pour or sprinkle.

Why was John baptizing in Enon near to Salim? "Because there was much water there," the Scripture says. For immersing, much water is a necessity, while for pouring or sprinkling a very little will suffice. Observe, it is not said John was preaching there because there was much water there, but he was baptizing there on that account. In other words, the fact that there was much water there is given as a reason why John was baptizing in Enon near Salim.

In the book of Acts of Apostles we have a very remarkably circumstantial case recorded. "And as they [Philip and the eunuch] went on their way they came unto a certain water, and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? . . . And they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him; and when they had come up out of the water," etc. Here we learn that in order to baptism both the administrator and the candidate went down into the water, and that when the baptising was performed, they came up out of the water. Do these circumstances of the Scripture use of baptism demand for it a secondary rather than its primary meaning?

The allusions to baptism in Paul's epistles are such as clearly imply immersion. "Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism."—Rom. 6: 4. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him."—Col. 2: 12. "Having our hearts sprinkled [from] an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 22. I say these allusions clearly imply immersion. Will pouring or sprinkling answer the demands of these passages? Certainly not. Then, we find that the use of the word in the New Testament—the circumstances of the performance of the rite, the references to it in the Epistles, and the explanation of its significance, require its primary sense, and will not admit of a secondary one. And this primary sense is confessedly immerse.

Down to the middle of the last century it was very generally admitted by Pedobaptists themselves that baptize means immerse; that our Lord instituted immersion; that the apostles practised it exclusively; that the church knew nothing else for baptism till the middle of the third century.

HISTORICAL.

Having given in article No. 1 the outline history, in brief, of the rise and development of "the two houses of Israel" (i. e., "Judah and Israel," or, "David and Ephraim"), and the captivities of Israel, we now proceed to give the different captivities of Judah, or the "house of David," from which our Lord, Jesus of Nazareth, descended according to the flesh.

The first of Judah's three captivities was but partial, and happened during the reign of Ahaz, son of Jotham, and twelfth king of Judah. Imitating the kings of Israel and Samaria in sacrificing to idols, and consecrating to them one of his sons, making him pass through the fire in honor to Moloch, he soon began to experience the results of such disorderly work in his kingdom; for God's threatened judgments against any departure from his prescribed rule of service were literally fulfilled, in sending against Ahaz the combined forces of Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, who defeated his forces in a pitched battle, and then laid siege to Jerusalem. 2 Chron. 28: 5; 2 Kings 16: 1–5; Isa. 7: 1.

Being unable to reduce and gain possession of it, they raised the siege, divided their forces, and, invading and plundering the low country, they carried everything before them, taking prisoners everywhere, after which Rezin and his army retired to Damascus, carrying all their spoil with them. But Pekah, king of Israel, having killed in one battle 120,000 of Ahaz's army, then proceeded to capture prisoners, and taking 200,000 persons, of all ages and both sexes, he started with these captives, to Samaria. But the prophet Oded, accompanied by the most influential citizens of the city, went to meet the captors, and by their remonstrances finally prevailed on them to liberate their prisoners and restore the spoil, sending the infirm and sick back to Jericho in carriages, the remainder going on foot. 2 Chron. 28; 2 Kings 16, Isa. 7.

One thing worthy of note here transpired during these disturbances. When Isaiah was sent to Ahaz (7: 3–16), and told him that Rezin and Pekah should eventually be defeated, and that within sixty-five years Ephraim (i. e., the ten tribes) should be broken and "be not a people"; and if Ahaz would not believe it, neither should he be established; he then told Ahaz to ask for any sign in heaven or in earth; but declining this, lest he should seem to tempt God, the prophet proceeded to give a sign from the Lord. A sign for what? Answer. To prove that Judah or the house of David should be established; and he gave (to Judah) the sign of a virgin bringing forth a son (verses 14, 15), and in confirmation of this to Ahaz, Isaiah told him that before his own son ("this child," instead of "the child," i. e., Shear-jashub) should know to refuse the evil and choose the good, the land abhorred by Ahaz should lose both her kings, which was the case, as shown in 2 Kings 15: 30, and 16: 9, where the death of Pekah, king of Israel, by the hand of Hoshea son of Elah, and the death of Rezin, king of Syria, by Tiglath-pileser, is recorded.

Much confusion is produced in many minds by confounding Syria and Assyria together. There was Syria of Damascus, of Zobah, or Corle or hollow Syria, of Maacah, of Rho, or Rhecab, of Tob, or Ish-tob or the land of Tob, or of the Tubieni of the Maccabees, and Syria of Emath or Hamath, comprehending the country lying between the Euphrates on the east, the Mediterranean west, Cilicia north, and Phenicia, Judea, and the Arabian desert south. Then there was Syria of the two rivers, which is the same as Mesopotamia of Syria, situated between the Tigris and Euphrates, called also Padan-aram, or the plains of Aram; or Sedearam, and the fields of Aram. This Mesopotamia of Syria was after the time of the Judges seized by the Assyrians, whose country lies between Media, Mesopotamia, Armenia and Babylon. On our modern atlases it is now laid down and known as Kurdistan,—lying east of the Euphrates; consequently when Esdras (13: 35-50) speaks of the "ten tribes" leaving Assyria and crossing the Euphrates, they could not have gone north-east, as some suppose, since they were already north-east of that river, and in order to cross it they must have gone south-west or west.

The prophet Isaiah in that seventh chapter begins a prophetic discourse concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which continues unbroken to the thirteenth chapter, embracing both advents, and the future of Israel, Judah and Gentile; a more comprehensive historic discourse (written beforehand) than which it is difficult to find in the entire Bible. Study it.

—To allow yourself deliberately to sit down satisfied with any imperfect conditions in religion, and to look upon a more complete or improved state of it as what you do not desire, nay, as what you secretly resolve you will not pursue, is one of the most fatal signs we can imagine, that you are an entire stranger to the first principles of it.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1869.

Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DISCUSSIONS.

We are to have a discussion in Dubuque Iowa, commencing Jan. 19th, to continue till Friday evening, Jan. 22nd. Our opponent is Mr. J. S. Sweeney, pastor of the Disciples' church, in Chicago. He has the reputation of being an able debater of theological questions. We expect a very interesting occasion. The discussion will probably be in the Julien Theatre.

The following are the propositions for discussion:—1. "There is in man a conscious entity, sometimes called a spirit, that remains conscious after death."

2. "The punishment of the wicked will consist in the eternal extinction of their conscious being."

January 26th we are to commence another discussion in Dansville, N. Y., with Mr. E. V. Wilson, a noted Spiritualist lecturer. He is considered by his friends in the west as second to none in the defense of Spiritualism. The discussion is to continue four or five evenings.

CHICAGO.

We have good news to give from Chicago. The Lord is reviving his work in power. We were never in better revival meetings than those we are now enjoying in this city. Some twenty-five have already found peace, and many more are under conviction for sin. We never saw brighter converts than these. They have gone to work earnestly in the vineyard of the Lord, and their labors are followed by blessed results. The interest is increasing rapidly. We have had our house crowded to its utmost capacity, and then some went away for want of room. Lawyers, doctors, ministers, and heavy business men, are becoming interested in the meetings. It reminds us of scenes we enjoyed twenty-five years ago. All who come to the meetings, who have had any experience in christianity, confess that the Spirit of the Lord is with us. This is specially manifest from the great liberty felt by the children of the Lord in prayer, exhortation and song. Young converts, only two days old, engage in public prayer for sinners, having made more progress since they started than some have made for years. Many lukewarm professors attend from the various churches, and every evening some of them cut loose from their ice-bound shores, and launch out into the work of the Lord, being stimulated by the Spirit of the Lord, and the noble example of the young converts. Some, who have been professors of religion for years, now think they were never converted before. Others say these are the best meetings they ever enjoyed. The Lord is doing wonders in our midst. Seven or eight have been converted in one boarding-house. They have prayer-meetings every night after they get home, and do not get to bed till twelve o'clock. They are earnestly at work to save others.

One young man, who has become a bright and happy convert, said he had been a gambler, and at the same time a leader of a choir in one of the city churches. He has been to ask forgiveness since his conversion. Children eight years of age, gray-headed sires, young men and women, active business men, are uniting together to seek for eternal life. The sight is most heart-cheering. One Methodist minister takes an active part in the meetings, and enjoys them much. He thinks they are like those of the early Methodists, when they enjoyed the life and power of religion. Others express themselves in the same way, but say they never saw the like before in Chicago. We have great reason to praise the Lord for what he is doing. Last evening, Jan. 12th, fourteen came forward for prayers.

Bro. Ramsey is with us to render valuable aid in the good work. The effect of the meetings is being felt in a wide circle. Pray for us.

CHICAGO CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The various churches of Chicago are now (Jan. 18th) holding a meeting in the Second Presbyterian Church, corner of Washington street and Wabash Avenue, for the purpose of devising means "to secure a general awakening of religious interest among the churches." The covention is similar in character to the National Christian Convention held in New York, last November.

The following are the topics discussed:—

1. "How may the poor be most effectually reached by the churches?"
2. "How to make the week day meetings of the churches more effectual for spiritual purposes."
3. "How can the christian activities of the entire membership of the churches be best developed?"
4. "How can the personal and social study of God's word be made more general?"
5. "How can the influence of christian homes be increased?"
6. "By what means can we reach those who do not come to our churches?"
7. "What shall we do to close the saloons on the Sabbath?"
8. "What can be done to carry the gospel to every family in the city?"
9. "Woman's work in the church."
10. "What stands in the way of a general revival of religion in Chicago?"

Some very good and practical remarks were made by various speakers of the different denominations; especially by Bro. D. L. Moody, who is justly noted for his earnest efforts to lead people to Christ. His untiring efforts are accomplishing great good. Though a lay member, but few preachers are doing as much to awaken an interest in the christian religion. It is very evident that the few live members of the churches feel conscious that something must be done soon, or Satan well secure the controlling power. They feel that these are "perilous times." Thank the Lord that some are waking up to the dangers of the hour.

THE ADVANCE is an ably conducted weekly paper, published by "The Advance Company," 25 Lombard Block, Chicago. We do not know its superior among the popular weeklies. It has a high-toned religious standard, that is rarely found at the present day. Price $2.50 a year.

We acknowledge the receipt of "Vick's Illustrated Catalogue and Floral Guide," for 1869, Rochester, N. Y. From previous acquaintance, we can speak of its practical usefulness for those who have gardens, either of flowers or vegetables.

HOW REACH THE POOR?

The time has come when the popular churches have nearly lost their influence over the poor. This fact is being observed by many good men and women in the various denominations; and there is an earnest inquiry being made, What can be done to reach the common people with the gospel of the kingdom? The following from the Chicago Daily Times, of Jan. 11th, is full of common-sense remarks:—

"This question of how the churches may reach the poor is, in its very statement, confession that the poor are not reached; but, while this unpleasant fact is admitted, there is much to praise in the determination which the question expresses, to endeavor to confer the benefit of the gospel upon those condemned to poverty. The best possible compensation for an evil, or a blunder, is a confession that it is such, and in an honest effort to remedy it.

We are of the opinion that one substantial reason why the poor are so far removed from gospel influences is, that it is so very expensive. It is the same reason, in fact, as that which prevents their keeping carriages or occupying three-story marble-fronts on the 'avenue.' Now, if some sharp business men were to come together and discuss how the poor could be best supplied with woolen blankets, it would take them only three minutes to decide that the proper way would be to either give them the blankets, or to so reduce the price as to leave them within the means of the objects of their discussion. The gospel, or preaching, or religious privileges, should be treated exactly as if they were so many woolen blankets, or pounds of tea or sugar.

To extend the church to the poor, the church must be reduced in price until it shall come within the limited means of the poorer classes. The question, then, is simply how to cheapen the church so that it can be afforded by the poor. This, we believe, is a question whose satisfactory answer is one of tremendous difficulty. The church now is one of the highest priced articles in the market. It is growing dearer year by year, so that the gap between the value of the church and the purchasing power of the poor is hourly growing wider and wider. This value of the church—we speak now more particularly of the Protestant church—is thus great for the following, among many other reasons:

The high prices required for a sitting in any church.

The number of the eleemosynary and missionary contributions levied upon the people.

Now, it is not a sufficient remedy to say that the poor man or woman need not contribute to any of these expenses; that he or she may dress plainly, and have a free seat. Poor people have more or less pride; and they shrink from sharing benefits to which they can contribute nothing, and in which they occupy the precise position of a mendicant in a county poor-house. They are, moreover, mortified by the contrast between the expensive habiliments of their richer neighbors and their own clothing. Nor will their pride permit them to attend churches which may be provided expressly for their benefit. To attend such a church is to confess their poverty, than which, in these days, a man would prefer almost to confess himself a thief. The poor man will remain away from such a church, preferring that his absence may be ascribed to irreligion, or anything, in fact, save poverty.

Having stated some of the difficulties attending this matter of getting the church to the poor, we will conclude by offering to Bro. Hatfield's consideration the following remedies:

Abolish the rental of pews, and make the pews free to all.

Require all attendants at church to dress in a plain, cheap uniform, in which the wife of the millionaire shall not be known from the seamstress with six children.

Build fewer churches, and increase their capacity.

Or, in case none of these are practicable, or any other similar one, then, let the poor slide."

COMMUNICATION FROM MOTHER EVE.

The following communication is taken from the September number of the "News from the Spirit World." It speaks for itself. It is headed "Communication from Mother Eve," and reads as follows:—

Dear readers of the News:—I am happy to announce that the old man in your Father Adam is sufficiently quelled for me to begin to be permitted to speak. Adam has always had things his own way; his notion has always prevailed ever since that memorable morning that Satan called at our garden, in Eden. I warned your father in a dream about this person sometime before, yet, when he saw him coming, he forgot it all and said, 'Eve, only look, see what a glorious visitor is coming! Run and prepare dinner for us of savory things, to please our tastes; I will entertain the guest.' Oh, how I wanted to stay and hear what Satan had to say! but loving your father, and being hospitable, I turned away the dinner to prepare. While being thus engaged, your father, having no check upon him by my presence, plotted my ruin. It has ever been the same—Adam and all our sons have turned me and my daughters out of the council rooms. I never controlled a medium before. As I get strength to come back to earth (I came very near saying Paradise,) I will tell you all about how it was with your father and I. We get along better than we used to. I shall never forget the morning when he led me down the rocks out of Paradise. I will come again soon, and will try to control this medium. Adam says he will try and control too. He is very penitent now. I pity him, and shall make it as easy as possible for him to render justice to me through this paper. It has been so long since I spoke that I do not know whether I ought to say adieu or amen."

THE FIRST CAMPMEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—A correspondent of the Worcester Gazette gives the following account of the origin and institution of campmeetings. Thinking it would be interesting to many readers of the Crisis, I forward it to you for publication. C. H. S.

"In the early summer of 1799, two well-known clergymen—one a Methodist and the other a Presbyterian, while making a journey from Tennessee to Ohio, had occasion to halt for a few days at a small Kentucky settlement on the Red river. When the Sabbath came there was only one place of worship, which was a s small Presbyterian church, and there the two brothers went to attend divine worship. It being a sacramental service, the congregation was unusually large.

"The services were conducted by Rev. Messrs. McGreedy, Rankins, and Hoye. At the close of the eucharist feast, the M'Gee brothers were invited to preach to the people. They did so, and it is recorded of them that their 'sermons had a marvelous effect.' Men and women wept and called aloud for divine mercy, while others sprang to their feet praising God, and shouting aloud hallelujahs. An excitement so unusual surprised and displeased the Presbyterian ministers, and when the M'Gees had concluded, they endeavored to calm the feelings of the congregation and bring the services summarily to a close.

"Failing in this, they left the house greatly incensed at the disorderly proceedings, as they termed them. A few of the people followed the enraged ministers, but a large majority remained, and the services were continued under the direction of the Methodist clergymen. In the meanwhile those who had departed spread the news of the extraordinary movement throughout the surrounding country, and the result was that in the afternoon hundreds of new faces appeared upon the scene, and soon the church became full to overflowing, while many were obliged to remain without. Fresh arrivals were constantly taking place, and the eager outside multitude becoming greatly excited, demanded the privilege of hearing 'the wonderful preacher' whose new born fame had attracted them to the spot.

"In this emergency it was asked, 'What shall be done?' and after considerable discussion it was resolved to remove to a neighboring forest, where the entire multitude could be accommodated. The removal was speedily made, and a speaker's stand extemporized, and though the meeting was protracted till after sundown, the excitement remained unabated. On the following day the people returned to the grounds, bringing with them tents and provisions for a lengthy encampment, and there they remained for several days. All, or nearly all, of the Protestant denominations were represented by ministry and laity, and all labored together for one object, forgetting, for the time being, sectarian differences and prejudices.

"The marvelous success of this encampment meeting was heralded all over the land, and similar 'grove meetings' were established in the various States, under the auspices principally of the Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches. For several years thereafter campmeetings were continued by these denominations, but eventually they were abandoned by the Presbyterians and Baptists, and since then have been conducted solely by the Methodists, and with most wonderful success."

THE GERMAN CAUSE.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been for a long time of the opinion that it is nearly always the poor and honest-hearted who will embrace the truth when fairly presented to them; and they will rather sacrifice friends (though with sad hearts), money, their own reputation, or anything their hearts may delight in, than to let go the truth after they once get a real good taste of it. This I find not only among the many American brethren with whom I have become acquainted during these last ten or twelve years, but I find it also among my German brethren. The following two letters, which came from a great distance, will confirm this fact:—

"MILLERSBURG, Dec. 25th, 1868.

Dear Bro. Reimer:—You will excuse me that I take the liberty, though a stranger, to address a few lines to you. My name is Aug. Riechel, and I live near Millersburg, Minn. Every Sunday I preach the gospel to a small Baptist congregation. This little church owes her existence to me, an unworthy instrument in the hand of God. I have been for these last eighteen years a member of the Baptist denomination, and was converted while yet in Germany.

But now to the point. This last summer there appeared in the 'Sendbote' (a German Baptist paper in Cincinnati) an article from Bro. Snyders in Chicago, and after this another article, in which he was charged with heresy. In answer to the last, you wrote a tract, which, with four other German tracts, was sent to me through the post-office here, though I no not know up to this moment who sent them, or from whence they came. The titles of the four tracts were: 'The second coming of Christ,' 'The hope of the dead in Christ,' 'The future doom of the wicked,' and 'What is man?' I saw in this the finger of God, and thought like Paul, i. e., to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good. So I read these five tracts carefully and with great attention, not once, but twice, and am not yet quite done with them.

But how surprised was I to find that not only my own denomination, but many others, though they all have the Bible in hand, are in such gross darkness. Now I praise God, that he has so wonderfully delivered me from such errors and led me to see the truth. I feel much happier now, and cannot any longer preach eternal torment in hell, and also believe in the sleep of the dead until their resurrection. I hope to convince others of my Baptist brethren of these glorious truths.

In your last tract, you say that next you intend to write a tract on 'The Rich Man and Lazarus,' etc. Now I would heartily request you to send me such an one as soon as you can, not for me only, but especially for others, and I will gladly and joyfully send you the money for them. Your unworthy Bro.,

AUG. RIECHEL."

"Dear Bro. Reimer:—Your dear letter, as also the 'Crisis' and tracts, came to hand Dec. 9th, and I was happy to find that you still remember me. I have also remembered you in christian love. But I feel ashamed, that I sacrifice so little for the truth's sake. It is true, I preach the word of God, but how much more might I do for the glory of God. Though I have a large family, and my income is very small, so that it would hurt me to bring some sacrifice, yet I believe it is the will of God that we should bring sacrifices to his glory, though it may hurt us. A sacrifice to the honor and glory of God is not brought from superfluity, but will always hurt us more or less, for without this it is no sacrifice; and true love sacrifices all that one has, yea, even himself. I will soon send you something to help you to get out the new tract on 'The Rich Man and Lazarus,' etc. I long for it, and so do some sisters here. Your labors to spread the truth among the Germans are already crowned with visible success.

This day, after preaching, I visited a sister, to whom a few days ago I had given some of your German tracts you sent me. Until now, I have avoided to distribute these tracts in my immediate neighborhood, and only confined myself to speak on one point after another in my preaching, in order to prepare my hearers for these glorious truths gradually, or by degrees. This sister now told me, that since she heard me preach in this way, all the orthodox sermons had no more food for her; all seemed to her nothing but heathen formality; and oh! with what interest does she read these new tracts. And besides her, another dear brother, John Ritter, has through my instrumentality also received the truth; he came to see me yesterday, and stated with a joyful heart what the Lord had done unto him. It is a year ago since I got the 'Voice of the West' for him, and now he has not only renewed the subscription for that paper, but also ordered the Crisis, and a number of Advent books.

The truth is spreading here; but I am hated by the Methodists, who condemn the truth. Some one even called out to me in the street, whether I had become a 'Second Adventist.' 'Yes,' said I, 'but such we all should be.' I fear there will soon be a split in my church.

Sr. McLean, who until this day has paid me alone, and given me a house to live in, came to me and inquired whether it was true that I believed the judgment to be at hand? I answered yes, and gave her the reason of my hope which is in me. Of course she was not pleased. But come what may, once it must break; I cannot do otherwise. I must obey God rather than man. May God help me. The grace of God be with us until the return of Jesus. Amen.

Thy humble fellow pilgrim to Zion,

Frantenac, Minn. STEPHEN ROESE."

FIERY TRIALS.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you."

Fellow pilgrim to the bar of God, struggling against the varied forms of sin and wrong, listen to the tender address of the Beloved, who admonishes us not to think strange even of our fiery trials; as if to say, Do you not know the heat of the furnace must be applied to separate the dross from the gold? Have you forgotten we are in the enemy's domain, and his most fiery darts are aimed at those having least sympathy with him and his works? Do you forget he walks "about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour"? Ah! well he knows his time has limits.

My brother, have you thought it strange so many circumstances must combine against you? Have you wondered amid losses and crosses that the sympathy of friends should be withdrawn? Has it been a mystery past solving that your own familiar friends, whom your burdened spirit has often borne to the throne of grace, should turn your sacrifice to reproach? Think it not strange. The Son of God, after becoming a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, came to his own, whose ransom his blood was to pay; yet they received him not. Though the birds of the air had their nests, the beasts of the forest their place of retreat, yet the cold, damp earth pillowed the sacred head of our Savior. Even when his mission was about closing, to our astonishment we see his hitherto faithful followers forsake him and flee. We hear the agonizing prayer wrung from the depths of his rent heart—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Holy Father! breathe upon thy finite, frail children, the spirit of self-denial, of living only to thy glory and the benefit of those for whom Jesus died. If it be for thy glory and our purity of character, welcome the seven-fold heat of the furnace, only be thou, God, our support. Yea, let the enemy make us still more conspicuous marks, only do thou enable us to wrap the shield of faith more closely about us, lest his fiery darts pierce our vitals.

My beloved sister, pressed with care, burdened with duties Divine Providence has seen fit to impose upon you, have you in the hour of temptation felt that the providences of God were unequal? Have you amid poverty, sickness, confinement, and toil, thought your cup too bitter to drink? O! let not the bitterness of your portion in this life, or its crushing weight of responsibility, rob you of the "eternal weight of glory" promised the faithful. Listen to holy Inspiration: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Cast your burden on the Lord, for he careth for you."

Frail humanity may criticise too closely; it may impugn motive; it may not discover the bleeding heart it triumphs over. Let it pass. Watch closely thy spirit. Breathe only the prayer—"Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." That holy God before whose scrutinizing eye all flesh must appear, has numbered the hairs of your head. No secret sigh heaves your bosom, no silent grief weighs your spirit, unobserved by Him who pities as a father his child all that fear him.

His kingdom is to be inhabited only by a tried and purified people. O to exist where no treachery is allowed to enter; where in every face you look you meet the unmistakable expression of love and friendship; every hand you grasp you feel the return of that love the Divine nature imparts. O, land of rest! welcome, thrice welcome! The aching, crushed hearts of thy inhabitants sigh and cry for the abominations committed by the dwellers of that land, which shall be possessed ere long by those made holy through the blood of the Lamb. O earth! we cannot rest our hearts on thy sickening, fading, untrue joys. A glimpse of the enduring joys, the fadeless crowns, the pure friendship, the holy associations of the redeemed earth, has broken the charms that might bind us to this groaning earth.

That reader and writer may so yield themselves servants to the Most High, and so trust his grace, as to meet his approval when the judgment sits and the books are opened, is the earnest prayer of J. R. BEST.

BRO. AND SR. E. BRALEY write:—"Bro. Calkins is with us occasionally. He is now laboring at Auburn, twenty-five miles from here, with good success. Sr. Prescot, and some from this place, are also there. Nineteen were baptized yesterday, as the result of their labors. It is a new field. Many more are becoming interested. He will continue his labors through this week, and perhaps longer. May the Lord direct. Yours in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus, and having a home with all the redeemed in the new [illegible]

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

Another year is closing here as well as everywhere else. It is a reflective hour; but here there is little time for reflection. But I am looking backward to-day and over the year that is nearly passed. What has been done here? I am asking. Has all been accomplished that could have been? Have I been faithful to these poor ones as well as to God? Who will be lost by my neglect and unfaithfulness? Who will rise up in judgment and condemn me for aught I have done or left undone here?

Have I neglected, slighted or despised any of these poor ones, who bear the image of God? Have I turned any away that I could feed, clothe, or shelter? Have I been always kind, patient and forbearing toward them in their ignorance and shortcomings? Have I neglected to visit the sick and poor, and administer relief and comfort to them? Have I wept with those that have wept, as well as rejoiced with those that have rejoiced?

Have I been like God, making no distinction among men, but looking upon all as he looks upon them? Have I felt towards all as he feels, showing no respect of persons? Have I preached the gospel faithfully to these poor ones, feeling that their salvation is as essential as my own? Have I denied myself of all that God required? Have I made a full sacrifice of all I possess to Christ and his cause?

Perhaps no year since this mission was established has been so fruitful of good results as the one just closing. Yet we have been afflicted. Two who came here and entered upon the work, and labored most faithfully, have fallen in the midst of their usefulness. They were taken away from our side at a time when to human view their work was but begun, and much remaining for them to accomplish. We can not see why this was permitted; but He who controls all things knows why this was done. We have felt sad and disheartened, but never fully discouraged.

In the midst of sore afflictions we have been comforted by the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon this poor people, and the conversion of some of them to Christ. The work has been gradual in all its forms, but more thorough than ever before. Those who have come to a knowledge of the truth here the past year are firmer and more reliable than were our first converts to the faith which we hold. At the same time the whole church has become settled and grounded in the truth, and has ceased to waver in regard to the doctrines we preach and believe. It has also grown in grace, there being a great improvement in the lives of its members. Habits of intemperance are being abandoned; the family circle is being more united, and there is less jarring among the people.

While Satan is doing all he can to hinder the work, God is helping in every way, and the light and truth are spreading around. The prayers of dear friends far away are heard, and their gifts are coming to us, enabling us to carry forward the work of saving these poor despised children of God.

The following have been received for the poor since I last made acknowledgement:—Two barrels of clothing from Poultney, Vt. Also $10.00, with which to pay the freight. These barrels with the money were sent us mainly through the efforts and contributions of Bro. J. B. Cook and Sr. Cook his wife; their daughter Susan helping with other sisters and friends in the church there. The barrels contained ninety-three articles, nearly new, and consisted mostly of bed-clothing and garments for women and children. Sr. Cook made many of these articles with her own hands, and superintended all. Sr. Hammond, $3.00, Lucy Ransom $2.00, Sr. Shaw $1.00, all of Carver, Mass. (Sent by Bro. W. E. Hathaway.) Sr. A. P. Cunningham, of Newton Upper Falls, Mass., $5.00, $1.25 of it being contributed by the children of our dear Bro. and Sr. Cunningham; viz., Mary 25c., Annie 25c., Maria 50c., Alice 10c., Lizzie 5c., Martie 5c., Mellie, 5c. J. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., $2.00. A friend, Janesville, Wis., $1,00.

May He who remembers all, reward these self-denying and generous hearts.

A FREEDMAN'S APPEAL.

The following letter was sent to Dr. Leslie, who sent the same to me, with the request that I would give it to the friends of the freedmen, with a favorable notice. The author of this letter, Bro. Leroy Jackson, is a gifted and pious man, and a real, whole-hearted Adventist. But being raised on a Mississippi plantation, without education, except what he has picked up since the war, he sorely feels the need of help in this direction. His letter was written by another, but the words were dictated by him. It speaks for itself. Read it:—

"DR. I. I. LESLIE:—Dear Bro.:—Your favor of recent date was duly received. Our church at Osceola is still growing in the Advent faith, and I think there is a good field for labor there. I have been into Tenn., opposite Osceola, and preached to the people there, and they were much pleased. The people at Osceola wish me to open a school, if I can get three months schooling at Memphis, and I have no doubt there could be great good done, if we could open a school.

"The third Sunday in this month I baptized eleven, seven miles below Randolph, and the people there believe strongly in the Advent faith, and seem to be glad to receive the light of Christ's soon coming. I meet the people there next Sunday, to try to organize the church, and would be glad if you could be present. They expect to build a church at Morgan's Point between this and Christmas, but I cannot state at what precise time it will be completed. I have a call for the second Sunday in next month, from my colored and white brethren, to preach at Antioch concerning the coming of the Lord. I now see that I could do a great deal of good among my people if I had an education, and am anxious to go to Memphis for at least three months. The people at Osceola have agreed to take a collection to help support my family while I am away. If you think proper, I would be very much obliged to you, if you would present my case to the Board, and do what you can to assist me. Yours respectfully,

LEROY JACKSON.

Morgan's Point, Ark., Nov. 25th."

If the friends of education will consider this case, and send Geo. T. Adams what help they feel interested to give, it will be gratefully received, and faithfully applied. If he could receive twenty-five dollars a month for a time, he would be able to get through. It may be that some one of the Lord's stewards may feel that this call is to them to do this work; if so, they can signify it to me, when I will put them in communication with Bro. Jackson. What a noble act this would be, to polish this now illiterate one, and make him mighty to help his poor people.

The Board now have all they can do to sustain their missionaries in the field, and do not feel justified in making an appropriation for this object. But the friends of the freedmen are respectfully appealed to for this object. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

WATCHING.

"Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is."—MARK 13: 33.

Our divine Lord gave this warning when about to leave this world. He knew all things; he foresaw the coldness, indifference and errors that would exist in the last times. He foresaw the state of the world and the church as we see it at this day, when his long delay has made it seem to the minds of many that he never will return, and scoffers are waxing bold, and the church careless and cold. They have forgotten this passage of Scripture, "Take ye heed;" "Behold I come a thief; blessed is he that watcheth."

Every word in the text is emphatic and of solemn importance. "Take heed"—mind, observe, give attention—"to yourselves"; remember it is a personal matter, and every one should now look well to himself, "lest," for fear that, at any time, as you know not the exact time, "your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life."

However important these cares may be, we are to beware lest we are overloaded by them, and so that day come upon us unawares,—unexpectedly, or without due preparation to meet it. "For as a snare [or net] shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the earth." It will come in an hour when even the saints think not; but it will find them (unlike the world) ready and watching.

Hypocrites will stand a poor chance in the great day of God. They may deceive men here, but they cannot deceive God. A mere profession will amount to nothing. The world is full of hypocrites, deceivers, and infidels.

We are now living in the time of a series of convulsions that will not terminate before the great and glorious advent of our long absent Lord. All the signs spoken of by our Redeemer have been and are being fulfilled. The budding fig-tree shows that summer is nigh at hand. Hence christian men are inexcusable if they remain in ignorance of a matter of such startling interest and importance. Everything speaks in thunder tones—"The kingdom of God is nigh at hand." "Take ye heed, watch and pray, . . lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping."

Watch for Christ's return as you would watch for the return of a long-absent friend, only with a thousand times stronger desire. O reader! are you ready? are you watching for the morning, the resurrection morning? For then we shall be made like him, if faithful, and we shall see him as he is.

MISSOURI C. C. CONFERENCE.

The first annual session was held in the city of St. Louis, at Compton Hill, A. C. Church, on the 2nd and 3d instants. The meeting being in order opened, proceeded to business. Elder H. K. Flagg offered some pertinent suggestions relating to the present and prospective interests of our mission work, which were fully endorsed and highly approved by the entire meeting. There were six churches represented, and but for the bad condition of the roads in the country, there would probably have been one or two more. Under the circumstances there was a fair attendance, and a good interest manifested. We feel that the result of our year of associated labors has been and is highly gratifying, and also that the future promises still greater usefulness.

Bro. Flagg took occasion to speak of our work here from its commencement to the present, of his severe labors and trials in connection therewith for nearly three years, also concerning his poor health, by reason of ailments to which he has been for many years subject; in view of which he felt that he should be relieved from the active and laborious duties that devolve upon him as Superintendent of the mission. Hence it was his purpose to tender his resignation, to take effect as soon as the Board of the A. A. Society should send some person to take his place.

In view of this contemplated course on the part of Bro. Flagg, the following preamble and resolution was presented and unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, we learn that our worthy brother and Elder, H. K. Flagg, contemplates resigning his position as superintendent of our mission, and also as chairman of our conference board, with a view to leaving in a short time for the east, in view of which it is hereby

Resolved, that this conference tender Bro. Flagg (and our friends of the west and east) assurance of our high appreciation of him as a brother and Elder, whose earnest and faithful labors in behalf of the cause of Bible truth and righteousness among us, have won for him a high seat in our affections. Hence we bid him God speed wherever he may go, hoping and trusting that in the providence of God he may be permitted to return and labor among us in some other capacity, and possibly in a somewhat different direction, yet promising on his part increasing usefulness in the cause of his and our Lord and Master.

After the election of officers and the transaction of other business of local interest, the conference adjourned, till again in order called.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

MRS. ELIZABETH GILMAN, the subject of this brief sketch, was born Oct. 4th, 1794, in Fairfax, Vt. She was not blest with early religious training at home, as neither of her parents were at that time pious. She, however, grew up to womanhood in the midst of religious society, and was early brought to see and feel her need of an interest in Christ. She made a public profession of her faith by joining the Congregationalist church in that vicinity and observing its ordinances. While she remained in her native country, she continued a consistent member of that church. In Feb., 1821, she was united in marriage to William Gilman, of Melbourne, C. E., to which place she immediately came to reside. At this time the country was new, and the religious privileges were not what they now are; but Mr. Gilman being a pious man, they went together to the different places of meeting for the public worship of God, attending to the ordinances whenever an opportunity presented itself of doing so.

Mrs. Gilman was the mother of six children, three sons and three daughters. For her family she toiled early and late, with a self-sacrificing spirit that only a devoted mother and a dutiful wife can feel. No matter how arduous the task to be performed for the good of her family, she did it with a cheerful willingness, that made one feel how good she was. She had a heart to feel for others' woes, and it overflowed with benevolence. None who solicited alms went empty from her door. Being naturally timid and retiring, she seldom went abroad, except to meet her own family, or to assist her neighbors in time of need.

In the fall of 1842, when the subject of Christ's second coming to earth was agitated, and said to be near even at the door, she with her family embraced that faith, and although she lived twenty-six years after that, and did not see her Savior come in the clouds of heaven, her faith in God was unwavering to the end; and when she was called to lay down and die, she believed her sleep in Christ would be short. It was her delight to entertain the faithful ministers of Christ, and ever since 1842 her house has been a welcome home for the servants of the Lord, as many can testify.

In the spring of 1865, for the first time she was called to part with one of her children, her youngest son, Charles, thirty-one years of age, was suddenly called away from his little family. This was a heavy blow in her old age, but by the grace of God, she bore it with meekness and submission, believing that all things would work together for good to those who love God. As old age crept on, her bodily infirmities increased. For nearly fifty years she was a daily sufferer from spinal complaint, and it had its attendant evils. About three months before her death, a disordered state of the liver manifested itself in the form of jaundice. Various remedies were resorted to, but they proved of no avail. She gradually wasted away, and although she walked about in their midst, and in form retained her seat at the family board, her friends believed her to be near her end.

Monday morning she walked down stairs from her accustomed sleeping-room, and laid down to rise no more. Wednesday morning at five o'clock she was suddenly attacked with a violent pain about the region of the liver, and from that time her bodily suffering was intense; previous to this, she had suffered very little severe pain. At one time she remarked, "It is a trying time, but it won't last long." Not a murmur escaped her lips; and as we stood beside her dying bed and beheld her agony, we were witnesses of that meekness and submission that had characterized her former life, and which the grace of God alone can impart. She spoke of her blessed hope, and praised God aloud. Her mind was calm, and her perceptive faculties clear. She exhorted some members of the family who were not pious to seek the Lord at once and lead a new life.

Her work on earth was now done, and she took her last farewell of those around her bed. Last of all her little grandson, Freddie, weeping as if his heart would break, said, "Good-bye, grandma"; not receiving an answer, he repeated in a louder tone, "Good-bye, grandma"; and though her vision was lost in death she responded, "Good-bye." She immediately turned over and straightened herself in bed, as if conscious that her last moments had come; a few minutes more, and on the closing day of the year 1868, twenty minutes past seven in the morning, her spirit took its flight to God who gave it, and her time-tossed bark was safely moored in the haven of eternal rest. I felt as I stood gazing on the scene, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Her two sons and two grandsons were chosen to bear her to the grave. A funeral discourse was delivered by Eld. John Porter, of Danville, P. Q., from Col. 3: 3-4; after which the interment was made in the homestead garden. "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." E. G. LAWRENCE.

NAMELESS LETTERS.

BRO. GRANT:—I would praise the Lord with all my heart forevermore for all his kindness and mercy to me and mine. I thank him and praise his great name for blessings, both temporal and spiritual. I wish to acknowledge the receipt of the following letters, the writers of which choose to withhold their names:

"A sister in Reading," $1. "Hope," Wakefield, $2. "A friend," Concord, N. H., $2. "A sister in Worcester," by Miles Grant, $2. W. S. C., Brookfield, N. H., $2. "Vershire," Vt., $1. S. C., Alleghany City, Pa., $2. Groton Junction, $1. "A friend," Rochester, N. H., $5. Southbridge, $1. "Lizzie," Nashua, N. H., $1. "Right Hand," $3. A sister in Portsmouth, 50 cts. "Well Wisher," Castleton, Vt., $5. "A mother and daughter," $4. Sister H. B. P. $1. Sardinia, N. Y., 50 cts. Alton, N. H., $1. Yarmouth, Me., $1. East New Rutland, Vt., 50 cts. Canaan, Me., 50 cts. Simpson's Corner, 50 cts. I earnestly pray that the Lord may bless and reward all who have thus ministered unto us; may he bless them according to the greatness of his power and the riches of his grace. Amen. Continue to pray for your Bro., F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

CHURCH ORDER.

The article by Elder A. Ross, on "Church Order," published in a recent number of the Crisis, has my hearty endorsement. I wish every Adventist in the land would read and consider it seriously in the light of God's holy word.

To many of our brethren the idea of church organization and "order" has been a great bug-bear, but it seems to me that a little exercise of the common sense which God has given us would forever dispel from our minds such a notion. Some have thought it a great sin to have their names enrolled in a church book; but they remind me of those who "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." Paul says, "Let all things be done decently and in order;" (1 Cor. 14: 40); but they spurn the idea of order and system in the management of Christ's church. And while some may think it necessary to have officers appointed to attend to certain things, they prefer to call them a committee (a worldly name) rather than to adopt the Bible name of deacons or elders. And yet they claim to be the church of Christ. I have often wondered why they did not change the name of church to that of some worldly institution. Why not? There is just as much consistency in substituting the name of some worldly society for Christ's church as there is in substituting the name of committee for that of deacons or elders.

Much more might be written on this subject, but "a word to the wise is sufficient."

Correspondence.

From Sr. E. L. Kimball.

Bro. Grant:—As several have desired to hear from me since the Springfield camp-meeting, I will write a few lines to tell what Jesus did for me. When I went to camp-meeting I was very ill, having a cancer in my stomach, as the physicians had told me. No one but the Lord knows what suffering I had endured, and I had wished many times to be laid away in the grave, if it could be the Lord's will. My physician told me I could live but a short time, as the cancer had eaten so badly that I had raised pieces of flesh with much bloody matter, and the stinging and gnawing seemed at times almost insufferable.

I asked the Lord to give me strength to go to camp-meeting, and he granted my request. I went at the commencement, but on Thursday grew sicker, and on Friday morning thought to leave the ground, but could not get packed up. I continued to grow worse. All day and evening the blood gushed from my stomach, and I lay unconscious outside the tent. But a kind brother saw me and took me into the tent, and kind physicians were called, but could do nothing, and I felt I was dying.

I asked for Brn. Grant, Hastings, and Hook, and they prayed, anointing me with oil in the name of the Lord. A gentle wave of peace and joy passed over me, and I was made free from pain, and slept well all night.

How I praise the Lord for what he has done for me. Not a particle of stinging, or pain, or raising blood since that time. Glory be to God! I cannot say I am entirely healed, for I am very weak, and cannot endure much; but I can attend meetings and work with my needle some. I praise God for his loving kindness, and can say from my heart,

"If ever I loved thee, my Jesus, 'tis now."

I expect to see Jesus soon, and how glad I shall be. I want a home in the new earth. I hope these few lines will encourage the sick and fainting to go to the great Physician, who can raise the sick and heal all diseases. Cast yourselves on him in faith, for I have found it good to trust the Lord.

Your sister, waiting for redemption,

Wilbraham, Jan. 8th, 1869.

Bro. J. L. Wood writes:—"We are having a blessed time here in Collinsville. Some sinners have come to the Lord, and the wandering are returning. We have organized a church, with some fifteen or twenty members, with Deacon, Secretary, and Treasurer. Meetings go well."

Obituaries.

Bro. Sweet's death was caused by the fall of a large stick of timber, which he was assisting to hoist with a derrick at the city coal yard. It struck him upon the head, making a large gash, also upon the neck, severing the spinal cord, and causing paralysis of the whole body below the wound, and remained in this suffering condition two weeks, conscious to the last, when he fell asleep without a struggle.

His greatest desire was that he might live to see Jesus come, and always realized that death is an enemy, and that without the coming of Jesus to raise his dead, it would be an eternal sleep. He leaves a wife and daughter to mourn his loss.

J. S. Gorton.

In this affliction we are bereft of a dear sister, who, though she had lived among us but a short time, had endeared herself to us all by her straight-forward, consistent life, and by steadily bearing her part with us in our little prayer circles. She died suddenly, having just returned from hearing Bro. Dickenson preach at Newfield, by whom she felt much refreshed in her mind. In about two hours from the time she arrived home, and in fifteen minutes after she was taken, she lay a lifeless corpse. Though we feel that all is well with her, yet we deeply mourn her loss, and feel great sympathy with her afflicted husband. But "over there is no more dying," and our weary hearts sigh out, How long, O Lord, how long, ere these parting scenes will be over, and we rest,

"Where death and the tomb shall divide us no more?"

Mary A. Baldwin.

Harris. Died in North Adams, Jan. 2d, 1869, Sr. Lydia C., wife of Bro. Anderson Harris, and daughter of R. Z. and Sarah Wade, aged thirty-seven years and twenty-seven days.

She leaves a companion and seven children, with a large circle of friends, to mourn her loss. Sr. H. with her husband embraced the Advent faith in 1854. She sleeps in Jesus. Words of comfort were spoken by Eld. E. W. Taft.

Warren Taft.

Richardson. Died at West Stafford, Dec. 13th, 1868, Mr. Marvin Richardson, aged sixty-two years. He left a wife, whose hope is in Jesus and his soon coming, to mourn his loss. Sermon by the writer, from Joshua 23: 14. I. B. Potter.

Messer. Died in Goshen, N. H., July 15th, 1868, very suddenly, Mr. Alpheus Messer, aged sixty-seven years.

In this dispensation of God's providence my once happy home has again been made lonely by the loss of a truly kind and affectionate companion, and three children of a kind and indulgent father. Mr. Messer experienced religion in the morning of life, and united with the Freewill Baptist Church at South Newbury, N. H., of which he remained a worthy and acceptable member until about 1842, when he embraced the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ, in which he remained a firm believer until his death. His life was that of a humble, devoted christian. His Bible, and his "Crisis," which had been his weekly visitor for many years, were his chief reading. His funeral sermon was preached by Eld. C. Simonds, of the Christian denomination, from Rev. 14: 13.

L. A. Messer.

Fairman. Died in West Stafford, Dec. 10th, 1868, of thoracic abscess, Sr. Eleanor Fairman, aged thirty-eight years.

Our sister was converted five years ago last fall to the blessed hope of the gospel of Christ, and was baptized the spring following. Death has suddenly cut her down; we lament her loss, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. We trust she sleeps in Jesus, and will be raised to immortal life when he comes. The services were conducted by the writer, from Amos 4: 12.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Madrid, Jan. 12. Four thousand soldiers have volunteered their services to the government to assist in suppressing the insurrection in Cuba.

London, Jan. 13. The reports of the capture by the Turkish forces of the members of the Cretan insurrectionary government are confirmed. Four of the Cretan officials were killed and the rest were taken prisoners. Books and documents of the government fell into the hands of the Turks.

Special dispatches received in this city to-day from Madrid state that one of the late Emperor Maximilian's Mexican generals is secretly engaged in that city making arrangements with a number of Spanish scientific and military officers with the view of placing Count Girgenti, brother of the ex-King of Naples, on the throne of Mexico. Two hundred officers of high rank are wanted to carry the movement into execution. Their pay will be secured them from the time they enter upon their duties. Several of the European governments assist secretly this enterprise. Gen. Prim grants a number of officers of divisions joining unlimited leave of absence for the purpose of taking part in the expedition. The Emperor Napoleon, it is said, secretly favors the project.

Jan. 15. All the great powers except Russia have united in a demand upon Greece that for the preservation of peace, she withdraw her formal objections to the Conference, as at present the constituted powers have reason to hope that Russia will also concur in this demand.

Paris, Jan. 13. The exclusion of the Grecian Ambassador threatens to break up the Conference. It is not considered probable that the Greek Government will acquiesce, and its reply to the demand of its representative for instructions is not likely to prove favorable, in which case the Conference, in all probability, will adjourn indefinitely.

In the meantime the Plenipotentiaries have applied to their respective governments for further instructions. It is understood that Russia condemns the attitude which Greece has assumed toward the Conference.

The public newspaper reports that the Conference on the Eastern difficulty held a harmonious session and adopted unanimously a conciliatory resolution. M. Rangabee was not in attendance. His continued absence is regarded as a refusal by Greece to recognize the Conference.

Paris, Jan. 17. The Conference on the Eastern question is on the point of closing its sessions. It recommends Greece to accept as much of the Turkish ultimatum as relates to Cretan affairs, and to refer the case of the officers at Syra to the decision of the courts, and promises that Turkey will withdraw the last point of her ultimatum touching international law. The Conference maintains the policy of strict non intervention.

The latest advices from Athens show that preparations for war are actively going on in all parts of Greece. The banks of Athens having loaned the Government twenty millions for war purposes.

London, Jan. 17. Dispatches from the East report that a difficulty has arisen between Turkey and Persia. Disturbances have broken out upon the eastern frontier of Asiatic Turkey, between the Persians and Turks, which have led to the withdrawal of the Ambassador of the Porte from Teheran. Since these occurrences, Persia has been massing troops on her northwestern frontier.

Hurricane and Loss of Life in England.—The latest files of English papers have full accounts of the disastrous gales which swept over Great Britain on the 28th ultimo. One description says:

"In London the wind blew with the strength of a hurricane. At noon, chimney pots in all directions flew off houses, signboards were blown down, and damage was done in various ways to house property. At about half-past three the force of the wind was so great that the position of persons walking in the streets was rendered very dangerous from the tiles, boards, zinc, chimneys, etc., falling around them. It is estimated that at least about one hundred persons were injured in the streets, and some of the cases were of such a serious nature that death will probably result. In all parts of the metropolis the damage done was great, every thoroughfare bearing full evidence of the fearful force of the wind. In the suburbs, where the wind had greater play, out-houses, conservatories, and other buildings, which could hardly be expected to resist the force of such a wind, were destroyed or greatly damaged, and in one case of this kind, at Stockwell, a servant was killed by the falling materials.

At Sheffield the gale was attended by considerable destruction of property and some loss of life. Two employed in executing repairs at Messrs. Cammell's works, at Grimesthorpe, were killed by the fall of the wrought iron roof of a large shed. Their bodies were horribly mutilated. At New Grimesthorpe there was a most singular accident. Early in the morning two bed-rooms in the house of Mr. Brown, a builder, which were built over an archway, fell into the yard below with a fearful crash. There were seven children and young persons sleeping in the rooms, and although they sustained some bruises, not one of them was hurt at all seriously. The bedsteads were smashed to pieces.

A shocking calamity occurred at Rochdale. The wind blew in fearful gusts in the streets. In a new street off Spotland road a row of houses had just been completed, and two of them were so constructed as to answer the purposes of a Sunday school. On Sunday the place was opened for the first time in the afternoon. There were present about four hundred persons. The service began at half-past two, and shortly after one of the windows was blown out by a gust of wind. Little notice was taken of it, and the services proceeded until five minutes to four, when another violent blast heaved up the roof, the gable end fell in, and the two side walls fell inward, after which the roof crashed in upon the whole. A distressing scene of confusion and horror ensued. Some hundreds of the unfortunate persons managed to creep out from under the debris, but a large number were buried beneath, and their cries for help were piteous to hear. Those that had escaped and the neighbors heroically pulled away the fallen timber and bricks, and gradually released the unfortunate persons. So far as could be ascertained at the time, no person was killed, but scores were seriously injured."

Rio Janeiro, Dec. 24, via Lisbon, Jan. 15. At last accounts from the seat of war, the allies held Villetta and Angostura. Many cannon, and large stores of ammunition and provisions fell into their hands. The losses of the Paraguayans in killed and wounded in the recent battles were very heavy. A report from Paraguayan sources claims that the allied forces lost six thousand men, killed and wounded, in the battle which took place on the 6th of December. Gen. Argolla was mortally wounded in this fight.

Gen. MacMahon, the American Minister, was in the Paraguayan camp. Good understanding exists between President Lopez and the American Minister.

☞ Earthquakes continue in Chili. Severe shocks have been felt at Coquimbo and other places along the coast.

DOMESTIC.

Havana, Jan. 15. The original copy of the emancipation proclamation issued by the revolutionary Gen. Cespedes, has been received here. It does not, as had been reported previously, abolish slavery at once, but counsels owners to give their slaves their freedom, and leave the ultimate decision to the people, who at their pleasure, may decide upon immediate emancipation, coupled with indemnification of those owners who are favorable to the revolutionary cause, and yet unwilling to part with their property. The General's principal object in issuing the proclamation appears to be the utilization of the blacks as a military necessity.

San Francisco, Jan. 11. Advices from Mexico state that terrible land slides had occurred in different parts of the country, involving considerable loss of life. Creeks have appeared where previously nothing but a barren desert had existed. The commotions were attended with continuous rumblings of the earth.

A number of citizens of Gaudolagaid had been condemned and shot for political offences. The affair created ill feeling against the government, and the country seemed ripe for another revolution.

Jan. 12. Advices from Yokohama to Dec. 15th confirm the report of the surrender of Prince Aidsen, and the civil war in Japan is considered at an end. The capitulation was concluded Nov. 6th, on the birthday of the Mikado. Yeddo has become the permanent residence of the Mikado. The Tycoon has retired to his private possession, with all of his people who wished to follow him. Those who were willing to take employment under the new government were retained. The removal of the people of the Tycoon from Yeddo was commenced on Dec. 15. Some 13,000 were to be sent to the Tycoon's new province of Sheraidiza.

John Allen Again.—John Allen has closed his house, as a dancing house, and has become very dogged, sullen, and silent. He is disappointed at the turn affairs have taken, and is angry with himself and all his neighbors. His old business has been entirely ruined, partly by exposure and partly by his attempts to play off the missionary by his pretended conversion. Between these two stools John Allen's dance house has come to the ground. He is said, however, to have saved a great deal of money out of his infamous business, quite enough to keep him comfortably for the remainder of his days. He is a tall, powerfully-built man, about 35 years of age, but with a hang-dog, brutal cast of countenance. He was unable to ask us into his house as his wife was drunk, and when in that condition she is always very quarrelsome. Every one in the street abuses John Allen, and expresses a pious wish that he may go to the devil as soon as possible, or any where else, so long as he takes himself off; so said Mr. Tommy Hadden. They seem to think that as long "The Wickedest Man in New York" remains among them, so long will the agitation against their infamous mode of earning a living continue; but that if John Allen could be got out of the way, the outcry against them would soon cease. Allen, without intending to do so, has certainly done more to injure these "Sailors' Retreats" than all the missionaries put together. He has, fortunately for the poor sailors, opened their eyes to the frauds practiced upon them, taught them to be more careful of their own interests, and made them more shy than formerly of going to these places. His neighbors feel this, and bless him accordingly.

Spread of Mormonism.—The Desert News for the week has a column of missionary intelligence, from which we learn that during the latter half of 1868, three thousand four hundred and thirty-five were baptized into the church in England; that great success had attended the Swiss mission; that the prospects abroad never were so bright as now.

It may be set down that the natural increase in the Territory, with emigration, will add about twelve thousand to the Mormon population during the present year—or one thousand a month. Brigham with good reason may boast that Mormonism, instead of dying out, has never increased so fast as at the present time.—Journal, 16th.

Passing Events.

☞ The 100th aniversary of the introduction of vaccination in Russia by the Empress Catherine II. is to be celebrated at St. Petersburg. A prize of 3000 roubles (£400) is offered by the Government on this occasion for the best history of vaccination. The competition is open to all Europe.

☞ Prince Amedio, who has been mentioned in the cable dispatches as a possible candidate for the Spanish throne, is a second son of King Victor Emanuel of Italy.

☞ During the past ten days failures to the extent of about ten million dollars have occurred in New York city among the dry goods trade. Other houses are reported in an unsafe condition, and aditional suspensions are predicted.

☞ Professor Syme of Edinburgh has advised the Siamese Twins not to be cut apart. They will take the opinion of a Paris professor on the subject.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Melvin Village, N.H., commencing Wednesday, Jan. 27th, and hold over the following Sunday. Let this meeting be made a special subject of prayer that God's blessing may be on his people, and that good may be accomplished. A. W. Sibley, Sec.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. Sibley, Sec. of Conf.

Conference at Dover, Me.

There will be a conference held in Dover, Me., at Brays' Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. In behalf of the Eastern Maine Conference the brethren here are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. It is a new place for such a meeting. Call on Brn. Bray and Royal. Arrangements will be made to care for visitors. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend, and lend all that aid the gospel requires as far as possible. Bro. Robert Hall, from N. B., is expected to be in attendance with us. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of men, and God shall have the glory. In behalf of the church,

Israel Damman.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at the Advent Hall, Meredith, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. Daniel Churchill, John Parsons, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and work for the Lord.

Maine East. Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in Cushing, at the lower house, commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 28th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go to this meeting prepared to work for the salvation of the perishing. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will call on Brn. N. Hathorn, Wm. Stone, Wm. Morton, and Simon Davis.

For the brethren, Jer. Carr.

Notice.

The Conn. A. C. Conference, which was noticed in the Crisis to be held in New Haven, Wednesday, Jan. 6th, 1869, is postponed until Jan. 27th, 1869. The church in New Haven are building a chapel, and it will not be finished until the 27th, and ready for the reception of the conference, at which time their hearts will be open to receive us with cordial welcome. We have some very important business to attend to at this conference, and we hope that every church in the State will send one or more delegates, and all the ministering brethren will be present. Let all pray that God will crown our efforts with everlasting good.

B. Hitchcock, President.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at Sawyer's Mills, in Starks, Me., Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, to labor for the salvation of the perishing.

L. C. Wellcome.
E. M. Haggett.

Notice.

All persons wishing to write to the Advent people at Hampton (preachers and all), will please write to Horace Brown, or John N. Marston, Hampton, N. H.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garriques, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God, Matt. 21: 43; what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" For the World's Crisis.

THE PILGRIM'S PRAYER.

O Jesus, merciful and kind,
Give me a meek and lowly mind;
Help me each day thy will to know,
And follow thee while here below.

May I my cross with patience bear,
Till I the crown of life shall wear;
Till thou shalt end these sad complaints,
And give me rest with all the saints.

Often the way looks dark and drear;
Dear Savior, be thou ever near,
To guide me safely o'er life's way,
And bring me home to endless day.

Surely the race is almost run,
My trials now are nearly done;
Soon I shall leave this world of strife,
And reign with thee through endless life.

O yes, I'll reign forevermore
On that eternal, heavenly shore;
With all thy saints I'll live and sing
Loud praise to thee, my Savior King.

Lord, then I shall more fully see
The blessing of the cross to me,
The wonders of that mighty hand,
That led me to the promised land.

Concord, N. H. M. V. SALTMARSH.

For the World's Crisis.

PIC-NIC RELIGION.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

"Sitting down to eat and drink, and rising up to play."

"While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way."—MATT. 13: 25.

(Concluded.)

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED. I. "Are we to renounce all mirth, be dull and melancholy?" Answer.—Seriousness and solid happiness are inseparable. "I said in my heart, go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure; and behold this also is vanity. I said of laughter it is mad, and of mirth what doeth it?" Eccl. 2: 1, 2. "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heaviness." Prov. 14: 13.

2. Is there not time for all things?" Answer.—There is no time for sin and folly.

OBJECTION 3d. Young people love sport, worldly excitement, fun and frolic, and these they will have more or less; why not then seek something to gratify this natural propensity less objectionable than the theatre, the ball-room or opera-house; choose the least of two evils? Answer.—That is, "do evil that good may come," meet the tempter half way. Commit a little sin, to prevent a greater. Serve Satan a little to keep our children from serving him a great deal! What doctrine is this? Whence is it? "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." 1 Kings, 18: 21. "Wo to them that call evil good and good evil."

But why is it, friends, that your sons and daughters are thus given to these unholy propensities, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God? slaves to lust, passion, and appetite? Is not the secret of this downward course to ruin owing to parental neglect? The sin of omission in not obeying God in training them "in the way they should go," in the fear and wisdom of God? Children rightly disciplined from early infancy, on Bible principles, will have no relish whatever for these carnal festivities, unholy excitements, fun and frolic, but will turn from them with perfect hatred and disgust.

"The love of God flows just as much
As that of ebbing self subsides."

OBJECTION 4th.—Says one, "We will have a decent or respectable festival, tea, or strawberry party, to raise funds to meet our necessities in the church and Sabbath-school. It shall be opened and closed with religious exercises, reading the Scriptures and prayer. Everything objectionable shall be excluded, foolish talking and jesting, the post-office, grab-boxes, ring-cakes, lotteries, gambling, nightly revellings, intemperance of every kind."

Answer.—"Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?" "Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned?" Why not talk of a decent or respectable theatre as a "fancy fair?" The thing is wrong in itself. No good cause can ultimately prosper or succeed that is not founded on christian principle, the authority of the Most High. "Wo to them that go down to Egypt for help." The Religious Herald says:

"The fact that 'fairs' make the procurement of means to pay for a house of worship or to purchase a Sunday-school library, simply a matter of buying and selling, resolves itself into a weighty objection to their propriety. They are departures from the New Testament method of meeting the pecuniary necessities of the church, and so far forth must operate against the spirit of self-denial, liberality, and faith which that method calls into action.

"2. Whatever is done by a church, or by a portion of the members for it, should be so done as neither to sacrifice nor to obscure that which distinguishes the church from the world. How totally fairs, festivals, or tea-parties fail to meet this requirement, we need not tarry to depict. They are scenes of mirthfulness and levity, in which men can trace nothing that distinguishes the church from the world."

Besides, the precedent of making God's house a house of merchandise, is a dangerous one. When we see the whole world on fire with sin and Satan, shall we add fuel to the flame by our example? "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

"The course of evil
Begins so slowly, and from such light source,
An infant's hand might stop the breach with clay;
But let the stream get deeper, and philosophy,
Aye, and religion too, shall strive in vain
To turn the headlong current!"

"Abstain from all appearance of evil."

ANNUAL FAIRS, AGRICULTURAL.—Are these promotive of temperance and virtue? Are they not frequently if not always gotten up by speculators, selfish, money-loving men? A beloved minister of the gospel in Madison county, New York, informs us that these fairs are exceedingly corrupting and demoralizing. And, strange to say, not a few professing christians lend their hands in sustaining this iniquity in high places—intemperance, licentiousness, Sabbath desecration, and gambling in various forms. Hear this beloved minister in his own words:

"DEAR BROTHER N.—There is a very great and popular evil in our midst, which you and other good men, it seems, have failed hitherto to expose. I allude to annual fairs in nearly every county town. They are the curse of the land! Their demoralizing influences are shocking, God-defying! The people are gulled; many of them swallow a sugar-coated pill of Satan, greedily and in some cases innocently. Above all, I regret to inform you that church-members unite in sustaining these fairs, gotten up chiefly by rum-sellers and gamblers to line their own pockets. I care not how pure the motive in the outset with which these annual gatherings may have been introduced, they are now mainly in the hands of ungodly men. Drinking to drunkenness, gambling, horse-racing, circus ridings, puppet-showings, lewdness, and profanity, are the order of the day—go hand in hand. I beseech you, in the name of God, raise your voice like a thunder-clap against this increasing abomination.

WHAT ARE WE COMING TO?—The amount of peculation, embezzlement, and fraud committed in our cities, much of which is kept from the public eye, is perfectly enormous. High living, fast teams on Central Park, flashy jewelry, novels and romances, costly wardrobes, the opera and restaurants use up our young men, and in the morning of their life they become bankrupt in character and purse, and their sun goes down while it is yet day.

"The emissaries of Satan are doing all they possibly can, by means of the thousand tongued printing-press, to scatter the seeds of moral desolation and death everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the land. They appear in the form of novels, licentious tales, obscene books, pamphlets, and papers; also in periodicals professedly devoted to the promulgation of Bible truth, but which are thoroughly impregnated with deadly theological errors—errors that will insure the damnation of all those who embrace them. This pernicious literature is thrust upon the people—in all possible ways, and in all possible places. And the very worst feature in this case is, that many prominent ministers and members of Protestant denominations, as well as Catholics, are actually engaged in the spread of the soul-damning publications. Henry Ward Beecher, one of the most popular preachers, writes a novel, and for a large sum of money allows it to be published in a paper devoted to the pampering of the corrupted tastes of lost sinners; and then with his clerical robes still wrapped around him, allows it to be dramatized and acted in the principal theatres of the country, thus lending his great influence to aid on the work of soul-destruction, while he still claims to be a minister of the Lord Jesus Chaist! And then, to clap the climax of this absurdity and wickedness, the book is advertised for pay, and offered as a premium for subscribers, by some of the principal religious papers of the country?* Various other novels, vicious in their nature and tendency, are unblushingly advertised in these same religious papers, (?) as if there was no sin in such advertisements.

SERVING TWO MASTERS; LIKE PRIEST, LIKE PEOPLE.—"During the past summer we have seen ministers in high standing play hours at croquet, and at evening, before the people, lead the social prayer-meeting. We have seen three doctors of divinity, and one promising candidate for that honor, playing nine-pins at the same alley. We have seen leading ministers of different denominations, in a large parlor, lead the assembly in 'amusement' at charades, conundrums, and other like sports, and with no misgivings preach and administer communion a Sabbath after. We are growing in the wisdom that attains flowers without thorns—and without fruit. We are adopting a cross disarmed of its nails and wreathed with roses, a flowery bed of ease, whereon to be carried to the skies. In absence of the music of heaven, we are lulled and charmed by the music of the opera. The sword of the Spirit, 'sharp and piercing to the dividing asunder of joints and marrow,' is muffled with flowers of poppy, a wand of sensuous soothing and spiritual numbness."

NEW YEAR'S VISITATIONS.—The custom of visiting from house to house on the first day of the new year, partaking to surfeiting rich and costly dainties, whence is it? Whence these unwholesome viands spread out temptingly to the lust of the eye, to the gratification of the carnal appetite, from above or from beneath? Aside from the enormous expenditure on these pernicious condiments, worse than lost, look at the frequent accompaniments, the intoxicating bowl, the sparkling death and distilled damnation! How many young men see (when too late) this stratagem of Satan! How many date their downward course to ruin from these New Year's visitations—become dissipated sots, and go down prematurely to a drunkard's grave!

"Who sows to winds, the whirlwind reaps,
And life's great end confounds!
Then be, ye stewards, wise to escape
The wrath that knows no bounds."

This mischievous custom of eating and drinking to excess, this criminal waste of God's bounty, is not confined to the world, but to very many professing godliness. "Wo to him that giveth his neighbor drink." Who suffers like woman from intemperance? Who drinks to the dregs the cup of bitterness like the drunkard's wife but the delicately reared daughter of her who controlled the fashions, and would have wine at her parties? Their is not a lady who sets before young men the intoxicating cup, concerning whom we may not say, "Father, forgive her, she knows not what she does." When the destinies of men are unfolded, in the final day, how many of the lost will reflect with anguish on female influence!

"O shun the bowl—as thou wouldst leave
The poisoned spot where reptiles tread,
Lest widows' hearts for thee should grieve,
For thee untimely tears be shed."

IN CONCLUSION.—We are commanded not to love the world. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed."

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." "Ye are the salt of the earth," "A city set on a hill."

"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people." "Lively stones; a spiritual house to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God." "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

PRACTICE YOUR PRINCIPLES.

We cannot often see how principles can be carried out, till we begin to carry them out. Some principles seem altogether impracticable, untill we approach them in the way of practice. When we practice one principle, we see how a second can be practiced, and when we practice a second and third, we are then prepared to practice a fourth and fifth. No man can see his way through the work of reformation when he first begins it, nor even when he has got some way on with it. Many principles and doctrines seem extravagant to a reformer when he begins his career, which prove to be true and necessary when he has gone on some way. We sometimes think that principles are impracticable, because they cannot be practiced without upsetting some other principle. But perhaps that other principle or doctrine is a bad one, and needs to be upset. Our plan should be to adopt whatever principle or doctrine commends itself to our judgment as true and divine, and to resolve to reduce such to practice, whatever the consequences may be. The practice of the truth will never destroy anything but error and evil.

Have courage, friends, have faith in truth. Be not frightened at the idea of old things passing away; the practice of the truth will make all things new. You will do nothing as you ought, unless you learn to place confidence in truth, and to risk something for its sake—Selected.

OUR SAVIOR'S CARE.

Trusting in my loving Jesus,
Gently folded in his arms,
He who loves and careth for us,
Safely guards from all that harms.

Wildly now the night is lowering,
But the closer will we cling,
Looking for that happy morning,
Which shall peace and comfort bring.

If we leave this loving shelter,
Seeking better paths to find,
Yielding to the cruel tempter,
He will lead us far behind.

But when weary of our wandering,
Faint and foot-sore all the day,
Jesus calls—we hear him saying,
Come to this the only way.

Gladly then for shelter fly we
Once more to his loving arms;
May we never, never leave thee,
Resting near thee safe from harm.

THE WORD OF GOD ON DRESS.

The Bible is the word of God. No further revelation is necessary. What we have needs no additional miracle to determine its authority. But, receiving, as many professedly do, the truth that all that is necessary to the present and eternal well-being of the soul has been clearly defined by the great Lawgiver, what infidelity does their practice, as christians, oppose to their theory! I refer to the increasing extravagance in dress among professed christians.

I ask those who really desire to advance the cause of Christ, to pause and consider what the word of God enjoins. I am not a stickler for a certain shade in color,—for an invariable form of garment, nor yet for any rules which prohibit the exercise of taste in variety, neatness, and convenience. All these may be consulted without violating health, happiness, or God's word. I love propriety and delicacy in shades, proportion and good taste in form; nor do I think religion lessens a correct taste, but rather gives the last touch of refinement. Yet while God has so indulgently given every innocent pleasure, who is content with what he has allowed? How few have taken the Bible as their guide, are willing to acknowledge its requisitions upon the outer as well as the inner man! While open transgressors of the holy law, it may be they had very clear views of what constituted the christian, in every outward expression of the soul. They could detect every discrepancy between the life and creed of a worldly-minded professor. Why, in taking upon them the sacred profession, have they contrived to lower the standard?—to persuade themselves that the very things they condemned in others, have all at once become non-essential to a christian character? Has grace blighted their moral vision? Can they assume, as their sister did, that God commanded only what we find in the decalogue?

I fear that here we are guilty; here is our infidelity. Do we believe that "all Scripture is given by inspiration"? Tell a sister that God's word condemns the "putting on of gold and costly apparel." She replies, "I know there is such a passage, but it is not in the words of Christ"; or, "Yes, but that is not a command; I would lay them aside if I felt it a duty."

There are ministers who stoutly affirm that these passages in Timothy and Peter, relative to apparel, were never intended for our benefit, and others who declare they do not know what gold was made for if not to wear. And infinite wisdom merely outlined the essential paragraphs of divine truth with unimportant matters, never designed for our observance. Then let common sense and religion call for revision and emendation, till we know what God means, and what he does not.

Are not such interpretations proof of a heartless religion? What wonder that infidels see more consistency in a "natural religion," where every passion has full sway in heart and life. The gospel seems to commend itself to us as truth, because it seeks the destruction of both root and branch of sin. Shall we ward off its arrows because they speed toward our idols—our small ones—even one?

The apostles Paul and Peter expressly forbid four things which are every day becoming more common among professing christians; viz., gold, pearls, costly array, and curled hair. Weighty arguments against these sins have been drawn from squandered time and money, that God gave us for nobler uses. . . . I know that these splendid christians think (if they say what they think) that they bestow less thought upon their persons than she who is so careful as to what impression she leaves on the sinner's mind. Yet, with all this affected indifference, never have I found one who would fain justify herself, make a sacrifice of her ornaments, without a struggle that told where the heart was.

You, my sister, who indulge this love of show, if you have ever had courage to apply the rigor of self-examination to your heart, can not be honest and not know that your aim is not to conform yourself to the Bible, but to adapt the Bible to the carnal bias of your own heart. I know it by experience, and so will you when you understand your motives. Pause and consider the consequences of your infidelity. They are not measured by material things. These trifles involve principles that will seal your doom; and God only knows how many of your fellow mortals. You can not detach one act from the motive that prompts it. A fearful retribution awaits that soul, who, to pamper any appetite, dares to trifle with divine truth. These things I have felt, not because thus educated, but because I asked and permitted the Holy Spirit to show me the depths of my heart. Who shall commence the reform that will pour wealth into the coffers of the Lord, and remove from the church one of the most glaring inconsistencies? that will cut off what is at once a carnal pleasure, and the avenue of sin from the world to the soul? "How long, O Lord?"—Selected.

GOING TO BE A SOLDIER.

"Mother, I'm going to be a soldier."

"A soldier, John, pray, don't think of such a thing. I should be so unhappy."

"Can't help it, mother; my resolution is taken. I'm sorry I did not think of it before; but 'better late than never.' Yes, I'll be a soldier, endure the hardships of one, fight to the death for my King. Difficulties will not deter me; danger will not fright me. Though the campaign be a rough one, the battles many, the enemy fierce and formidable, I will not shrink from duty; my mind's made up. I'm determined to be a soldier."

"You'll break your mother's heart, John, if you do so. My son a soldier?"

"Yes, a soldier of the Cross, mother."

"God bless you, my son. You have taken a load from my heart. Yes, be a soldier of the cross, John. Enlist under the banner of Jesus, the Christ, the Anointed of God, the King of Israel. Ah! 'tis a glorious warfare, and you are sure of victory; there is no fear of defeat. But you will have subtle enemies to contend with; therefore be watchful; never sleep on your post, though your entrenchments be strong; your Captain may come and find you sleeping. Be vigilant. Challenge all strange ideas which may try to find their way into the camp of your mind. Beware that they come not from the enemy disguised in the uniform of friendly counsel. Heed not the arrows of ridicule, the bolts of envy, or the darts of scorn. Though the batteries of persecution open their fire upon you, be not dismayed. 'Put on the whole armor of God.' Stand firm, 'having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace.' Taking also 'the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.'

"Thus armed, fear no foe. Battle valiantly, struggle nobly, and victory is yours. Then when your warfare is over, when your campaign is ended, your reward will be—not a medal, an epaulet, or a sash, but eternal life, a crown of glory, and an inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who is the Captain of our salvation." LINES.*

Your little one is sleeping,
In quiet, dreamless rest;
While you are sadly weeping,
She slumbers with the blest.

A bud of fairest promise,
Blighted ere it could bloom;
How lovely will the flower be
In that bright world to come.

No sickness e'er can reach her,
Nor pain, nor any woe;
Sorrow such as you now feel,
Your darling never'll know.

I know how much you'll miss her,
A shadow's on your home,
And oft you'll sigh for that dear voice,
Now silent in the tomb.

And yet you will not sorrow
As those whose hopes are vain;
The promise still is sure,
Your child shall live again.

God bless you, brother, sister,
And heal each wounded heart;
Go, cast your burden on him,
He'll strength and grace impart.

With gentle meek submission,
Waiting till Jesus comes,
When you will clasp your darling,
Forever safe at home.

DRAW NIGH TO GOD.

It is the constant and earnest desire of every christian that he may realize the nearness of his heavenly Father. In affliction, he cries out with Job, "O that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat." What pious soul fails to respond to the prayer expressed in these lines—

"Nearer, my God, to thee, nearer to thee, E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me."

In the "song of songs, which is Solomon's," we read, "I sought him whom my soul loveth; I sought him, but I found him not." Still seeking him with longing heart, soon we hear the joyful sound, "I found him whom my soul loveth; I held him, and would not let him go."

If there is one to whom this message comes who is seeking the Lord sorrowing, or who has sought him and found him not, I have a "thus saith the Lord" for you,—a most precious promise, a plain promise, that can not be misunderstood. It is recorded in James 4: 8:—"Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." As in the parable of the prodigal son, the father saw him returning and ran to meet him; so the Lord hastens to meet those who seek him.

As the prophet Azariah said to king Asa, so may we say to every one who is seeking the source of life and salvation: "If ye seek him, he will be found of you." And we exhort all to "seek the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."—Isa. 55: 6. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Webster, Mass.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were drawn up by a New England pastor of large experience and marked success, and the distribution of them among his people has proved highly beneficial:—

1. I propose to be at meeting regularly and punctually. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together."

2. I will endeavor to draw others to the meeting. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

3. Before entering the chapel I will ask the Savior's presence. "We would see Jesus."

4. I will not, unless it is necessary, occupy a back seat. "How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

5. I will not seat myself so as to hinder others from occupying the same settee with me. "Be courteous."

6. I will refrain from fault-finding, and will not indulge in a criticizing spirit. "Be kindly affectionate one to another."

7. I will endeavor to cultivate brotherly love and concord. "That ye be perfectly joined together in one mind."

8. So far as is consistent, I will assist actively in the exercises, by testifying to the love of Christ, by exhortation, by a passage of Scripture, a hymn, a stanza, or otherwise. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs."

9. I will not decline to lead in prayer. "Ye also helping together by prayer for us."

10. My prayers and remarks shall not be long. "For God is in heaven, and thou upon the earth; therefore let thy words be few."

11. If I offer the first prayer, it shall be chiefly an invocation asking the Savior's special presence and aid. "For without me ye can do nothing."

12. I will cultivate enlargement of faith and desires. "Let us, therefore, come boldly to the throne of grace."

13. On leaving the place I will endeavor to maintain a devout frame of mind. "Continue in prayer."

14. I will also endeavor to use all means suited to secure the blessing for which I have prayed. "Faith, without works is dead also."

My dear friend, are the foregoing resolutions uncalled for, or unreasonable? Would not the adoption of them prove a blessing to yourself and to the church?

Will not failure herein be a detriment to yourself and others, and be displeasing to the Master?

THE LIFE OF THE HAPPY MAN.

THE HAPPY MAN was born in the city of Regeneration, in the parish of Repentance-unto-Life. He was educated at the school of Obedience, and now lives in the plain of Perseverance; he works at the trade of Diligence, notwithstanding he has a large estate in the country of Christian Contentment, and many times does jobs of Self-Denial. He wears the plain garment of Humility, and has a better suit to put on when he goes to court, called the robe of Christ's Righteousness. He often walks in the valley of Self-Abasement, and sometimes climbs the mountain of Spiritual-Mindedness. He breakfasts every morning upon Spiritual Prayer, and sups every evening on the same. He has meat to eat which the world knows not of, and his drink is the sincere Milk of the Word. Thus happy he lives, and happy he dies.

Happy is he who has gospel submission in his will; due order in his affections; sound peace in his conscience; sanctifying grace in his soul; real divinity in his breast; true humility in his heart; the Redeemer's yoke on his neck; a vain world under his feet, and a crown of glory over his head. Happy is the life of such a one. In order to attain which, pray fervently; believe firmly; wait patiently; work abundantly; live holy; die daily; watch your heart; guide your senses; redeem your time; love Christ, and long for GLORY.—Miss Tabitha Robbins, in 1796.

"WHAT JESUS DID FOR ME."—We may learn a profitable lesson from the poor Indian in his wilderness home, who, when asked what the Lord had done for him, gathered some dry leaves into a circle, and, placing a worm in the centre, set them on fire. As the flames drew nearer on every side, and were about to consume the worm, he lifted it out, and placing it safely on a rock, looked up and said, "This is what Jesus did for me." O for like simplicity and faith, so we may feel that, if saved, it must be by no works of our own, but by the Omnipotent hand, which alone can rescue us from the everlasting flames, and place us safely on the rock—Christ Jesus.

Gems.

— We must tell some men a great deal to teach them a little.

— A man's trials cannot be insufferable if he lives to talk about them.

— Speak well of your friend; of your enemy say nothing.

— Discretion in speech is greater and better than eloquence.

— Zeal without knowledge is fire without light.

— A man may have much of the world, and not be much of a man.

— The imaginary troubles are to us like the dissolving views of a chimera; sometimes magnified a hundred fold.

— To live nobly, we must be noble; and we become noble by resolutely banishing every unworthy thought and feeling.

— Real christians are the resemblances of Christ; and if we love the original, we must also love the copy.

— Bury your troubles, but do not linger around the graveyard conjuring up their ghosts to haunt you.

— Modest people are not the soonest frightened. "I wonder what they will think of me," is not the inquiry of humility but of vanity.

— He that openly tells his friends all that he thinks of them, must expect that they will tell his enemies much that they do not think of him.

— If you have performed an act of great and disinterested virtue, conceal it; if you publish it, you will neither be believed here, nor rewarded hereafter.

— Redemption is the most glorious theme of the loftiest intellects in the universe; of the mental powers of the sons of light themselves.

— As the ancients held those places sacred that were blasted by lightning, we ought to pay a tender regard to those visited with affliction.

— The services of earthly temples are intended to prepare for the employment of heaven, and to conduct their worshipers to its happiness.

— Suppose that you had a title to demand some proof of God's love, what more could you demand than that which he has already given?

— There is no honor like a relation to Christ; no riches like the grace of Christ; no learning like the knowledge of Christ; and no person's learning like the servants of Christ.

— The warp of God's providences for doing good, are stretched all along our pathway, and if we fill it up with good works, it will constitute a garment which will shield us in the coming storm.

— A sincere man is not gilded but gold; not a splendid and burnished plating outside, to cover up baser metal within, but all the way through to the heart what he outwardly appears to be.

— A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments when much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than great offenses in bad men.

— Our character as sinners leads into the sweetest intimacies of the Lord of life and glory. As creatures, we know the strength of his hand, his wisdom and goodness; but as sinners, we know all the love of his heart and all the treasures of his grace and glory.

— Murmur at nothing; if our ills are reparable, it is ungrateful; if remediless, it is vain. A christian builds his fortitude on a better foundation than stoicism; he is pleased with everything that happens, because he knows it could not happen unless it had first pleased God, and that which pleases him must be the best. He is assured that no new thing can befall him, and that he is in the hands of a father who will prove him with no affliction that resignation cannot conquer, or that death cannot cure.

BREAD PUDDING.—Take light white bread and cut in thin slices. Put into a pudding-shape a layer of any kind of preserve, then a little slice of bread, and repeat until the mold is almost full. Pour over all a pint of warm milk, in which four well-beaten eggs have been mixed; cover the mold with a piece of linen, place in a saucepan with a little boiling water, let it boil twenty minutes, and serve with pudding-sauce.

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 13.

THE AMOUNT OF SLEEP NECESSARY.

Some people sleep little, others sleep much. Frederick the Great and John Hunter are said to have required only five hours sleep out of the twenty-four. Napoleon Bonaparte used to sleep only four hours a day. Pitt could enjoy tolerable health for months on three. On the contrary, some men have been prodigious sleepers. Claude Piron could snooze from midnight to mid-day. Martel could lie for ten hours in the most profound mental inertia, and all Jove's thunder's failed to rouse him till his sleep was made out. Quin, the celebrated actor, often slept twenty-four consecutive hours.

It would seem that much depends upon habit as to the amount of sleep required, the man limiting himself to four hours sleep daily, being able to sleep so soundly during that time, as to compensate for the brief duration of the repose. Such persons would dream little.

It has been remarked that the briefest sleepers are men of the greatest mental activity. The best scholars, thinkers, and literary men do not spend more than one-third or one-fourth of the diurnal cycle in sleep (a.) It may be laid down as a general rule that from six to eight hours sleep out of the twenty-four is absolutely necessary to keep the system of an adult in a state of health.

A word about sleeping rooms. If eight hours out of the twenty-four are employed in sleep, it will be perceived that we habitually spend one-third of our time in our bed-rooms. Hence we see the importance of having those rooms, where we are obliged to spend so large a portion of time, spacious and well-ventilated. How many persons sleep in little narrow, contracted dormitories where not a breath of air finds entrance, except as it forces its way through little chinks in the windows, or crevices about the doors. Bed-rooms should be large and airy, and better too cold than too warm. How refreshed you awaken, even from a short sleep in a cold room; how dull and languid you feel if that room has been too hot.

Why is ventilation so necessary? Remember that the brain must have plenty of pure blood. It is a fact that this organ, though only one-fortieth the weight of the entire body, receives one-fifth of all the blood in circulation. Hence we see the dependence of mind on blood, and this blood must be plentifully charged with oxygen, the great vivifying, thought-producing agent. Bear in mind, without oxygen the brain cannot work, nor can its waste be repaired, for its nutritive elements are derived from the purest of arterial blood. You cannot have pure blood without plenty of pure air. If you breathe habitually, one-third of your time, an atmosphere over-heated, impregnated with the noxious volatile emanations of the body, charged with carbonic acid, you cannot have sound and vigorous brains: you can neither enjoy nor put forth strong intellectual efforts.

There are other circumstances to be taken into account in considering the question of the amount of sleep. As sleep is a constructive process, it would seem that the amount of sleep taken should be proportionate to the mental and physical exercise of the waking hours. Hence the principle of "making up" for lost sleep is a correct one. Dr. Reid, the metaphysician, would go without sleep for several successive nights, and complain of but little discomfort; but he was in the habit of devoting a long period to sleep after this protracted vigilance was over. Schwan, the artist, who was accustomed to sleep six hours a-day, could pass, without suffering inconvenience, forty-eight hours without sleep, provided that he could get eight hours sleep on the following day.

The amount of sleep required by individuals is influenced a good deal by temperament and habits of diet. Thus, persons of a lymphatic temperament are the greatest of sleepers, on account of the dulness of their senses and perceptions. It is very hard to awaken such persons, and keep them awake. Their brains are about as inert as dead matter; there is just enough vitality in the system to keep its elements from putrefaction. Persons of a nervous or sanguine temperament sleep much less, though their sleep is more sound and refreshing.

Again: persons who habitually eat more food than they require, want more sleep than those who are abstemious in their diet, for the reason that the nervous and circulating energies must be largely occupied in carrying on digestion. The demand for sleep is felt, simply because the brain cannot receive a sufficient supply of blood for the active exercise of all its functions, without robbing the stomach; therefore it prefers, so to speak, to remain for a time torpid, than that flatulence colic, palpitations and other symptoms of indigestion should ensue. Hence we see the necessity of moderation in diet, if we would enjoy the fullest mental and physical vigor.

A hint to the dyspeptic.—A brief season of mental tranquility, if not of sleep, may be profitably enjoyed after each meal.

"The sleep of the laboring man is sweet though he eat little or much." Occupation has much to do with the amount of time devoted to sleep. The husbandman not unfrequently sleeps longer than the student or professional man. The waking state of such persons is a very active one; the wear and tear of the muscular system is immense, and long seasons of rest are needed during which the physical and vital energies shall be largely occupied with the work of muscular reparation. Blood goes from the brain to the muscles, and hence the inertion of sleep ensues. This explanation, however, only partially accounts for the prolonged sleep of such persons. The brain work of even the most humble day-laborer is by no means inconsiderable; the sensory, perceptive and voluntary faculties are kept constantly employed during their daily occupations. They often toil for hours in obedience to a painful exercise of the will, amid an almost overpowering sense of muscular weariness.

Now it is a physiological fact that a purely voluntary act fatigues the brain more than an involuntary or automatic one. Hence the protracted sleep of the day-laborer must be due in a considerable degree to the state of the nervous system; while at the same time the great muscular fatigue, which is the predominant sensation, and the increased circulation in the muscles for the purpose of repair, must furnish just that very condition of the cerebral blood-vessels which has been alluded to as the proximate cause of sleep. Whether the brain actually feels the necessity of sleep or not, if that condition on which sleep depends be supplied, the cerebral functions will become suspended.

A most powerful remedy is here indicated for that morbid vigilance which often drives the sufferer to the verge of despair, if not into insanity. Take an hour or two of hard muscular exercise before going to bed.

THE INFLUENCE OF AGE IN REGULATING THE AMOUNT OF SLEEP TO BE TAKEN.

Extremes of life are noted for somnolent habits. The new-born infant sleeps the greater part of the time, and children require much more sleep than adults, because infancy and childhood is essentially a period of nutrition and growth of construction and development; a period, not so much of repairing as of making brain.

In extreme old age, we see also disposition manifested to pass very much of the diurnal cycle in sleep. Old age is the time of waste and decay; this very fact would necessitate taking much sleep. Moreover, the nutritive and nervous functions all languish and the senses and perceptions become less and less acute, till at length long periodical seasons of unrefreshing sleep are followed by a sleep that knows no waking till the archangel's trump shall sound which shall call forth the dead from their graves.

Is rounded with a sleep." H.

THE PENALTY OF TOO MUCH BRAIN WORK.

Dr. Parker, of New York, delivered a lecture in that city, in which he showed the evils proceeding from the transgression of the limits of their physical powers by literary men, etc. He said: "No man can do head work faithfully for more than four or five or six hours. If that time is exceeded, all the phosphorous is carried off, and the man becomes irritable, broken down, and has softening of the brain. I have seen this overwork in lawyers, doctors, clergymen and merchants, who have worked the brain for ten hours. They have dropped under the burden. You cannot violate the law of God with impunity. Sir Walter Scott did a large amount of brain work in his day, but he did not overwork himself. In his latter days, however, he became pecuniarily embarrassed, and resorted to his literary pursuits to save himself; but he worked too hard and completely broke himself down. One of the best scholars I ever knew broke himself down in his younger days, but he lived on to seventy, though he could only work some four hours a day. After these hours he engaged in vigorous exercises to keep him out of the house as much as possible, and he continued one of the best professors in the country."

HOW TO TREAT FROZEN PARTS.—Put the frozen part into water in which there is a considerable portion of ice in small pieces. The ice will keep the temperature of the water down to the requisite degree of coldness, but there will be no danger of the freezing going on while the water remains uncongealed. A thermometer is very convenient to test the temperature of the water. If one becomes frozen at a distance from a house, it would be advisable to plunge the hand as deep as possible into a drift of snow, and take some of that to apply to the afflicted parts, as it will be at a temperature much above that on the surface. Nothing is better settled than that the frozen portion should not be rubbed, as the flesh would become very sore in consequence. The flesh near to that which is frozen may be rubbed, however, to good advantage, as that will hasten the circulation of the blood.

TO PURIFY A ROOM.—Set a pitcher of water in a room, and in a few hours it will have absorbed all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water is, the greater the capacity to contain these gases. At ordinary temperature a pail of water will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia. The capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water to the temperature of ice. Hence, water kept in a room a while is always unfit for use. For the same reason the water from a pump should always be pumped out in the morning before any of it is used. Impure water is more injurious than impure air.

COAL GAS.—A physician attributes much of the sickness in winter to the bad effects of coal gas. He says in nine out of ten houses that he enters, he notices coal gas in the air they breathe. Many times he finds the damper in the stove pipe closed to save coal, and the result is a room full of gas, not noticed by the inmates perhaps, but by those who come in from the fresh air. He condemns dampers of every kind in pipes where coal is used. He says shut your stove tight, and cover your fire with ashes, if it burns too fast, but don't have a damper in the stove pipe.

TO CURE A CANCER.—An old nurse says that a poultice of cream and sulphur will wonderfully alleviate, if not absolutely cure a cancer. The poultice must be thick, and the patient should drink cooling beverages, and be kept quiet.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

Blest and holy, happy they
  Who on this morn shall rise,
Prepared to mount and meet their Lord
  Descending from the skies.

O'er them no second death hath power,
  No more of care or pain;
Eternal life is their reward,
  With Christ their Lord to reign.

The mighty sea gives up its dead,
  The souls that slept therein,
O'er whom grim death so long hath reigned,
  The cause of man's first sin.

On earth the graves are opened wide,
  Their tenants upward soar;
The curse on them no more remains,
  They rise to sin no more.

Yea, all who fell asleep in Christ
  Now leave their kindred earth,
Born again with Spirit life,
  The glorious second birth.

The just who live are also changed,
  (They were not born to die);
With joyful hearts they meet their Lord
  Descending from on high,

And to the New Jerusalem,
  Where joy and peace doth reign,
They go to dwell with Christ their King,
  For ever to remain.

Now comes to pass what prophets spake,
  What rapt Isaiah sang,
And angels sung at Bethlehem,
  Till heaven's high arches rang:

"All glory be to God on high,"
  The song bursts forth again,
And o'er the earth, from sea to sea,
  Peace and good will to men.

THE RICH MAN AND THE BEGGAR.

LUKE 16: 19–31.

It is impossible by giving this parable a literal interpretation to harmonize it with any known theory; every attempt involves insurmountable difficulties. Our orthodox friends use it to prove that man has a soul or spirit which is either happy or miserable after death; these terms, however, do not occur at all in the parable, but are supplied to support the theory, and are used interchangably contrary to scriptural authority.

A careful reading will show that the identity of both the rich man and beggar are preserved throughout, and that it is fulfilled before the resurrection of the dead.

To be liberal, we will allow our friends the synonymous use of soul and spirit, accept their definition of the same, and test their theory by this parable. Says one of their writers: The Spirit has neither form, weight, nor color, and cannot be seen, felt, nor measured. An immaterial foundation surely. Now imagine two such spirits looking at each other, both invisible, and separated by a great distance, yet one discovers the other possessed of fingers, while he solicits a drop of water to cool his tongue. Our friends have exhibited here a power of speech and vision, giving unmistakable evidence of materiality, and surpassing even their most sanguine expectations. The spirits decidedly protest against the foundation of this theory, and upon their testimony we leave our friends to adjust the material already discovered to their immaterial theory.

It is further assumed that Abraham mentioned in the parable is in heaven. God told him (Gen. 15: 15), "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age."—Josh. 24: 2. We learn his fathers were idolaters, and (Eph. 5: 5) that no idolater can inherit the kingdom of God.

From this testimony we learn that Abraham went to his fathers at death. If he went to heaven, then we have his idolatrous fathers in heaven. Our friends may be loth to accept this conclusion, but it is inevitable. If asked how he went to them, we read (Eccl. 3: 20), "All go to one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." (Job. 14: 12), "Man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Thus did Abraham go to his fathers.

The doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead can only obviate the difficulty in the case. His salvation is secured by the resurrection from the dead; his identity thus preserved complete into the kingdom of God, being gloriously changed from mortality to immortality. Luke 13: 28; 1 Cor. 15: 51–55. Hoping it may be for the glory of God, we will present what light we have upon this subject, trusting it will fare no worse than the view just considered.

Four principal characters are brought to view: rich man, beggar, Abraham, and dogs. The first, representing the "Levitical priesthood," embodied in the chief priests and Pharisees; the second, Jesus Christ; the third, God his Father; the fourth, Gentiles. Thus the beggar (Christ) is the speaker, and the rich man (chief priests and Pharisees) the hearers of this parable. These being the most prominent characters, the evident design of the parable is to show the superiority of the priesthood of Christ about to be inaugurated over the Levitical, the miserable end of the one, and the exaltation of the other. By keeping the characters distinct in the mind, a better understanding may be had.

1st. The rich man is clothed in purple and fine linen, and fares sumptuously every day. The clothing is accurately described (Ex. 39: 1–3, 8, 27–29); the fare (Lev. 2: 1–3, 10); its daily use (Num. 28: 2–3); and applied to the Levitical priesthood—"the rich man."

A certain beggar is laid at his gate full of sores, Christ came to his own, but they received him not. John 1: 11. The chief priests and Pharisees, representatives of the rich man, were the guilty party. Christ's condition when he came to them, as compared with the beggar, is thus described. Says the prophet (Isa. 53: 2–3), "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men." 2 Cor. 8–9,—"He was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor." Matt. 8: 20,—"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

His impoverished condition, lack of form, comeliness, and beauty, constitute the sores, the real cause of his rejection. He desired to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. "Moses and the prophets" were the table which the chief priests and Pharisees fed from, and when Christ came fulfilling the jots and tittles of their writings, they refused him even these crumbs, thus giving the lie to their false-hearted profession of being Moses' disciples, children of Abraham, and believers in the prophets.

The dogs came and licked his sores. Luke 7: 37–38. A Gentile woman, pitying his forsaken condition, came and washed his feet with her tears, wiped them with the hairs of her head, and anointed them with ointment. Matt. 15: 22–27. Another came desiring mercy at his hand. He said, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs. She saith, Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table."

Thus did the dogs (Gentiles) by faith discover beneath the impoverished condition of the beggar (Christ) the true character of him whose wants they administered to, and whom they worshipped.

The beggar died, and was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom. The rich man (Levitical priesthood) having proved a failure (Heb. 7: 11–12), another priest must arise, and when the beggar (Christ) died, was resurrected, and escorted by angels to the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, we have such an "high priest." Heb. 8: 1; 4: 14. His life was made up of suffering, but now he is at the right hand of his Father (Abraham's bosom) and glorified. Of the beggar it is said, In his lifetime he received evil things; but now he is comforted.

The rich man died and was buried. The priesthood of Christ being now inaugurated, the "Levitical priesthood" becomes extinct—dies. It may be asked, How could the rich man converse while dead? The "Levitical priesthood," though dead, has in the chief priests and Pharisees living representatives, who still cling to its lifeless skeleton of forms and ceremonies. By them it, being dead, yet speaketh.

When too late, they discover their fatal mistake, having rejected Christ, called down his blood upon themselves and children, they are represented as calling to God to send Christ back to alleviate their sufferings. Christ had previously told them (John 7: 32–33, and 13: 33), that he was going to him that sent him, and whither he went they could not come. He had made one sacrifice for sins, consequently he could not return to them in the character of the beggar for that purpose. Here is the impassable gulf.

Christ will come once again to be glorified in his saints, and to take vengeance on his enemies. He asked the chief priests and Pharisees (Matt. 21: 40–45), when he did so come, what he should do unto them? they reply, He will miserably destroy those wicked men; they also perceived that he spake his parables of them (45th verse); and thus they render the verdict against themselves.

Being thus buried in their ecclesiastical grave, their house left desolate, the curse of heaven resting upon them, nothing remaining but the lifeless skeleton of the Levitical priesthood, the "rich man," through them, receives his torments. He makes one more request in behalf of his five brethren, which evidently refers to their descendants. As in Matt. 25: 1, ten virgins represent the church; so here we have a definite number for an indefinite. The reply is, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

We learn from this parable the terrible consequences attending unbelief, rendered doubly severe by reason of willing ignorance cherished to gratify their proud hearts at the expense of their future life; for said Jesus to them, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." John 5: 40.

Let us take heed lest we fall through the same example of unbelief. These thoughts are penned after seeking wisdom from above, and if they will add to our knowledge of "things hard to be understood," let us give to God all the glory.—Amen.

Southington, Ct. O. D. WOODRUFF.

THE BIBLE.—There is no book like the Bible for excellent learning, wisdom and use. It is impossible that we can study it too much, or esteem it too much. Use the word of God—it will convert the sinner. Use the word of God—it will build up the believer. Believe in the word of God—it will feed you, and make your soul grow strong. Use the word of God—it will make you quick to discern between good and evil. If you cannot find time to read a chapter, read a verse; a single text well followed up and put in practice every day, would make no bad figure at the year's end. My Bible has been meat, drink, and company to me.—Dr. Robinson.

THE SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN.

What is it? This question has been often asked, and answered in many different ways; but I believe it is just as easily understood as as the other signs in the same connection. Jesus tells us after a certain tribulation the sun should be darkened, the moon also; has it been done? It has, and but few can be found who have ever examined the subject that will deny it, and that it was fulfilled literally, visibly. Now that being the case, is it a fair way to treat the subject to say the last sign given to the church is so much different from the others? I think not.

What is a sign for? is it not a signal given for information? Did not Jesus give the sign of the sun and stars as a matter of information to show the church that his coming was near? He certainly did. Just so with the next sign to appear, viz., the sign of the Son of man; it will be visible, and not only to the church, but to the tribes of the earth also.

Jesus says, "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." We find here that when the sign of the Son of man is seen, it is in heaven, and that the tribes of the earth mourn. Has there ever been a sign of this kind that has caused the tribes of the earth to mourn? I think not; in fact we know that the nations have been growing more and more proud and haughty. But here is a sign to appear that will cause the tribes, or nations, or people that compose these tribes, or nations, to mourn. Why mourn if they do not know of what the sign is a signal? We conclude that the sign and his coming are closely connected, from the fact that the sign causes mourning. Then what is it?

Jesus says he is coming in the glory of his Father, and in the glory of the angels, as well as his own glory.—Luke. 9: 26. Then let us see what this glory is. In Ex. 24: 17, we find that it was like devouring fire. Ezek. 43: 2. "The earth shined with his glory." Psa. 97: 3. "A fire goeth before him, and burneth his enemies." Many other passages might be brought; in fact, nowhere in the Bible is it mentioned as being anything else but light, or something that produces light. We find also that the glory of the Son and angels is the same as the Father's.—Acts. 22: 6, 8, 11; Rev. 18; 1. So we find that the glory with which Jesus is coming, will be light, brightness, or devouring fire.

It appears to me that this light, or brightness like devouring fire, and represented in some places as going before him, will constitute the sign of the Son of man and just precede the appearance of the Lord himself, causing the tribes of earth to wail because of him (Rev. 1: 7); then the ungodly will mourn because they know that it is too late for them, that the day of repentance is past, and they are lost, lost forever. Not so with the saints of God; they are rejoicing, saying, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us."

Jesus having now left the mediatorial throne, all hope for those that are not ready is gone; for there is no mediator now, and, of course, probation has ended; for man cannot be saved without a mediator between God and man. The spirit of God now in the world, restraining it, will be withdrawn and given to the saints of God. Here is the grace promised to be brought at the revalation of Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. 1: 13.

There are but few people that profess to believe the Bible who deny that the Lord is coming in glory, coming in the air; but many think he comes at death. If that is so, then his coming in glory will be his third coming, instead of his second; viz., first as a babe, second, at death, third, in glory; for certainly there cannot be much glory in his coming at death.

Another class think he comes and brings in a part of the human race, viz, the Jews; and when he comes for this purpose, he comes quietly, and unseen by the great mass.

If this be so, then when he comes and all the holy angels with him, and with the glory of the Father, Son and angels, and all the tribes of the earth mourn because of him, and the saints are caught up to meet him in the air, this must also be his second coming.

I find but two comings; the first is in the past, the second just ahead. There will be no mistaking the sign of his coming; all will understand it. So if they say, "Behold he is in the desert, go not forth; behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not;" or in any other private way. And why? "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be."

May the Lord help those of us who are looking for these things, that we may not be led away from the plain word of God, which says he will come "in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," and that his sign will just precede his coming and be visible to all, so much so that the ungodly will mourn because of it. The Lord help us to keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and to rise above all hindering causes, so when the sign of the Son of man shall appear, we shall rejoice to know that our redemption is at hand. Very soon we shall see the sign of the dear Son of God, and then if ready, what a day of joy.

"O hail! happy day."

Then care, pain, sorrow, sickness, trial and death, and all that weigh us down here, forever, farewell. Then forever with the Lord. O, blessed thought! Oh God! help us all to be ready. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen. H. J. BALDWIN.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER THREE.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 JOHN 3: 8.

6. The wicked not raised from the dead as the righteous are.

The difference between the resurrection of the righteous and that of the wicked is this: the righteous are not only made alive by the "voice" of the Son of God, but they have the "spirit" of the Lord put into them (Ezek. 37: 14); and thus become immortal, or incorruptible. Rom. 8: 11. But the wicked are simply made alive by the "voice" of Christ, the same as the ruler's daughter of Capernaum, the widow's son of Nain, and Lazarus of Bethany, were made alive.

But it is a clear case that these persons must have died again, or Christ could not have been the "first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26: 23); that is, he was the first to rise from the dead, never to die again. Hence the wicked, not being made alive by the Spirit of God, they are merely "brought forth" in a corruptible state, just as they died. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22. That is, as each class die, in consequence or through Adam, even so shall each class be made alive in consequence of, or through Christ. The righteous live here in the spirit, or rather, the spirit of God is in them when in this life (Rom. 8: 11); and this same spirit will raise them up immortal.

But as the wicked live here without the spirit of God being in them; so, also, will they be raised without it; and, therefore, they must be raised mortal, just as they were when they died. Consequently, they must die again by being destroyed, "both soul and body in gehenna fire." With this agrees the language of Christ, where he says: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, (from the wicked dead, they not being raised at this time), they, the "worthy" ones, will live eternally, "neither can they die any more." Clearly implying that they which are not accounted worthy to obtain "that world," etc., can and will die again. Luke 20: 35, 36.

7. The wicked dead must live again.

That the wicked dead are to have a resurrection, is evident from many considerations. (1.) A portion of them must surely live again from the dead, or they can never "see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God." Luke 13: 28. When and where are these holy men to be seen who are now dead? Answer. When they shall be "in the kingdom of God." And when the wicked will thus see Abraham and others in the kingdom of God, it will be after the "Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door." And those who "see" these holy men in the kingdom of God, are the very ones who will say: "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." And at that time, and in that place, "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when" they "shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God," and they themselves "thrust out."

Proof more positive could not be given to show that the wicked dead must live again. For they are said to have eyes to "see," eyes to "weep," and teeth to "gnash." Dead ones have no eyes to see or weep, or teeth to gnash! This cannot be figurative language; if so, then is Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God, figurative also!

8. The wicked must die twice.

In Ezek. 18: 26, we read: "When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done, shall he die." This is clearly stated. (1.) If a man dies the first, or Adamic death, IN his sins; then (2), FOR his iniquity shall he die. Also in Rom. 8: 13, we read: "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Here, again, are two deaths plainly brought to view. It says, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." But what death is here spoken of? It surely cannot be the first death; for (1), they would die this death if they did not live after the flesh.

But again, "If ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Now it is plain (2), that if they do through the spirit mortify the deeds of the body, they must die the first, or the Adamic death. This is in perfect harmony with Ezek. 18: 26, just quoted above. If men die in their sins, then for their sins shall they die. "There is a sin unto death" (1 John 5: 16); and we need not pray to be delivered from it. This cannot be the first death here spoken of. For praying or no praying, a holy or an unholy life, does not prevent men from dying the first death.

And so the apostle adds: "And there is a sin not unto death. If men repent and turn to God with all the heart, and serve him fully, then their sins will be forgiven; and their past sins, thus forgiven, will not be unto death—the second death." Again in James 5: 20, we read: "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death." This cannot be the first death here spoken of; for converting men from the error of their ways will not prevent them from dying the first death, but it will save them from the second. Here, again, the same truth is taught that, if men die in their sins, then for their sins shall they die. And let us remember that it is the "Son of God" who is to "destroy the works of the devil." ISRAEL.

"Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel."

That the hope of man is built upon the promise of God no christian will deny. And that the fulfillment of that promise is dependant on the resurrection of the whole frame structure, bones, sinews, flesh and skin, is susceptible of proof from Scripture, to my mind is plain. And because it has come to be doubted by some, I thought proper to give my reasons.

And first, the promise of life was plainly indicated in the denouncement against the serpent. Gen. 3: 15. Although he had got the power of death by lying, in due time one mightier than he would come, and destroy him, with all his works and followers. Heb. 2: 14, 15, and Matt. 25: 45.

Second. The promises never were given to any man with a full understanding of them until Abraham was called to offer up his son Isaac. In Heb. 11: 17–19, it is written, "By faith Abraham offered up Isaac, his only begotten son, . . . accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead; from whence he received him in a figure." Here death, and resurrection from that death, stands at the very head of the promise upon which hangs the hope of the whole fold of God. That it was so understood by Abraham, is clearly seen by the expression—"accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead; from whence he received him in a figure."

Had Abraham believed as some believe now, he would have said the same things as said by such now, viz., Accounting that God would take the immortal soul of his dear son Isaac and make him an angel in Paradise, and through some angelic lineage in due time fulfill the promise. But nothing of the kind. As he really intended to take the life of his son, but was hindered by the Lord, so he received him as one risen from the dead.

Now I submit if this is not fair, and is it not proof, as it stands at the head of all the promises, and represents the Father of our Lord and Savior, who in due time offered up his own dear Son, whom he raised up from the dead, to confirm or fulfill this same promise to us. This is so understood by the apostles, as it is seen in Acts 13: 31, 32. "We declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, [the same] hath he fulfilled unto us their children [how, I ask], in that he hath raised Jesus again from the dead," no more to return to corruption.

Now, was he set forth as a forerunner and as a first fruits from the dead? And did he possess flesh and bones after his resurrection? Ans. 1 Cor. 15: 23. "Christ the first fruits." Heb. 6: 20. "Whither the forerunner hath for us entered." Luke 24: 39. "For a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."

Now all this is sustained and specified, God's word saying the same to Israel in Ezk. 37, only much more explicit, so as to cover all questions which might be raised, inasmuch as man is liable to be broken to pieces, and one bone lie in one place and others in another, as had already been in Israel's case, when this vision was shown; many of them had been killed, and died in various ways, like all other men. And they had departed from the true faith of Abraham, which took hold of the resurrection of the real man that was made of the dust, and supposed that the promises were all to be fulfilled in the present life; and because they were disappointed from generation to generation they were in despair, and said, "Our hope is lost. We are cut off for our parts." Then it was that this great vision was shown to their prophet. And I contend that this vision was given for no other purpose than to teach and comfort all that hope in the promises of God, to place the realization of that hope at the resurrection of the whole man, as specified in the vision; and that every thing specified in this representation was fulfilled in the Savior's exhibit, Except his bones did not dry, neither did his flesh see corruption, because the Scriptures cannot be broken.

Job stood in the same faith when he longed to be hid in the grave, for he knew that He who made him would have a desire to the work of his hands. Job 14: 13–15. That he means his material being. See 10: 8. "Thy hands have made me and fashioned me together round about." Again in chap. 19th. "In my flesh shall I see God." David certainly expresses the same thing where he says of himself in Ps. 49: 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me." And this he based on Christ, of whom he in Spirit spake in the 16th Psalm, saying that his flesh should "rest in hope." This is confirmed by Peter, as seen in the 2d of Acts, as meaning our Lord who, as a forerunner, had shown the path of life to all those who believe in God by him; as he said to Thomas, when Thomas said, "We know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way?" "I am the way."—John 14: 5, 6.

Israel had become completely discouraged. The Lord saw how they felt. He showed them that he would open their graves, and bring their scattered limbs to their fellow limbs, and bring them up, or cause them to come out of their graves. Said he, "I will put my spirit in you, and ye shall live." Here it seems that the spirit of life from God takes the place of the blood, which is the life of the flesh in the present state.

This agrees exactly with the event accompanying the resurrection of Jesus. Matt. 27: 52, 53. Here the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of their graves. Jesus said, "The hour is coming [not now is] when all that are in the graves shall hear his voice," etc. In perfect agreement with Job, who said, "Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee"; "thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands."

If it be asked did Jesus or any of the apostles refer to this vision, I answer, I know of no certain proof; yet I think there is strong presumptive proof in Luke 21: 27. "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." What was the absorbing subject at this time? Most certainly the mystery of his resurrection, which was so, only because of their unbelief in a personal, literal raising up again of the whole frame. If he expounded in all the Scriptures, of course Ezekiel is included; and it appears almost proof positive, when you read Luke 24: 39, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."

Who can say that this does not mean the whole frame, the same embodied as expressed in the vision? And David said in Ps 103: 14, "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." And as a further proof that this points to the fulfillment of the promise, the chapter closes with the declaration that the tabernacle of God should be with them; very similar to Rev. 21: 3.

For the World's Crisis.

"COMFORT YE MY PEOPLE."

DEAR BROS. AND SRS.:—For some days the subject of writing a letter for the Crisis has rested upon my heart. At first I thought I would write comfort for the little ones; I would give of such as I had to help feed the dear little lambs; but while I was thinking of them, there came pressing upon my heart images of those who, though not babes in years, yet whom wave upon wave have surged around and encompassed, until, like a helpless babe, they reach forth their hands and cry, "Save, or I perish!" How shall one choose words? How shall one walk upon the waters? How many are at this very moment in peril, and beginning to sink?

It is true that no power is able to save but Him who controls the winds, and they obey him; but did Jesus bid us fold our hands in peace when the hungry cried for bread, or the thirsty for a cup of cold water? Did he give us no commands to follow when his work in the flesh was accomplished? Oh, no! but he says, "The works that I do shall ye do also." "Comfort the mourners." "Love one another." "Support the weak." "Strengthen the feeble-hearted." O, blessed mission! Blessed Savior, thou wert love, and his mantle, dear brother, dear sister, has fallen on thousands this day alive, and upon thousands who once lived, and loved, and labored, but now are fallen asleep.

The thoughts that more than others rest upon my mind are for "those who mourn," and while the pens of strong men and women shall fill the columns of the "Crisis" with doctrine, and knowledge, and abundant food, yet possibly even my heart, filled with anguish oftentimes for sorrows I cannot heal, may dictate to my pen some word, a single word, that may twine itself around and soothe some weary one, that is calling—"Give me water to drink." Yes, there is a fountain filled. Perhaps, dear one, you are sick; perhaps you cannot walk abroad on this beautiful flower-decked earth to drink in the great mercies and blessings designed to heal disease. Perhaps you eagerly cast your eye over the "Crisis" to find something to comfort you, to find just a few words of sympathy to meet a heart there that has suffered too, and be your companion in tribulation.

O yes, we all are looking to Jesus, the Captain who was made perfect through suffering; and must Jesus bear this cross alone? No, we too are looking to one another, and gladly we accept his command so full of love—"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

How good it is to receive a "tear of sympathy." We all have seen the time that proved to us the worth of even one little word, and are we not every one of us treasuring in our hearts some such precious remembrance, more priceless than gold or pearls?

Short letters are often best received, and should this poor message find or be worthy of the favor of meeting the eyes of even one whose heart is weeping and seeking comfort, then may my Father in heaven give me a spirit still to seek to do his will according as his providence leads. Your Sister,

Warner, N. H. ELLEN EVERETT.

— There are two modes of establishing our reputation; to be praised by honest men, and to be abused by rogues. It is best, however, to secure the former, because it will invariably be accompanied by the latter. His calumniation is not only the greatest benefit a rogue can confer upon us, but it is also the only service he will perform for nothing.

— Be strong in the Lord and in the power of Christ, and nothing shall be too hard for you to overcome. Mountains shall be made plains, and valleys filled up. All things shall be possible to him that believes, and relies upon that power to which nothing is impossible. With God all things are possible.

— Innate politeness and nobility of character show themselves in every gesture, in every accent of the voice and glance of the eye; humble dress and occupation cannot conceal them. Vulgarity cannot put on those high qualities, though it be clad in purple and gold, and housed in a palace.

— If those who sneer at practical religion would only seek it for themselves and make a fair trial of it, their lips would be sealed to scoffers and only opened in grateful praise. I never heard of a sincere christian who pronounced Christianity an imposture or a failure. Have you?

— Two things, well considered, would prevent many quarrels; first, to have it well ascertained whether we are not disputing about terms rather than things; and secondly, to examine whether that on which we differ is worth contending about.

— All delays, half-hearted resolutions, and half-way reforms, are so many triumphs to our enemies; for while they encourage us to hope for victory, they only deceive us, and make us think we are doing something when we are doing nothing.

— If you have any principle, any faith, any enthusiasm, any fire in your soul, keep the tongue-valve close, and let the spiritual forces move your hands to noble deeds, and make your feet run on errands of mercy.

— We should never go in the way of temptation for the purpose of trying the strength of our virtues. If Achan handles the golden wedge, his next work will be to steal it.

— Enemies are as necessary to the proper development of the full-grown man as friends. When lived that man who amounted to any thing but could count his enemies by the scores?

— We are never less at ease with ourselves than when we are exclusively self-seekers. It is placing ourselves in the service of a master the most severe, and the msot difficult to satisfy.

— It would be uncharitable and severe to condemn for faults, without taking some little thought of the sterling goodness which mingles in and lessens them.

— An humble man is like a good tree; the more full of fruit the branches are, the lower they bend themselves. "Through much tribulation ye must enter into the kingdom of God."

— God will accept your first attempts to serve him, not as a perfect work, but as a beginning. The first little blades of wheat are as pleasant to the farmer's eyes as the whole field of waving grain.

— Those children who are found moving in the orbits of obedience, shall enjoy the clearest sunshine of their Father's countenance.

— No man ever trusted in God but he found him faithful, nor in his own heart but he found it false.

— An able man shows his spirit by gentle words and resolute actions; he is neither hot nor humid.

— The moment we learn that we are sinners, we may look in the face of the Son of God, and claim him as our own.

— To be subject to God is truer happiness than to command the whole world.

— God gives every bird its food, but does not throw it into its nest.

— As liberality makes friends of enemies, so pride makes enemies of friends.

— It is more wise to prevent a quarrel before hand than to revenge it afterwards.

— When we think of good, the angels are silent: when we do it, they rejoice.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 27, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

CHICAGO.

The meetings in Chicago at this date (Jan. 18th) continue with increasing interest. The Lord is truly doing a great work here. Members of the different churches attend first out of curiosity, expecting to see and hear some very improper things; having been warned by their minister to keep away; but when they come and see what the Lord is doing, and begin to feel the spirit of the meetings, they go away to report that they never before enjoyed so good a meeting. Next evening they come again, bringing some of their friends with them; and thus the work keeps spreading. In due time they carry the revival spirit into their own meetings. The result is, that already revivals have begun in several churches in the city. Others are so charmed with our meetings, and the truths presented, that they do like Matthew in the days when Jesus was on earth—leave all to go with us.

Several, who have been members of other churches for years, have experienced such a great change in their feelings since they came to our meetings, that they think they were never converted before. It is a feast to hear their hearty testimonies. They act, feel and speak like young converts. It is very evident they had been strangers to the pure peace and joy that christians feel.

We are more and more convinced that the majority of church members are without a bright evidence of their acceptance with Jesus. It would not be proper to say that they enjoy religion. Their religious service is not performed as a delight, but rather as drudgery. They take more pleasure in reading the daily papers than the Bible; and are more in fairs and festivals than the house of prayer. We find the people outside of the churches are fast losing their confidence in nominal christianity as a system. They see so much of the spirit of the world manifested, pride, fun and frolic; so little brotherly love, and so much backbiting and evil speaking, that they turn away in sad disgust. They wish it were otherwise, but are compelled to the conclusion that if they would find the old-fashioned christian religion, they must seek elsewhere than in the modern fashionable churches.

When they witness the simplicity, brotherly love, earnest prayers, exhortations and songs, manifested in our meetings, they cry out at once, We have found out at last what we have been so long seeking. Others would go with us, if it were not for the fact that we are unpopular in consequence of the opposition of the clergy. Many think more of their good name among the enemies of the cross, than they do of the word of the Lord. They dare not be odd for Jesus' sake. They inquire as they did at the first advent, Have the Rabbis believed? It is a sad sight to see people thus kept from the truth; but it is a common thing. We are often reminded of the text—"How can ye believe when ye receive honor one of another?" A christian, when filled with the Spirit of Christ, has no desire for such things.

Our meetings yesterday (Jan. 17th), were blessed seasons. The love-feast at half-past nine A. M., will ever be remembered with pleasure by those who enjoyed it. In some fifty minutes we had about sixty testimonies; and they were worth hearing; many of them had just found Jesus precious. They felt as though they had got into a new world. They were greatly astonished at the joy and peace they found in the service of the Savior. They could truly say the half had not been told. The young converts have came out real bright, and have given up their ale, beer, tobacco, and coffee. They are truly new creatures in Christ Jesus. They are earnestly at work for others, trying to persuade them to become christians.

The church is in a very healthy condition. We do not know of another that is enjoying more of the life and power of godliness. The reason for this is, the members are at work for the Lord. They go out with tracts and good words to invite in those who are in the road to destruction. This earnest effort serves to convince the people that there is a reality in the christian religion; while the careless indifference of the mass of professors only serves to prove the opposite. Last Sabbath (Jan. 17th), a large number covenanted together to commence a systematic course of visiting. Each one agreed to visit those in his immediate neighborhood, calling on every family, for the purpose of talking on the subject of religion. Those who have already begun this personal work have been greatly blest with peace and joy. This has encouraged others to engage in the same work. They are not only blest themselves, but they see very rich fruits from their labors. By this means several have been led to seek the Lord; and we expect to see many more come to Jesus as the result of these continued efforts.

The Chicago prospect is glorious. We hope that what we have seen is but the beginning of what we shall yet see. At our last meeting, our house was crowded to its utmost capacity.

TURNED BACK TO HELL.

In Ps. 9: 17, we find the following passage:—"The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." This passage is often quoted by orthodoxy to prove eternal torment; whereas, that doctrine does not find the least shade of support from this text. The word hell is from the Hebrew word sheol, of which the Bible says it is a place where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." See Eccl. 9: 10, where the word is properly rendered grave. At death the righteous and wicked go into sheol, or the grave, to remain till the resurrection; then after the judgment, the wicked are returned to sheol, to come out no more for ever. Critics tell us that the Hebrew word shoov, rendered turned, in Ps. 9: 17, should always be rendered return.

Mr. Wise, a Jewish Rabbi, says Ps. 9: 17 should read: "The wicked shall return to hell with all the nations that forget God." He illustrates the meaning of shoov as follows:—Suppose a man should come out of the door of a house, walk around, go back and shut the door, the proper word to express the return is the word shoov, that occurs in Ps. 9: 17.

When the wicked return to sheol, or the grave, it can be said they have died "the second death," which is "the wages of sin."

NOVEL-READING.

If novel-readers knew the effects of their reading such trash, we think many who are now cultivating a taste for such things, would stop at once. But as in beer, whiskey, cider, and brandy drinking, and smoking and chewing tobacco, the enemy keeps the evil effects out of sight, till he has so corrupted the taste and so weakened the moral power of his victim, that he thinks he cannot reform without a greater injury than he would experience if he continued his bad habit. Sin is blinding in its influence. All bad habits are harder to change than good ones; i. e., people generally cling to their bad habits with more tenacity than to their good ones. For this reason we find but few people who are free from all bad habits. Among bad habits, we must reckon that of novel-reading.

We are pleased with the remark made by Mr. Sumner Ellis, in a sermon addressed to the young, in which he says, when speaking of novels:—"I believe they make a strong mind weak."

AMERICAN VICES.

The American people have some peculiar vices; or vices which are especially prominent among them. There are no other people who are in such a hurry to get riches and honors, and who resort to so many means to obtain their end. They are as restless as the troubled sea. They wish to do business by steam and telegraph operations. They cannot afford to stop to eat or sleep till their object is accomplished; and by that time they have ruined their constitutions.

"A recent medical writer states that the vices of the American character may be briefly summed up as follows: 1st. An inordinate passion for riches. 2d. Overwork of mind and body in the pursuit of business. 3d. Undue hurry and excitement in all the affairs of life. 4th. Intemperance in eating, drinking and smoking. 5th. A general disregard of the true laws of life and health."

A VALUABLE BOOK.

Some time since we called attention to a valuable work, published by Dr. E. P. Miller, 15 Laight St., New York, entitled "Sexual Abuses," or the "Cause of Exhausted Vitality." This work should be in every family; especially where there are young people. Every young man in the country should have a copy. Parents, do not fail to provide this work for your children. The work contains information of vital importance to the youth. Aside from the Bible, there is no book we would sooner put into the hands of the young than this work of Dr. Miller's. It is a book for the times. Many could better afford to give a thousand dollars for the work, as a present to their children, than to leave them without the information it contains.

RULES TO PROMOTE HARMONY AMONG CHURCH MEMBERS.

1. To remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities of one kind or another.
2. To bear with and not magnify each other's infirmities. Gal. 4: 12.
3. To pray for one another in our social meetings, and particularly in private. James 5: 14.
4. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to lay no charge brought against any person till well founded.
5. If a member be in fault, to tell him of it in private before it is mentioned to others.
6. To watch against a shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.
7. To observe the just rule of Solomon, that is, to leave off contention before it is meddled with. Prov. 17: 14.
8. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious it is to forgive, and how unlike a christian it is to revenge. Eph. 6: 2.
9. Remember that it is always a grand artifice of the devil to promote distance and animosity among members of churches, and we should therefore watch against everything that furthers this end.
10. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the church in particular, when we are all united in love, than we should do when acting alone and indulging a contrary spirit.
11. To consider the express injunction of Scripture and the beautiful example of Christ as to these important things.
12. Above all, remember to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and thy neighbor as thyself.—Christian Observer.

JUST ONE WORD.

To all who read the Crisis:—Your humble servant begs, with special emphasis, to recommend to all the brethren and sisters who read the Crisis, to do one good thing. Now please remember this little bit of counsel. By the Lord's help, try, every one, to get at least one new subscriber to the Crisis. It seems to me one of the most feasible things in the world, thereby to just double the circulation of the paper. How much time will it take to do it? How much sacrifice will it cost? How much trouble will it be? Just look at the enormous circulation of secular papers, the Tribune, the Ledger, the Rural New Yorker, and so forth.

Can we not do something noble for Christ and the truth, by just setting about this thing heartily? How much more precious is the truth of God than all the politics, and philosophy, and romance under heaven! I really feel in earnest on this subject, and I really want to take every good adventist by the hand and say, "Come, let us make one united effort! Let us glorify God and do good. Let us every one try with a will and get one or two or more subscribers." Some really warm-hearted and persevering brethren and sisters will find five, or six, or eight, or ten new readers and subscribers; aye, I believe they will do it when they read this little reminder.

Do, brethren, put your hand to this thing. Don't forget it! Don't neglect it! Don't postpone it! Resolve now in the name of the Lord that you will devote a time to this work. Do you want a reward of approving conscience? Labor then in this simple, direct way for the spread of the truth. Let this be the signal through the ranks of readers for the month to come—"The subscription to the Crisis shall be immediately doubled." Why, it might be trebled. Dont doubt it. I protest that it can be done, and done easily.

Just recollect that every new subscriber secures a probable average of four or five readers. and just consider what a momentous period we live in! Just consider the works and ways of God in nature and among the nations! With what a majestic march God is moving on his mighty train of wonders. Whose heart does not thrill as he reads and meditates the march of grand events? It is the very time to help spread abroad the knowledge of God and his works, and the swiftly and speedily coming kingdom. Pardon a little extra energy in exhortation. I feel my heart beat more strongly as I write. Strike for the Lord Jesus! Put hands heartily to the work! Up, O Israel! Let us see what can be done immediately in this one enterprise.

Think now earnestly among all your friends, and ask yourself this one question,—"Who will be likely to give me a hearing, if I ask them to subscribe?" And if you don't think of any in one minute, think another minute, and keep thinking all day, if need be, and then don't think too long before trying. Make it a subject of prayer. Ask God to help and bless the effort. And in just as many cases as reasonably possible, send the money in advance for one year, or for six months, or for three months.

It sometimes happens that in the Providence of God the minds of persons are just ready for the truth. They read, they ponder, and they believe. How much good may be done in this way, perhaps we cannot or do not justly conceive. Depend upon it, this very thing is one of the most potent instrumentalities we can use for the diffusion and progress of the truth. I regard the Crisis as sound in the faith, and for Bro. Grant I feel and cherish with you a high regard and great esteem.

Do, brethren, try; do, sisters, try. Don't forget! Don't procrastinate! Pardon me for making this "just one word" so long and earnest a word. But I am in earnest, and I write from the heart.

Sincerely yours in the faith,

C. COLEGROVE.

UNIMPROVED OPPORTUNITIES.

Not long since, while attending an association of ministers in one of our thriving manufacturing villages, having need of the services of a barber, we made inquiry as to where one might be found. Just then a sad, thoughtful looking man of middle age came up the street, to whom we were introduced. We walked together up to his shop, making occasional observations upon various topics, when the writer inquired whether he had been long in the place. "I have always lived here," said he, "and it used to be home to me; but I have recently buried my wife, and I feel like one beginning anew in the world, and I would as soon be anywhere else as here." We pitied him; but with a single expression of sorrow over his misfortune, the opportunity of pointing him to the Lamb of God as the never-failing source of comfort to the bereaved, and whose blood could wash out every stain of sin, was permitted to pass unimproved.

On reflection we could see what a favored time was then and there presented to inquire of one whose domestic relations on earth were broken up, and whose home was forever desolated by death, what provisions he was making for a happy and eternal home in heaven. We thought, perhaps, that an opportunity for saving a soul from death was lost forever; and a heart just fitted by a severe stroke of affliction to receive kind solicitations to yield to Christ, was waiting to hear them for the last time.

Not long ago a lady visited a clergyman who had formerly been her minister. She had for many months been deeply convicted of sin and her need of salvation, and had made the visit in part for the purpose of religious conversation with him. A week passed away, and he never alluded to the subject during the time. On the morning of her departure they happened to be alone in the parlor, when she said to him, "I have been here a week, and you have not said a word to me on the subject of religion." What a rebuke was this! and how many are these lost opportunities! Ministers and laymen are too general in their efforts to save souls. There is too little personal effort. We plead "verily guilty" in this matter. But why this inefficiency? Why are the many favorable opportunities passed unimproved? Simply for the want of that "perfect love which casteth out all fear." That holy boldness which made the apostles flame with its refulgent panoply. It is high time that the whole church should receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Therefore let its united prayers go up, as they did from that large upper room at Jerusalem, that a pentecostal shower may fall . . . , that shall introduce an era of holier and more efficient living for Christ and heaven, and the souls of perishing sinners.—Rev. A. B. Russell.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

ADVENTISM.

BRO. GRANT:—This is a time of peculiar trial to the believers in the Lord's coming. They have had strong faith in definite time for their Lord's advent; but those most reliable points have passed without realizing their hope, and some still think there will yet be time in the future; while others think there will be no reliable point to call attention to. Some conclude we have been wrong in our year-day theory, and that it has even now proved a failure. But now is the time to still seek to the Lord and his word for wisdom.

The Bible will prove itself true, and we are emphatically in the watching time, because not knowing when the Master will come. And we should now combine all our influence and means to disseminate and get before the people the peculiar doctrine of our faith, kindly yet firmly and constantly contending for the faith and the literal fulfillment of the word of God.

To do this we must keep our identity, by not shunning to declare the counsel of God as presented in his word. We are called Advent believers, and why? Simply because we are looking for the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ; the same one that the Galileans gazed upon as he went up, and the cloud received him out of their sight. Now shall we give up looking? No, never! Then the name is appropriate.

Again, we believe in the resurrection of all the dead, yea, of two classes—the righteous and the wicked; the just and the unjust; and that they will receive their reward in connection with the Lord's coming. Also the restitution of the earth, when it will be the new earth, wherein the righteous will find their promised reward, or heaven.

These are the grand fundamental principles of the gospel, with their relative truths, which are legitimate to the fulfillment of this divine plan, so harmonious and God-like, and so plainly taught in the Bible. The question is, Can we yield these points of difference and say but little about them in our public labors, so that our former opponents may fraternize with us? or shall we stand up for Jesus, and be still more zealous for his word? The latter is demanded of us, I think. In these times of peril our tendency is downward, towards apostasy; and we must bestir ourselves, or we shall go down with the current.

There is an increasing desire to hear our doctrine, and when the people come to an Advent meeting they expect to hear at least some of our distinctive doctrines, and they ought to hear them faithfully yet kindly advocated. Not as one said not long since, "I have been to your meeting, and I did not hear anything different from what I hear at other of our meetings." If this is so, we might as well give up our meetings, and work with those who reject our hope.

But I still am convinced our duty is to make prominent these blessed truths, and I shall do my best to get others to receive and believe them, hoping my brethren will do the same kindly but faithfully, for Christ's sake.

L. BOUTELL.

A CORRECTION.—Please allow me to correct a wrong impression conveyed unintentionally by Bro. Leslie's late letter. The work done here for the Mission was first suggested by the sisters who returned from the campmeeting. Those who could not attend our weekly sewing-circles gave assistance no less valuable by donations of clothing or money, and by soliciting contributions from their neighbors. The freight was paid mostly by a few leading members. The one barrel we at first intended to send grew insensibly into two, showing how easily help is given where every one is willing "to lay by him in store, upon the first day of the week, as God hath prospered him." REPORT

Wednesday, two P. M. The usual opening social meeting was enjoyed. Thursday, 9.45 A. M. From Treasurer's report, $2.70 remained in treasury.

Report of churches: Foster, R. I., by Bro. Searles. A great revival had been enjoyed under the labors of Bro. E. Bellows and others. Whole community awakened. Sixty persons have made some move to be saved; thirty-five baptized; thirteen joined the church at the Tabernacle. A new church will probably be organized at Hopkins' Mills. Danielsonville and Abington, Ct., by Clerk. Without change. Bristol, R. I., twelve members bound to sustain the work. North Scituate, R. I., prospect encouraging. East Gloucester, by letter. Striving together for the faith of the gospel. Westerly. One recently confessed Christ. River Point. Few left, because of removals, but these few are "lights." Wyoming. Some serving God.

Preachers' report: Brn. E. Bellows, Jonathan Eldridge, J. C. Collins, R. R. Wood, J. W. Thomas, A. Damon, N. A. Angell, and the Clerk, reported. All had found reason to praise God for his faithfulness, care and blessing, in labor and in sickness. Bro. Thomas had been severely sick. Bro. Bellows gave an interesting account of God's work in Foster, R. I. Bro. E. Burnham, by invitation, spoke a few words, much to our joy. He felt like going into the work in earnest.

Friday, 9.30 A. M. An effort was made to take the resolution in reference to a ministerial conference from the table, but it failed. A resolution touching the non-revival of the wicked dead being offered, it was Voted, That the old resolution touching this question, passed by this conference years ago, be re-read and re-printed, as the mind still held by this conference. The old resolution reads:—

Resolved, That without wishing to be dogmatical, we as a conference express our convictions that a doctrine known as the "Non-resurrection of the wicked to life," is unbiblical and untrue; and as such does not receive our approbation or support; but on the contrary does receive our disapprobation heartily expressed herein. Let us love those who do believe so, who give us good reason to believe they are christians by a well ordered life and a godly conversation."

The interests and prospects of the Advent National Campmeeting came up, and after some remarks, a committee was chosen to draft a resolution, or resolutions, embodying the suggestions which had been made, to be submitted to the conference for their acceptance and adoption. The committee reported the following resolution, viz.,

Whereas, the large tent whose banner was "No life out of Christ," did devote its time, energy and talents almost wholly during our National Campmeeting at Springfield last August, to controvert the Scriptural hope of a "resurrection," "both of the just and unjust," and to argue and discuss their no-life notions contrary to the principles of campmeeting management embodied in the Preamble and Circular letter adopted by the A. C. Association, Aug. 26th, 1864, and

Whereas, silence is inexcusable on the part of true believers when, under such circumstances, the gospel hope is publicly, openly, and constantly assailed, to the detriment of babes in Christ, brought on to the campground to be nourished in the things of God, and

Whereas, a peaceful, harmonious, and profitable meeting is impossible in view of such strife and controversy, Therefore,

Resolved, That this conference do petition the campmeeting committee to remove such source of strife by requiring the "Life and Union" tent, so-called, to drop the advocacy and discussion of its favorite theme at our National Campmeeting, and uniting upon the great theme of the "Kingdom at hand," work for the good of all; and,

Resolved, That, if this reasonable and christian request be refused, said tent be requested to separate from us,—as Lot from Abraham,—all claims to campmeeting property being amicably and justly settled. And further,

Resolved, That this conference do and does protest against the ice-cream, beer drinking, and other saloon-like operations carried on at our National Campmeetings for pecuniary purposes, especially on Sundays, which have been and will be, if allowed, a disgrace to those proclaiming the judgment at hand.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The sick and needy condition of Bro. Stewart Himes was brought before us. Some touching references to his past life of unbounded christian hospitality were made, whereupon it was Voted, That we recommend Bro. S. Himes, of Kingston, R. I., to the sympathies and benevolence of the churches in R. I. and E. Ct.*

Preaching during conference by A. Damon. Text, Mark 13: 34. E. Burnham, Heb. 6: 19; Heb. 11: 1. The clerk, 2 Cor. 5: 10; 1 Cor. 14: 1.

The old officers of the conference being re-elected, adjourned to meet at Danielsonville, Ct., April 7th, at two P. M.

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

* Any who may wish to assist Bro. Stewart Himes, can send their gifts to Bro. Wm. Tisdell, Exeter, R. I., who will see that they are applied for his benefit.

APPROACHING FIRES OF THE LAST DAY.

Scripture, philosophy and facts unitedly assert and boldly declare that we are fast approaching with increased rapidity to the time when the atmospheric as well as earth's pent-up fires, no longer restrained, shall burst forth in one awful, universal conflagration; to the time "in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Pet. 3: 10); to the time when "our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him."—Psalm 50: 3.

To the time when "the earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again."—Isa. 24: 19–20. To the time when "the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire."—Isa. 56: 15. To the time "when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning."—Isa. 4: 3.

To the time when "the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters poured down a steep place."—Micah 1: 3–4. To the time when "neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land."—Zeph. 1: 18. "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap."

To the time when "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 3: 2; 4: 1. To the time when "every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is."—1 Cor. 3: 13–16. To the time when "the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Pet. 3: 7.

To the time of harvest—the end of the world, when "the tares are gathered and burned in the fire"; when "the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire."—Matt. 13: 39–42. To the time when "your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.'—James 5: 3.

Thomas Dick, the Christian philosopher, says, "One essential part of the atmosphere contains the principle of flame; and were it let loose to exert its energies without control, instantly one immense flame would envelop the terraqueous globe, which would set on fire the foundations of the mountains, wrap the ocean in a blaze, and dissolve not only coals, wood, and other combustibles, but the hardest substances in nature."

The Scientific American says, "It is also well known that there is a constant emission of hydrogen from vegetation, and from the decomposition of various substances; and that this gas, being extremely light and buoyant, has a tendency to rise to the surface of the atmosphere. There is no reason to doubt that immense quantities of this inflammable compound abound in the upper regions of the air, and that nothing more than a spark of electric fire would be required to envelope the world in flames. There are no defined laws or theory to show any security against the occurrence of an aerial conflagration at any moment."

Now are not these also most striking facts, that there have been more earthquakes for the last few years than for centuries before; and especially more earthquakes for the last few months even than for the few years previous; even a continuation of them day after day almost without cessation in some parts of the globe. Also hurricanes and terrible storms on the land and on the sea, with terrible volcanic eruptions and tidal waves so rife of late, also the wonderful increase of earth's internal fires, a heat of the earth fast approaching to the surface; and yet, notwithstanding all this, how many have been or are now saying, "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." "Nevertheless (brethren) we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Now brother, sister, if a sleeping world or slumbering church will not awake, let us now, if ever, take heed to God's word, and these providential warnings on every hand, and obtain a heavenly policy, which is the only security that will insure us against the fires of the last day. Christ says, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Why? Because when I was hungry, or thirsty, or naked, or needy, ye did minister unto me. When, or in what way, Lord? "And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matt. 25: 31–46.

Brethren, the consuming fires of the last day are swiftly approaching. Get rid speedily of your "hay, wood and stubble"; invest everything in the Lord's treasury; get rid of every unnecessary superfluity; retain only what you have need of, remembering that the gold and the silver is the Lord's, and if you are "doers of the word," then, instead of your suffering loss and barely being saved so as by fire, "an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." "For the time is at hand," "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." S. L. MANLEY.

Correspondence.

From Bro. T. E. Wood.

BRO. GRANT:—I thought to write a few lines for the Crisis about this part of the country, for the benefit of our many friends and brethren and sisters scattered abroad, many of whom may be anxious to know of our prosperity, also about the climate, chances for business, etc. We have been here but a few days; have found a few names of those believing in the second advent of the Savior soon, who meet together here, Bro. Smith preaching to them a part of the time the straight and pointed truths and doctrines of the Bible; the remaining portion of the time he goes forth into the interior to preach the gospel likewise, where there seems to be a call for the doctrines which we believe.

The church here is quite small at present, judging from the numbers who attend public meetings; and the large portion of adults who attend are persons from the North, who come here to tarry for a season. Last Sunday an appointment was given out for friends to meet together to-day for organizing a Sunday School, as Bro. Smith was to be absent in the country; and about the time of assembling for this object at the usual place of meetings on Sundays, behold! the door was closed in our faces by some one who was probably instructed so to do. The place for holding meetings is owned by the Odd Fellows, a large portion of whom are members of the church of Rome.

The climate here is very fine for the month of January, warm and pleasant enough at mid-day for open doors and windows; but the nights are very cool, so that an overcoat and fires are indeed a luxury. Unusually severe frosts have occurred this season, damaging the oranges considerably, causing quite a loss to many. Although the climate is so fine and pleasant, and almost entirely free from fogs, yet many persons suffer with chills and fevers, which, perhaps might be avoided, by a more temperate mode of living by some; I mean abstaining from the use of whiskey, tobacco, and snuff, which are so common at the South.

The chances for business here may be considered quite favorable from one stand-point. If a person has plenty of money that he is willing to put out freely for the sake of getting to a climate to improve his health, and get clear of the severely cold winters of the North, then the opening here is very good, to purchase lands and improve them, either in the country, or just out of the city; but the chances for a mechanic of any kind, or a farmer of small means, to come here to make money immediately, are very small indeed, I think. Good mechanics get no better pay, if as good, as at the North, while the price of board of the most common kind is from $8.00 per week upwards. Tenements of four or five rooms rent from $25.00 to $50.00 per month.

This is in fact quite a watering place, with fashionable visitors, and high prices during the season. With these thoughts I will close, hoping all may be benefited, and saved in the coming kingdom. Yours, T. E. WOOD.

From Bro. H. Tucker.

BRO. GRANT:—In obeying the plain teaching of the words, search the Scriptures, we are often puzzled when we compare the word of God with what we have been taught, even by those who profess to believe the despised doctrines (so called) of the Adventists. I have never been more so than when I have read in Luke 21: 35, these words:—"For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

Are the children of God now and have they ever been dwellers on earth, or not? I think by examining Gen. 13: 12, 18, 2: 1, 26: 6, and 47: 4, 6, we shall find that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Lot, four of the best men that we have any account of, were dwellers on the earth. We find also at the day of Pentecost that there were Jews dwelling at Jerusalem, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Acts 2: 5. Now if God's people are dwellers, then we shall do well to take heed to the commands of Christ, which we find recorded in Matt. 24: 42–44, and Mark 13: 35–37.

But, says some, brother, we read in 1 Thess. 5: 4, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Certainly, but is there not a marked difference between a thief and a snare? The thief comes unexpectedly; therefore we have not thought of watching, for we have had no signs given us of his approach, and he will be most likely to come when our light has been extinguished, and our senses are locked in sleep. But how is it with a snare? Most of us are familiar with the construction of a snare. There are signs of its locality, even at some distance from its fixed place. As we travel along the path, if we will but watch and pray as Christ has commanded us, we shall see what is before us, and be prepared for that great event. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Dudley, Jan. 1869. HENRY TUCKER.

From Bro. F. M. Williams.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just returned from an interesting meeting held in the new meeting-house near Bro. Simonds, Darien. The house was well filled, especially in the evening. Sr. Jennings was there by invitation, and fearlessly in the forenoon presented that bold and exceedingly precious declaration of the apostle Paul (Rom. 1: 16), "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation"; delineating the fortitude and sufferings of the apostle while proclaiming the delightful message of salvation to a lost race; at the same time opening up to the audience the fulness of the sacred truth, and faithfully and importunately making a personal application.

After this service we had a good conference, with prayer and praise, very edifying exercises at the close of the ministration of the word. In the evening she presented the christian hope in its purifying character, as presented by the beloved disciple John, in his first epistle, 3: 3. The various hopes by which mankind were influenced to action were presented, but all incompetent to satisfy.

Next was presented the hope of being made like Him at his appearing, together with its purifying effects. It was a precious season. I think the prospect of a revival of the work of God in that locality is good. This sister is to remain some time. May the great Head of the church pour out his Spirit abundantly, and send prosperity in the ministration of his own word. Bro. Newell, the pastor of the church, has an intense interest for its prosperity. I hope the spirit of prayer to that effect will be abundantly shed on them. If so, they will have a glorious time. Amen. Your Bro. in christian hope,

F. M. WILLIAMS.

From Bro. H. H. Brown.

To the scattered pilgrims in western New York:—"Grace unto you and peace be multiplied. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."

I have of late been so entangled with the cares of this life that I could not work in the Lord's vineyard. Still Jesus has often called and said, "Go, work in my vineyard"; and I dare not longer be heedless of his voice. Therefore I have given up all. I have torn myself, by divine assistance, from earthly pursuits, and to-day stand a free man in Christ Jesus, ready to do his will from the heart. Now, whoever shall send a Macedonian cry for help, the Lord willing, I will come over and help them. I intend henceforth to spend and be spent in the service of my Master.

The debt of love I owe;
Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

BRO. GRANT:—We are having some very good meetings at the old Methodist church in this village. Have had quite an interest manifested among those that love Jesus, and two have made up their minds to start for the kingdom, who never knew our Lord. When we see the interest begin to increase, it gives me fresh courage, and I try to love Him more and serve him better myself. But ah! how much preaching, how much praying, how much real earnestness it requires on the part of Father's children in these days, to convince people of their sins and the near approach of our dear Redeemer. Pray for us, "all ye saints," and ye that fear his name. Only a little while, and we shall all be safe at home with Him whom we love and serve here. Glory to God! A. D. FLAGG.

From Bro. C. H. Baker.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is at work in Warren. Commencing with a prayer-meeting of three, the Lord heard us, and added to our number. We asked the Lord to lead us, and send some one to help us. He sent Sr. Anna E. Smith, of N. Y., and Srs. Holden and Stoddard, of Worcester, and they have labored with all their might, mind and strength; the Lord helping them. Our meetings commenced Jan. 12th, and continued every evening through the week and over the Sabbath, increasing in numbers and interest, until Sabbath eve. The large hall was filled completely full to hear Sr. Smith, of N. Y. The result is, seven have determined to give their hearts to the Lord. Much prejudice has been removed from the minds of the people, and they want the Sisters to come again. Thank the Lord. Pray for us.

A MISTAKE.

As accuracy is desirable in all our citations, I wish to correct what seems to be a stereotyped mistake in the Advent body. It is touching the authorship of a terrible paragraph on the eternal presence of God among the damned in hell. A prominent minister in a recent sermon, and an article lately published in the "Crisis," both attribute said description to "Richard Benson." Let me say there is no such man in Methodist literature. Richard Watson was the able author of the "Institutes," and Joseph Benson was the commentator who uttered the strong language alluded to. Truth is better than error.

Obituaries.

BUZZELL. Died at Lake Village, N. H., Jan. 12th, 1869, after a long and painful sickness, Sister Abigail Buzzell, wife of Bro. John Buzzell, aged fifty-eight years.

Sister B. espoused the cause of Christ many years ago, and with christian fidelity and faithfulness maintained her profession unto the end. She has long been waiting and anxiously looking for her Lover and Friend to return from heaven and disrobe the earth of its dark and heavily folded mantle of the curse, and throw around it the beautiful vestments of eternal verdure and heavenly radiance. She died in sweet hope that her death-sleep would be short, and her waking triumphantly glorious.

The work of death is cruel, but his reign of terror is measured, and the last victims of his venomous sting are being crowded through the dark portals of his silent charnel-house. O, dark and cheerless night of human woes and bitter partings! haste thy tardy exit from the realm of Immanuel's purchase, and hush in perpetual silence the howlings of thy wasting tempests. O come, come, thou bright One of ancient story, cut short thy tarrying in a far country; rend the blue curtain of these heavens, and come down to the rescue of thy weeping bride. Her enemies mock at every expression of her love to thee, and wait impatiently to hear her last reproof for their sins and wickedness.

Death is hastening to fasten his heavy chains upon every limb and member of thy fair one's body, to drag her down to the dust, and so rid the world of her holy influence. Then come, blessed Jesus, COME QUICKLY! answer the earnest prayer of thy waiting spouse, end this dark night of sadness and the bitter weeping of thy covenant friends. Let thy people hear again, blessed Savior, the music of thy heavenly voice, not in minor strains of dying anguish, as on Calvary; but in thundering tones of kingly authority, commanding that death be immediately destroyed, and him that had the power of it, and the release of all thy saints from its captivity. Thou knowest that they died breathing in pure love a welcome to thee to return to thy kingdom and become their eternal King. J. COUCH.

HUTCHINGS. Died in Concord, N. H., January 14th, of scarlet fever, Hattie Medora, youngest child of Eben and C. C. Hutchings, aged five years, ten months, and seventeen days.

The Lord give the mourning family grace to bear this sad stroke. In a little while you will see Dora again, all lovely and fair. At the funeral words of consolation were spoken by Brn. A. Simpson and J. G. Hook. J. T. KIMBALL.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Jan. 18. The Times to-day analyzes the treaty between England and the United States settling Alabama claims, and gives the following outlines of its provisions: The commission is to consist of four members, two to be appointed by England, and two by the United States. The commission will hold its sessions in Washington. Its first business will be to select an umpire. Failing in a choice, each side will appoint an umpire, and when the Commissioners are equally divided, they shall select by lot one of the two umpires to render a final decision. One of the Sovereigns of Europe is to be selected by the commission to arbitrate on points of international law, including the question of the recognition of the Southern States as belligerents by Great Britain. Each government is to formulate and advocate the claims of its citizens. No individual claimant will be heard before the commission, and all claims must be presented within six months from the first day of the meeting of the commission, and all indemnities are to be paid within eighteen months from the same day. One year is allowed for the ratification of the treaty.

Jan. 19. The journals of this morning concur in praising the speech of Napoleon at the opening of the French Chambers as a frank and transparent expression of his policy, and as the words of a true Frenchman addressed to Frenchmen.

The Times is sorry that a fabric of the State which he has raised is based on a personal government, and cannot survive its maker.

The Independence Belge says the protocol adopted by the Conference at Paris begins with a preamble stating that the Representatives of the powers who signed the treaty in Paris have met to define certain points of international law more precisely. The document then proceeds to declare that to encourage insurrections within, or privateering and military expeditions against the territories of friendly States, is a violation of the international law. When the protocol has been signed by all the powers participating in the Conference, it will be offered to Greece for her signature. If Greece signs the Sublime Porte will withdraw its ultimatum. If she refuses, the Great Powers will remain neutral, and permit events to take their course.

Jan. 20. The particulars of the earthquake which recently occurred around the shores of the Bay of Bengal have been received by telegraph. The loss of life was very great.

PARIS, Jan. 20. The Liberale asserts that the President of the Cretan Provisional Government has escaped from Candia and will go to the United States, where he will endeavor to raise a loan and purchase iron clads with the object of making one more effort to free Candia from the dominion of the Turks.

The French Blue Book for the year 1868 has made its appearance. The correspondence with the Government at Washington shows that cordial relations continue to be maintained between France and the United States.

In reference to the recent events in the Spanish Peninsular, the Blue Book says France is faithful to the principles of her policy and to her friendship for Spain, and preserves strict neutrality, and sincerely wishes her well through the crisis. Statistics are given to show the strength of the French army, which is officially reported to number at the present time 494,000 men, of whom 115,000 are on furlough.

The Blue Book also contains dispatches and communications which were exchanged between the French and Italian Governments in regard to the evacuation of Rome by French troops. All attempts to make an arrangement to that end proved fruitless.

MADRID, Jan. 20. The Provisional Government has issued a decree authorizing the Island of Cuba to send eighteen delegates and the Island of Porto Rico eleven delegates to the Cortes.

Active preparations are being made for the embarkation of additional forces for Cuba. Four Generals are to go out in command of the troops.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 20. The truth of the report that Mr. Morris, the American Minister to the Sublime Porte, had been recalled by his Government is positively denied.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 22. Leopold Ferdinand, Prince Royal of Belgium, died last evening. He was ten years old.

PARIS, 22. The Conference have selected M. Walewski to convey the protocol to Athens. He has been instructed to wait five days for the answer of the Grecian Government.

PARIS, Jan. 25. It is rumored that the cities of Seville and Cadiz have proclaimed in favor of the Duke of Montpensier for the King of Spain.

HAVANA, Jan. 25. Advices from St. Thomas to the 18th inst. have been received. News had reached there from St. Domingo stating that President Baez had sold Alta Vela to a French company ignoring the previous sale of the island.

The American Consul at St. Domingo had protested against the transaction and sent for a United States man-of-war.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN SPAIN.—According to the Madrid correspondent of the London Times, the proclamation of religious freedom in Spain by the Provisional Government has thus far resulted in little tangible gain to the friends of unrestricted rights of worship. He says:

"The so-called Cadiz Programme proclaims freedom of creed and worship, equality for all religious denominations, divorce between Church and State, Spain a Godless community, the United States the model on which this Iberian Peninsula, the 'land of the Virgin Mary,' is to be reconstituted. It is needless for me to observe how deplorably short of that all-subversive scheme the Spanish Revoltuion has hitherto stopped. The Papal Nuncio is still here, putting a good countenance upon what has hitherto been by no means a losing game. The nuns find stout champions both in and out of the Provisional Government. The Minister of Grace and Justice declares ecclesiastical courts to be 'Divine Institutions.' The Jewish and Protestant congregations, whose synagogues and 'temples' flourish unmolested under the shadow of St. Peter's cupola at Rome, have as yet not even laid the foundations of similar edifices in Madrid, and an outcry has gone forth from millions of matrons and maidens, and even female infants, througouht Spain, bidding the men in power to 'take from them the very air they breathe, but for God's sake, not the inestimable blessing of unity and purity of faith.'"

The mass of the people were never more thoroughly Catholic than now, and Catholicism in Spain is the 'dominant church' with a vengeance. It is omnipresent, all pervading, and is felt in all departments of life. But, although for all moral or social purposes any hope of religious reform may have to be abandoned, the pecuniary necessities of the country will compel a spoliation of the Romish Church and a reduction of the amount of money annually bestowed upon it. The yearly payments to the Catholic bishops and clergy reach the large sum of £343,160, or about $1,715,800. Besides, their churches glitter with gold and gems, and these are likely to be confiscated for the replenishment of the national treasury.—Journal.

EDUCATIONAL ADVANCES IN NORWAY AND SWEDEN.—An interesting movement is now taking place in Sweden, Norway and Finland, with the object of establishing in those countries schools for adults on a similar system to that adopted in Denmark. These schools were first founded in 1840 by M. Grundtvig, a Danish clergyman, well known in his own country as a distinguished poet, historian and archæologist, and also as the leader of the Lutheran party, now so influential among the Danes. The instruction given is entirely free from government control, the whole of the expense being defrayed partly from patriotic offerings made by wealthy citizens, partly from voluntary subscriptions among the pupils. The chief object of the schools being to prepare the numerous small proprietors who abound in the Scandinavian countries for political life, neither religion nor abstract science is taught in them. The principal subjects are history, Scandinavian literature and mythology, geography, gymnastics, singing and military exercises. There are now fifty of these schools in Denmark, most of which are well attended. Their patrons and supporters belong chiefly to the Scandinavian countries under a single government, and has many advocates in Sweden, Denmark and even Finland.

DOMESTIC.

GEN. GRANT ON THE RIGHTS OF FREEDMEN.—Washington, Jan. 19. The Committee of the Colored National Convention waited on Gen. Grant this morning. Their Chairman, Mr. Langston, made a speech to Gen. Grant, to which the latter replied: "I thank the Convention of which you are the representatives, for the confidence expressed, and I hope sincerely that the colored people of the nation may receive every protection which the laws give to them. They shall have my efforts to secure such protection. They should prove by their acts—their advancement, prosperity and obedience to the laws—that they are worthy of all the privileges the government has bestowed upon them, and by their future conduct prove themselves deserving of all they now claim."

San Francisco, 22d. Further intelligence from Japan, by the steamship Japan, states that the Mikado has issued a proclamation announcing that peace reigns throughout the land.

CUBA. It is reported that Minister Hale has written to President Johnson that overtures have been made to him by the Spanish Government for the sale of Cuba to the United States for about twenty-five million dollars in gold.

Washington, 22d. The American branch of the Universal Peace Union is holding its session in this city. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That all idea of punishment, both in human and divine government, should be done away with as at war with the law of love. The present system of discipline in the family, the school and the prison, founded on this idea, is unworthy of civilization, to say nothing of Christianity.

Havana, Jan. 19. A meeting of leading liberal Cubans was held yesterday. It was resolved unanimously that the Cubans should insist on the autonomy of the island, and that this independence granted by Spain, with all the guaranties necessary to insure its permanency, would solve all the difficulties and evils which afflict the country. This resolution is regarded as a declaration of the political faith of the liberal party.

The Prensa, reviewing an article on the subject in the Verdad, a Liberal paper, says: "If the Cuban party insist on continuing the fight against Spain, it must be with the object of throwing the island into the arms of the United States, or forming a Republic separate from Spain. This renders it necessary for the Spaniards to reduce them to loyalty by force of arms; and should the Spaniards be attacked by superior force to leave the island, they should leave it in ruins and ashes."

GEN. GARIBALDI.—The foreign correspondent of the Debats says that although Garibaldi has consented to become a member of the Italian Parliament again, he will keep away from the sittings exactly as before. "He thoroughly understands," adds the writer, "that the Chamber is not his place. Moreover, his health is really very bad, and would condemn him to repose even if present circumstances did not compel it." The Florence correspondent of the Independence Belge seems to consider Garibaldi's return to Parliament as an event of some importance, and hints that it will be so regarded in political circles. The General's letter had not then been published.

Passing Events.

☞ About two-thirds of the whole number of deaths in the city of New York take place in tenement houses, and are largely attributed to bad air and the absence of the necessary conditions for health. Suits are in progress against several thousands of landlords for neglecting to provide the essentials of comfort and health in their tenement houses.

☞ A correspondent of the New York Times describes the Mikado of Japan as a youth of 16, with a sensual and vacant countenance, a hard head and false eyebrows painted half way up the forehead. Ten years ago he was considered a god, and his existence doubted by skeptical Japanese; now he appears in public and is to be the real ruler of his people.

☞ General Grant is 47, and Mr. Colfax 46; Andrew Johnson is 61; Mr. Seward, 68; General Schofield but 38; Mr Welles, 67; Mr. McCulloch, 58; Mr. Randall and Mr. Browning, 59; Mr. Wade, the President of the Senate, is 69; Senator Sumner is 58, and Senator Trumbull, 56. The members of the House of Representatives are nearly all young men. James Brooks and E. B. Washburn are among the oldest, and are respectively 59 and 53 years of age.

☞ In Paris, toads are sold at the rate of two francs fifty centimes per dozen. The dealers keep them in large tubs. Toads are also kept in vineyards, where they devour during the night millons of insects that escape the pursuit of nocturnal birds.

☞ A recent English writer says that the distinctive difference between an English and purely Irish face is, that the former looks as if the hand of nature had been passed over it downwards while coming into the world, while the Irish face looks as if, on that occasion, the hand had been gently passed over the face in a contrary or upward direction.

☞ A new subterranean railroad is to be built in London. It is stipulated by the company that no pavement shall be disturbed, even at the points where it is absolutely necessary to remove it, until ten o'clock at night, and that it shall be replaced in good condition by six o'clock the following morning.

☞ Max Muller, the great philologist, says of the Turkish tongue, that it is "a language of such transparent construction that we can study its inner workings as we can watch the progress of cells in a bee-hive."

☞ The Viceroy of Egypt has sent one of his sons to Paris to "complete his education," and another to England for the same purpose. It seems that the practice of economy does not enter into the Egyptian sovereign's notions of instruction.

☞ Kitty Hood, a colored woman, one hundred and four years old, and probably the last revolutionary pensioner in the State of Indiana, died in Jennings county recently. Her pension was drawn by virtue of a wound received by her husband at the battle of Guilford Court House in 1780.

☞ The first natural death of a white person among the Yosemite Valley settlers occured last month, that of a little girl named Agnes Leibig.

☞ Mazzini is now able to go out, but is still very feeble. He has strongly urged the Spanish revolutionists to establish a republic.

☞ A black walnut tree was cut in Putnam county, O., the other day, which turned out $1000 worth of lumber.

☞ The telegraph is a failure in Mexico. The people steal the wires as fast as they are put up.

☞ Swearing on the Bible was first introduced into judicial proceedings by the Saxons about A. D. 600.

☞ Ten thousand acres of timber are annually required to supply the British railways with sleepers.

☞ New York requires 25,000,000 gallons of water per day.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Wednesday, Jan. 27th, and hold over the following Sunday. Let this meeting be made a special subject of prayer that God's blessing may be on his people, and that good may be accomplished. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec. of Conf.

Conference at Dover, Me.

There will be a conference held in Dover, Me., at Brans' Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. In behalf of the Eastern Maine Conference the brethren here are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. It is a new place for such a meeting. Call on Brn. Bray and Royal. Arrangements will be made to care for visitors. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend, and lend all that aid the gospel requires as far as possible. Bro. Robert Hall, from N. B., is expected to be in attendance with us. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of men, and God shall have the glory. In behalf of the church,

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at the Advent Hall, Meredith, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. Daniel Churchill, John Parsons, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and work for the Lord.

Maine East. Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in Cushing, at the lower house, commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 28th, and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go to this meeting prepared to work for the salvation of the perishing. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will call on Brn. N. Hathorn, Wm. Stone, Wm. Morton, and Simon Davis.

For the brethren, JER. CARR.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at Sawyer's Mills, in Starks, Me., Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, to labor for the salvation of the perishing.

I. C. WELLCOME.
E. M. HAGGETT.

Special Notice.

As considerable money sent to the post office in Buffalo has lately been missed, and I have lost in one case for certainty, and have good reason to believe that more has failed to reach me, I wish brethren who may have sent me any since Oct. 15th, 1868, and not received a reply, would write me at once, so that means may be taken to detect the thief. I always answer letters sent me with money in them. State the date when sent, as near as possible. J. BLAIN.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting or conference at West Deerfield, N. H., commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 16th, at 7 o'clock, and continue through the week, and over Sunday. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity and adjoining towns are requested to come and labor for the salvation of the perishing. Faithful and able servants of God are expected to be present to preach the word. For the brethren,

ENOCH MORRILL.

Washington, Ct.

A series of meetings will commence at Washington, Ct., Wednesday evening, Feb. 10th, and continue over the Sabbath. As this is a new field, we hope the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will come in and lend us a helping hand.

ALEX. ELLIOT.
S. H. GLOVER.
C. H. SWEET.

Notice.

A protracted meeting is to commence at the Roberts' school-house, in Strafford, N. H., Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. J. G. SMITH.
JOHN PARSONS.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garrigues, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. AN EXPOSITION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, my mail, 10 cts.

4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.20; single, by mail, 23 cts.

8. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

9. THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.

10. RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. New edition, with cover, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

SABBATH WORSHIP.

All hail! thou day of sacred rest,
Thy holy hours how sweet;
Of all the days thou art the best
To worship at His feet.

O help us, Lord, to worship thee
While in thy courts we stay;
Our sins and faults now let us see,
Lest we from thee should stray.

All worldly cares remove, our Lord,
From every waiting soul;
O help to understand thy word,
And all our thoughts control.

Thy Spirit, Lord, now let us feel—
Thy glory let us see;
Thyself, in love, O now reveal—
From sin now set us free.

O let the power of thy rich grace
Be seen in all our ways;
Thy likeness show in every face
With heavenly beaming rays.

We then will praise our Lord and King
In rapturous strains of love;
The sweetest song we then will sing,
Akin to that above.

We love the day of sacred rest,
Its holy hours so sweet;
Of all the days it is the best
To worship at His feet.

Report of the ministerial committee being called for, Bro. Couch, as chairman of this committee, reported the fall of one of our ministers, Eld. H. M. Bryant. Voted, That Eld. Bryant be visited by a committee, to restore him if possible. Voted, That Brn. W. W. Sutherland and J. G. Smith be said committee. Bro. Couch, as chairman of protracted meeting committee, reported some progress. Bro. J. W. White, chairman of tract committee, reports progress, and urges more energetic labor in that direction.

The following amount has been received during the past year for the free distribution of tracts: Cash and tracts, $195.09. Value of tracts on hand, $15.00. Cash in the treasury, $2.09. Voted, To adjourn till to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock A. M.

Saturday morning, 8 o'clock A. M., met as adjourned. Bro. Couch in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Moulton. On motion of Bro. Mooney, it was Voted, That a Council of three be appointed by the Chair to investigate certain difficulties in the church at Alton Corner.

Voted, That Bro. Simeon Roby be admitted a member of this conference. Voted, That now we hear the report of the committee on church government. Bro. Couch presented said report, which by vote was accepted.

The question involved was discussed by Brn. Brown, Couch, Mooney, J. G. Smith, D. Churchill, N. Wheeler, and C. H. Fletcher. Voted, That the report be acted upon separately by one article at a time. All the articles embraced in said report were adopted by a full vote. After the approval and adoption of the report on church government, the following resolutions were presented and passed:

1st. Resolved, That we the members of this conference, as servants of the Most High, while laboring among God's people, will make an earnest effort to set the churches in order, according to the gospel of Christ.

2nd. Resolved, That we disapprove of our preaching brethren administering the ordinances of the church until recognized and set apart in gospel form.

The following preachers reported their labors during the past year: J. Couch, T. W. Piper, A. Ross, J. G. Smith, N. Wheeler, C. H. Fletcher, S. S. Mooney, D. Churchill, D. M. Leavitt, D. F. Leavitt, J. H. Evans, G. W. Brown, W. W. Sutherland, L. Allen, J. Parsons, E. Moulton, A. H. Clark, J. W. White, and S. Roby.

God has wonderfully blessed the efforts of his servants the past year. We would be glad to present a verbatim report of each preacher; but suffice it to say, the promise, "Lo, I am with you," has been verified to all who have confided in Christ; and many, we trust, have experienced his saving grace as the result of their weak endeavors.

The following delegates were present and reported: H. Saltmarsh, I. M. Aldrich, Ira Colby, J. Buzzell, T. Veasey. The churches which were reported are the following: Centre St. and Bethel churches at Concord; churches at Lake Village, Whitefield, Portsmouth, Manchester, Pittsfield, New Durham, Alton, Bradford, Elliot, Me., Sugar Hill, Sutton, Woodstock, East Landaff, Canaan, Danbury, London Ridge, Melvin Village, Freedom, Albany, Madison, East Rochester, Farmington Dock, Northwood Narrows, and South Barnstead.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas our beloved brethren, J. Knowles, L. C. Glazier and H. Tewkesbury have fallen asleep in Christ within the past year, which deprives us of their wise counsels and christian influence in our ministerial and fraternal associations, and the church of Christ of their faithful and efficient labors as the servants of Christ and messengers of the gospel of the kingdom, and their families of much beloved and respected husbands and fathers; Therefore,

Resolved, That we, as ministers of Jesus Christ, and representatives of christian churches in the State of New Hampshire, deeply deplore the irreparable loss we sustain in their decease, and would with christian submission bow to the infinitely wise and inscrutable counsel of Him who has released them from trial and toil, and called us to sadness and mourning.

Resolved, That we will unitedly and devoutly pray that consoling and sustaining grace may be given to the weeping widows and fatherless children of our deceased brethren; and that they shall receive our christian sympathies, with our kind and faithful assistance in every season of trial and want which they may be called to experience.

Resolved, That as death has captured and made prisoners of some of our fellow laborers in the vineyard of Christ, and thus our ranks are thinned and our efforts weakened for the salvation of the lost and perishing; we will labor more earnestly and unitedly, that the appointed work may be accomplished in due time; when death shall be destroyed and his captives released, and the toiling, wearied pilgrim brought safely to his long-prayed-for and eternal rest.

Voted, To adjourn till the afternoon service from the stand. This conference thus far has been characterized by perfect harmony and love. Thank God. A. ROSS, Sec. pro tem.

Met according to adjournment. Bro. Couch in the chair. Prayer was offered by Bro. Couch. Bro. Ross being absent, C. H. Fletcher was chosen Sec. pro tem. The following resolution was passed: Resolved, That this conference make an earnest effort to raise five hundred dollars as a Tract Fund.

Voted, That a committee of two be appointed to investigate and settle the difficulties in the church at Manchester. J. G. Smith and T. W. Piper were appointed said committee.

Voted, To receive Bro. D. Churchill as a member of this conference. Voted, That Bro. T. W. Piper pay in certain funds that are in his hands towards the N. H. Tent. Voted, To extend a vote of thanks to the church and friends of Lake Village for inviting the conference with them, and for their christian kindness and hospitality during its session.

Voted, That we extend our thanks to J. R. Kendrick, Supt. Concord R. R., and J. A. Dodge, Supt. B. C. and M. R. R., for their kindness in making a reduction of fares to those attending this conference. Voted, To adjourn without date.

C. H. FLETCHER, Sec. pro tem.

P. S.—The Secretary did not receive these minutes until very recently, which will account for their not appearing in the paper at an earlier date. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec.

THE CAPTIVITIES OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.—No. 3.

HISTORICAL.

The second captivity of Judah was that which is commonly called "The first Babylonish captivity." This happened under Jehoiakim, or Eliakim, brother of and successor to Jehoahaz or Shallum, who had been deposed, bound in chains, and sent into Egypt by Necho king of Egypt, where he died. Jer. 22: 11–12. Then Necho made Jehoiakim king, and set a ransom of a hundred talents of silver and ten of gold on him, to raise which resort was had to heavy taxation, when at the end of four years, under Necho, he passed under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar, who not only recovered what Necho had taken on the Euphrates, but came also into Phenicia and Judea, subdued Jerusalem, and made it subject to the same burdens from which it had previously suffered by the king of Egypt. 2 Kings 24: 1.

Jehoiakim was captured, and bound with fetters, to be carried prisoner to Babylon, but regained his liberty by becoming largely tributary to Nebuchadnezzar. It was at this time that Daniel and his companions, with a large share of the temple vessels of service, and some captives, were carried to Babylon.

Three years afterwards Jehoiakim rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, who in revenge ravaged the country by the hand of the Chaldeans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, carrying away captive three thousand three hundred and twenty Jews to Babylon; and four years later Jehoiakim himself was taken, killed, and thrown into the common sewerage of Jerusalem, outside the gates, as Jeremiah had foretold. 22: 18–19.

Jehoiachin, Jeconiah, or Coniah, succeeded him, and reigned only three months and ten days, alone, over Judah, having been associated with his father in his reign conjointly ten years. He with ten thousand eight hundred and thirty-two others, Mordecai among them, were carried captive to Babylon, having been besieged in Jerusalem and captured by Nebuchadnezzar's forces.

He was succeeded by Zedekiah, who reigned eleven years, and then revolted, the king of Egypt becoming his ally; but Nebuchadnezzar defeated them both, captured Jerusalem, burned the temple, put out Zedekiah's eyes, and carried him with all the Jews of Jerusalem and Judah, excepting the poorer classes only, captives to Babylon beyond the Euphrates. This was the third captivity of Judah, called "the seventy years' captivity," and the end of Judah's line of reigning kings.

Thus terminated "both houses of Israel" in captivity; Israel by Shalmaneser, king of Syria, after it had subsisted two hundred and fifty-four years; and Judah by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, after it had subsisted four hundred and sixty-eight years from the commencement of David's reign, and three hundred and eighty-eight years from the separation of Judah and the ten tribes.

After the seventy years of Judah's captivity expired, and subsequent to their restoration to Jerusalem and their own land, for a period of about three hundred years, they enjoyed with little interruption peace and quiet; subject to Persia first, second to Syria, but governed by their high priests. But the oppressions of Antiochus Epiphanes waked once more the slumbering valor of this ancient people, and after a war of twenty-six years under the Maccabees, descendants of Asmoneus, their sovereignty, and the independence of Judea, was established for a period of one hundred and twenty-six years; at the end of which disputes and dissensions between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus afforded a pretext for Roman interference under Pompey, and once more this beautiful land of mountains, hills, plains and valleys, with its wondrous people, was reduced to vassalage, and became a province of the Roman empire.

With various fortunes and rulers, principally the Herods, it thus continued until about A. D. 44, when it sunk to the position of a minor province, subject to procurators sent from Rome, until the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus under Vespasian, subsequent to which time it was comprehended under the presidents of Syria, and the Jews subject to the Romans until the time of the emperor Adrian, when they once more rebelled, and were then completely overthrown, routed and dispersed, led away captive among all nations, and Jerusalem to be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall have been ended; while still that plaintive, wailing cry is heard,—"How long, O Lord, how long?"

But Judah's hearths are desolate, and so is David's throne; and ever so it must remain until He whose right it is shall come, and God will give it him; when he shall claim his own. G. W. STETSON.

NEW YEAR'S AT STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

New Year's day at "Star of Hope Mission" has but to be enjoyed to be appreciated. Willing hearts and ready hands, black though they be, were at the Mission at an early hour, to assist in getting ready for the Sabbath School gathering. At half-past two P. M., the entertainment commenced with singing and prayer; the latter being the key-note to all the varied enterprises of the mission, for we realize fully from whence cometh all our help.

Exercises were conducted under the supervision of E. S. Mellen, M. D., the able superintendent of the Sabbath School. Although a woman of ability and talent, she can adapt herself so perfectly to the demands of the little ones, and the great little ones (for they are all like so many children), as to inspire with a consciousness of the fact that she is just the person for the place. [This is being written in the corner of the house-top, or my truant pen would hardly dare to presume thus upon her modest feelings.]

But let us come down from the house-top to the mission-room, where we were so highly entertained by the children. Their scriptural and poetic recitations were interspersed with frequent singing, which for melody and sweetness, after having been so thoroughly disciplined and instructed in that branch by their superintendent, is unequalled by fairer-haired and whiter-faced children; and such memory as is boxed up in those little curly heads, you would wonder to see.

One little girl, some six or seven years old, recited thirty verses of Luke 2, beside some little poems, one of which was entitled, "My Mother's Dead"; and the fact of her being an orphan child gave it a sweet pathos which touched every heart.

Then, as if by intrigue, while a little quartette band were singing a temperance ode, some loud raps were heard at the door; all voices were hushed; and, not relishing the disturbance much, every eye was turned in that direction. Just then the door opened, and a philanthropic individual walked in with a large basket upon his arm. Imagine the mingled wonder and joy which illuminated those sable faces, when they each became the recipient of a little package from the basket; which, by the way, was dispensed with as much partiality as Dame Nature shows in dispensing her gifts. But none of the jealousy felt by the wise old Dame's recipients was experienced by any present, for the gifts were purchased with the children's penny contributions since the last anniversary, which amounted to about $2.50, just enough for a little present for each of the children, which was enjoyed greatly by the older ones, knowing that not a dollar could be spared from the mission funds for New Year's gifts.

After their jubilee had subsided a bit, a few small tokens of appreciation and affection were bestowed upon our much loved Principal—Sister Smith, by some friends, among whom was her devoted daughter, and to whom she replied in so touching a manner, as to draw tears from many eyes. It would do you good to see for a few hours the absence of that care-worn expression which, through "journeyings oft" and "labors more abundant" and "perils among false brethren," also the weight of missionary responsibilities, had settled upon her features.

Evening found the mission-room filled with sable worshipers, for an experience meeting. Many testified that this was the happiest New Year of their lives. Some said it was the only happy New Year they ever saw; for their lives till within the last year had been spent in debauchery and crime. One woman, who was among the lowest and wickedest of New York, had washed in the great Bethesda, and was cleansed from all the filth incident to a life of sin and crime. She had been one of the greatest fighters in that city, and a frequent inmate of the Tombs. Now she stands a monument of God's saving grace. She is so perfectly sanctified to God, and so fully charged with the electricity of God's power, that it tells upon others as soon as she comes into their presence, even if she does not speak. And such a heavenly glow as irradiates those dark features, would be seen and felt by every one present. And she, with the many others saved, attributes all under God to the "Star of Hope" missionaries.

Many more there are it would be gratifying to tell you about, but time and space forbid. Suffice it to say, this mission is performing an inconceivable amount of work in this great and wicked city,—work which can only be told in the day of God. Untold numbers of sick are visited; much distress relieved; the spiritual, physical, and mental wants of many hundreds attended to; and a Sabbath School, with an average attendance of forty scholars, you must know would make large demands upon the health, strength, and religion of four or five laborers. I have always thought this machine turned off a good deal of work, but found when I came here "the half had never been told me."

It is a mission house in its fullest sense, and implies more than is realized by friends outside. Long has darkness hidden its prospects, but after a long term of struggling, praying, and agonizing before the Lord, there seems to be a rift in the cloud, from which beams "The Star of Hope" in bright effulgence upon its heaven-sent mission: and "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," is sweetly whispered by the great Originator, the Lord of heaven, whose blessing we earnestly crave upon our labor of love.

Yours in hope, A. E. BENNETT.

THE DIVINE FAITHFULNESS.

Is it not well to sometimes take a retrospect of the past dealings of Providence, thus heeding the divine injunction to "remember all the way the Lord thy God hath led thee." Does it not inspire hope and trust for the future, and cause our heart to swell with grateful emotions to Him who hath said, "As thy day is so shall thy strength be"? Do not pioneers in any moral reform need more signal manifestations of God's power when nearly all professed Christendom are against them, than after such a reform is established? If so, God's word for it, strength will be given accordingly.

Some twenty-five years since, in the north-western part of Ct., a manufacturer of middle age was converted to God. It was a conversion that caused earnest inquiries, especially to know "what is truth?" And when different sects said this and another that is truth, this inquirer was all in earnest to know what does God's Bible teach? and thus he would pray and promise, "Lord, if thou wilt show me what is truth, I will follow it, if it costs me my life."

Thus he prayerfully read the Scriptures day and night, until he was convinced of the near personal coming of Jesus Christ, to raise the dead, and recompense all according to their deeds. Being thus convinced, his heart yearned for the salvation of his fellow-men; he went into various towns and districts, praying and exhorting the people to make their peace with God. Some received the warning and were made wise unto salvation, while others hardened themselves as in the apostle's time, and if they did not say "Away with this fellow," their acts abundantly proved this to be their desire.

About this time, Bro. ———, from Yale College, who had become deeply interested in the near coming of Christ, was spending a little time in this vicinity, and soon the arrangement was made for this manufacturer to accompany him to the high hills of G., (the highest point of land in the State), to hold meetings in a school-house, that they might if possible induce some to seek Christ.

There was one family of like precious faith, and some half dozen individuals, who were friendly to the meeting.

After they had held a few hopeful meetings, it appears that rigid sectarians stirred up certain lewd fellows of the baser sort to assault the meetings with true mobocratic spirit, though all unknown to the few friends of the cause. These faithful laborers in their Master's vineyard had felt undecided as to the time of remaining in the place, and consequently only gave out the appointment from eve to eve.

On the third or fourth evening just at meeting time, there came up a thunder shower so terrific and continuous as to forbid any one from going out. Of course there was no appointment for the next night, but as there was a school the appointment could be easily given out for the next evening.

Soon after family prayers the following morning, the manufacturer walking out by himself, felt prompted to kneel and pray relative to the meeting the coming evening, and he felt strongly impressed not to hold any more meetings; but as the few friends desired and expected more, and there appeared no good reason why they should not hold one that eve, he prayed earnestly for a sign, one that could not be mistaken if it was not duty to hold a meeting that evening.

The sign was not given, and, therefore, he let it pass as a mere impression without mentioning it, and in the afternoon walked up with Bro. G. to the school-house to give out the appointment. When they had arrived within a few rods of the place, he suddenly halted and remarked to Bro. G., "It is not duty to hold a meeting here to-night." Like a flash the sign had been given him; just what he had asked for in the morning. It seemed miraculous quite, and he then apprized Bro. G. of his exercises of mind relative to the meeting, whereupon they both immediately turned and walked back to the house of the dear family whose hospitalities they shared; and in the evening the few friends gathered there to enjoy one of the sweetest religious visits this side of the New Jerusalem.

It did seem as if the angels of God were present to administer the joys of heaven to that company, who have since been scattered far and wide. But probably some of them will read this reminiscence of that blessed interview; if so, can they forbear giving thanks at the remembrance of the holy joy experienced on that memorable evening?

It was quite apparent that our heavenly Father was pleased with the course his children pursued in being thus associated instead of holding a public meeting at the school-house. But why he should have thus directed, no one of the number could determine.

The next morning these faithful servants of the Lord took leave of the dear friends in G., returning to their homes with the happy satisfaction of having done their Master's will, determined ever to "trust where they could not trace him."

A short time subsequent, the thing was fully developed, proving God's special care over those who trust him, which is in substance the following:

The day after the thunder shower, when the Bro. was so exercised, and finally had the required sign given him not to hold a meeting, there was a building raised in the place where many of the baser sort were gathered, a large company of whom bound themselves together, with the constables of the town at their head, arming themselves with large quantities of eggs, various kinds of fire-works and missiles, with which to attack and break up the meeting. Load after load followed each other in high glee, but to their great discomfiture, on arriving at the place, the house was not lighted or even opened. They became jealous of each other, declaring some of the company had betrayed them in informing the friends of the meeting, and so they turned their venom upon each other, not realizing there is One who informs those who trust him of all that it is needful for them to know.

HUNGER AND THIRST.

O, let me climb the verdant height
Of pure religion's mount;
As snow there wash my soul as white,
In free salvation's fount.

There floats anon the zephyr sweet,
And wraps around its brow
The fragrance of a world complete;
Its power I feel e'en now.

O, let me to the summit rise,
My soul in transport ride,
To view beneath the generous skies
My home beyond the tide.

'Tis here, this side the guardian cloud,
The gospel light doth shine;
While nether darkness all enshrouds
Where souls to sin incline.

O, Jesus, everlasting friend,
I would come near to thee;
O, let me see that peaceful end,
The King in beauty see.

STRIVING FOR A CONTENTED MIND.—What a beautiful example for all of us is the resolution of the old lady, who, from a crabbed and anxious body, became quite the opposite. When asked what had induced the change, she replied: "To tell you the truth, I have been all my life striving for a contented mind, and have finally concluded to sit down contented without it."

IS THERE ANY GOD?

HAFED'S DREAM.

At the foot of one of those gigantic mountains in Asia, which lift up their gigantic heads so far above the clouds that the eye of man never saw their summits, stood a beautiful cottage, facing the east. The mountain stream leaped and murmured on the north; the verdant plain, where the bright-eyed gazelle sported, lay spread out in front; the garden and the olive-yard, filled with every flower and every fruit which an oriental sun could pencil and ripen, lay on the south; while back, on the west, arose the everlasting mountain. Here were walks and shades and fruits, such as were found nowhere else. The sun shone upon no spot more luxuriant; the moon-beams struggled to enter no place more delightful; and the soft wings of the breezes of evening fanned no such abode in all the east. The howl of the wolf was never heard here; the sly fox never came here to destroy; and here the serpent's hiss was never heard.

This cottage was the home of Hafed, the aged and the prosperous. He reared this cottage; he adorned this spot; and here, for more than four-score years, he had lived and studied. During all this time, the sun had never forgotten to visit him daily; the harvest had never failed, the pestilence had never destroyed, and the mountain-stream had never dried up. The wife of his youth still lived to cheer and bless him; and his son and daughter were such as were not to be found in all that province. No youth could rein the horse, hurl the javelin, chase the lion, or delight the social circle, like this son. No daughter of kings could be found so beautiful and perfect, as was this daughter, with an eye so bright and joyous, and a form so symmetrical, as hers.

But who can ensure earthly happiness? In one short week Hafed was stripped of all his joys.

His wife went to see a new white peacock, which it was said a neighbor, who lived a mile off in the ravine, had just brought home. She took cold, and a quick fever followed; and on her return, Hafed saw that she must die. Before two days were gone the old man was standing at her open grave. He gazed long, and said impatiently,—"Cover her, cover the only woman that I ever loved!"

The son and the daughter both returned from the burial of their mother fatigued and sick. The nurse gave them, as she thought, a simple medicine. In a few hours it was found to be poison. Hafed saw that they must die, for the laws of nature are fixed, and poison kills. He buried them in one wide, deep grave, and it seemed as if in that grave he buried his reason and his religion. He tore his gray hair, he cursed the light of day, and wished the moon turned to blood; and above all, he blasphemed his God, declaring that the laws which he had established were all wrong, useless, and worse than none. He wished the world were governed by chance; but as this was a hopeless wish, he wished that at his death he might go to a world where there was no God to fix unalterable laws. He arraigned the wisdom of God in his government over this world, declaring that his plans were weak, and worse than none, and that it would be far better to have no God in the universe!

In the centre of Hafed's garden stood a large, beautiful palm-tree. Under it was Hafed sitting, the second evening after closing the grave over his children. The seat on which he sat had been reared by his son. On the leaf of the tree which lay before him were some exquisite verses written by the pencil of his daughter. Before him lay the beautiful country covered with green, sprinkled here and there, as far as the eye could see, with the habitations of men, and upon this great landscape the shadows of the mighty mountains were now setting. In the east the moon was just pushing up her modest face, and the gold of day was softening into the silver of night. While Hafed looked on all this, grief began to swell his throat; his heart was full of hard thoughts of God, which nearly amounted to blasphemy.

As the night deepened, Hafed, as he then thought, fell asleep with a heavy heart. When he supposed he awoke, it was in a new spot. The mountain, the landscape, the home, were all gone. All was new.

As he stood wondering where he was, he saw a creature approaching him, which, at first, he mistook for a baboon; but on its coming near, he discovered that it was a creature somewhat resembling a man, but every way mal-formed, ill-shaped, and monstrous.

He came up and walked around Hafed as he would a superior being, exclaiming, "Beautiful, beautiful creature!"

"Shame, shame on thee!" said Hafed; "dost thou treat a stranger thus with insults? Leave off thy jests, and tell me where I am, and how I came here!"

"I do not know how you came here, but here you are in our world, which we call chance world, because everything happens here by chance."

"Ah! is it so? This must be delightful! This is just the world for me. Oh! had I always lived here, my beautiful children would not have died under a foolish and inexorable law! Come, show me this world, for I long to see it. But have ye really no God, nor any one to make laws and govern you just as he sees fit?"

"I don't know what you mean by God; we have nothing of that kind here,—nothing but chance; but go with me, and you will understand all about it."

As they proceeded, Hafed began to notice that everything looked queer and odd. Some of the grass was green, some red, some white, some new, and some dying; some grew with the top downward; all kinds were mingled together; and, on the whole, the sight was very painful. He stopped to examine an orchard; here chance had been at work. On a fine-looking apple-tree, he saw no fruit but large, coarse cucumbers. A small peach-tree was breaking down under its load of gourds. Some of the trees were growing with their tops downwards, and the roots branching out into the air. Here and there were great holes dug, by which somebody had tried to get down twenty or thirty feet in order to get the fruit. The guide told Hafed that there was no certainty about these trees; and you could never tell what fruit a tree would happen to bear. The tree which this year bears cucumbers, may bear potatoes next year, and perhaps you would have to dig twenty feet for every potato you obtained.

They soon met another of the "chance-men." His legs were unequal in length, one had no knee, and the other no ankle. His ears were set upon his shoulders, and around his head was a thick black bandage. He came groping his way, and Hafed at once asked him how long since he had lost his sight?

"I have not lost it," said he; "but when I was born, my eye-balls happened to be turned in instead of out, and the back parts being outward, are very painful in the light, and so I put on a covering."

"Well, but canst thou see anything? Methinks thou mayest see strange things within."

"True, but the difficulty is to get any light in there. I have contrived various ways to do so,—have had it poured into my ears and nose; but all will not do. Yet I am as well off as others. My brother has one good eye on the top of his head: but he only looks directly up with it to the clouds; and the sun almost puts it out. He shuts it most of the time during the day; but it happens to be one of those eyes that will not stay shut, and so when he sleeps the flies trouble him badly. I have a sister who has nineteen eyes in her head; but they are a vexation. She sees eighteen things too many. Even now she can't realize that she has not nineteen fathers, and as many mothers. She goes to bed, and falls on the floor nineteen times at least before she gets in. She goes to drink, and sees nineteen cups, and knows not which is the real cup. But so it happened, and she is as well off as most in this "chance-world." But, after all, it's a glorious world, I do assure you."

"Wonderful," said Hafed.

As they proceeded a little further, they met a young lady.

"That young lady," said the guide, "is the greatest beauty in all these parts. All our young men are bewitched by her; and there have been no less than twenty duels on her account already. You will be amazed at seeing a being so perfect."

As they met Hafed stared more fully than is usually considered polite among the orientals. The beauty had a face not altogether unlike a human face, excepting that the mouth was under the chin, the eyes looked separate ways, and the color of the hair was a mixture of red, light-blue, white and yellow. One foot had the heel forward, and one arm was altogether wanting.

"Wonderful, wonderful, truly," cried Hafed. "Twenty duels! But I hope they were not all killed, were they?"

Here the beauty began to ogle and mince in her steps most enchantingly.

"Killed!" said the guide; "you seem to know nothing about us. They all met and fought together; but as every thing goes here by chance, it is not often that we can get our powder to burn. In this case only one got his gun off at all, and that did not happen to go off till night, when he was going to bed, when it wounded his hand, which had been bleeding ever since."

"Ever since! How long ago was this? She did not look as if it could have been to-day."

"Oh! it was two years ago."

"Two years ago! and why don't ye seek the leech, and have the poor boy saved from bleeding to death—even though he was a fool—for more reasons than one?"

"Ah! you don't understand it. Everything goes by chance here; and there is only a chance that a man who is wounded will ever be healed. This is one of those cases, in which he will never be healed."

"I don't understand it truly," said Hafed.

They stopped to look at some "chance-cattle" in a yard. Some had but three legs; some had the head on in the wrong part of the body; some were covered with wool, under which they were sweltering in a climate always tropical. Some were half horse and half ox. One cow had a young dwarf of a camel following her, and claiming her as his mother. Young elephants were there with the flocks of sheep; horses with claws like a lion, and geese clamping round the yard with hoofs like horses. It was all the work of chance.

"This," said the guide, "is a choice collection of cattle. You never saw the like before."

"That is true,—truth itself," cried Hafed.

"Ah! but the owner had been at almost infinite pains and expense to collect them. I can't believe there is another such collection anywhere in all this 'chance-world.'"

"I hope not," said Hafed.

Just as they were leaving the premises, the owner came out to admire, and show, and talk over his treasures. He wanted to gaze at Hafed; but his head happened to be near the ground between his feet, so that he had to mount up on a wall, before he could get a fair view of the stranger.

"Don't think I am a happy man," said he to Hafed, "in having so many and such perfect animals. Alas, even in this happy and perfect world, there are always draw-backs. That fine-looking cow yonder happens to give nothing but warm water for milk; and her calf, poor thing, died the first week. Some of them have good-looking eyes, but from some defect, are stone-blind. Some cannot live in the light, and few of them can hear. No two eat the same food, and it is great labor to take care of them. I sometimes feel as if I had almost as lief be a poor man."

"I think I should rather," said Hafed.

While they were talking, in an instant they were in midnight darkness. The sun was gone, and Hafed could not for some time see his guide.

"What has happened?" said he.

"Oh! nothing uncommon," said the guide. "The sun happened to go down now. There is no regular time for him to shine; but he goes and comes just as it happens, and leaves as suddenly as you see."

"As I don't see," said Hafed; "but I hope he will come back at an appointed time, at any rate."

"That, sir, will be just as it happens. Sometimes he is gone for months, and sometimes for weeks, and sometimes only for a few minutes. Just as it happens. We may not see him again for months, but perhaps he will come soon."

"But how do you talk about months and days, when you have no such things?"

"I will soon tell you about that. We measure time here by the yard."

"By the yard?"

"Yes; we call that time which the most perfect men among us take in walking a yard, to be the sixtieth part of an hour. These hours we reckon into days, and these days into years. To be sure, we are not very exact, because some men walk so much faster than others; but this is just as their legs happen to be, long or short."

As the guide was proceeding, to the inexpressible joy of all, the sun at once broke out. The light was so sudden, that Hafed at first thought he must be struck with lightning, and actually put his hands up to his eyes to see if they were safe. He then clapped his hands over his eyes, till he could gradually bear the light. There was a splendor about the sun which he had never before seen; and it was intolerably hot. The air seemed like a furnace.

"Ah!" said the owner of the cattle, "we must now scorch for it. My poor wool ox must die at once! Bad luck, bad luck to us! The sun has come back much nearer than he was before. But we hope he will happen to go away again soon, and then happen to come back further off the next time."

The sun was now pouring down his heat so intensely that they were glad to go into the house for shelter—a miserable looking place indeed. Hafed could not but compare it with his own beautiful cottage. Some timbers were rotten; for the tree was not, as it happened, the same thing in all its parts. Some of the boards happened to be like paper, and the nails tore out, and these were loose and coming off. They had to do their cooking out under the burning sun; for when the smoke once got into the house, there was no getting it out, unless it happened to go, which was not very often.

They invited Hafed to eat. On sitting down at table, he noticed that each one had a different kind of food, and that no two could eat out of the same dish. He was told that it so happened, that the food which one could eat, was poison to another, and what was agreeable to one, was nauseating to another. Selecting the food which looked most inviting, Hafed attempted to eat. What was his surprise when he found that his hands did not happen to be under the control of his will, and, instead of carrying the food to his mouth, these active servants put it into his right ear! On examining, he found it was so with all the rest, and by imitating the company, and twisting his head round over his right shoulder, and placing his mouth where the ear was, he managed to eat. In amazement he asked how this happened.

"Ah!" said they, laughing at his ignorance of the world, "we have no fixed laws here. All is chance. Sometimes we have one or more limbs for a long time which are not under the control of our will. It is just as it happens. So when we drink we find it always true, that 'Some shed it on their shoulder,

Some shed it on their thigh;
And he that doth not hit his mouth,
Is sure to hit his eye.'"

"I suppose that to be coffee," said Hafed, "and will thank you for a cup."

"It was handed him. He had been troubled with a tooth-ache for some hours, and how did he quail, when on filling his mouth he found it was ice, in little pieces about as large as pigeon-shot!

"Do you call ice-water coffee here?" said Hafed, pressing his hand upon the cheek where the tooth was now dancing with pain.

"That is just as it happens. We put water over the fire, and sometimes it heats it, and sometimes it freezes it. How can it be otherwise, when we have here no fixed laws of any kind? It is all chance-work."

Hafed rose from the table in anguish of spirit. He remembered the world where he had lived, and all that was past. He had desired to live in a world where there was no God, where all was governed by chance, so far as there was anything that looked like government. Here he was, and here he must live. He threw himself on a bed, and recalled the past,—the beautiful world in which he had once lived, his ingratitude, his murmurings, and his blasphemy against the wisdom and the goodness of God. He wept like infancy. He would have prayed, and even began a prayer; but then he recollected that there was no God here, nothing to direct events, nothing but chance. He shed many and bitter tears of repentance. At last he wept himself asleep.

When Hafed again awoke, he was sitting under his palm tree in his own beautiful garden. It was morning. At the appointed moment, the glorious sun rose up in the east, the fields were all green and fresh; the trees were all right end upwards, and covered with blossoms; the beautiful deer were bounding in their gladness over the lawn, and the songsters in the trees, which, in plumage and sweetness, might have vied with those that sang in Eden, were uttering their morning song.

Hafed arose, recalled that ugly dream, and then wept for joy. Was he ag in in a world where chance does not reign? He looked up, and then turned to the God of heaven and earth, the God of laws and of order. He gave glory to him, and confessed that his ways, to us unsearchable, are full of wisdom. He was a new man. Tears indeed fell at the graves of his family; but he now lived to do good to men, and to make others happy. He called a young and worthy couple, distant relatives, to fill his house. His home again smiled, and peace and contentment came back and were his abiding guests.

Hafed would never venture to affirm whether this was a dream or reality. On the whole, he was inclined to think it real, and that there is somewhere a "chance-world;" but he always shook his head, and declared that, so far from wishing to live there, nothing gave him greater cause of gratitude as he daily knelt in prayer, than the fact, that he lived in a world where God ruled, and ruled by laws, fixed, wise, and merciful.

MAN WAS NOT MADE TO MOURN.

God formed Adam from the dust,
A being pure and fair,
By disobedience he fell,
Thus made to death an heir.
Stern justice might have left him there
All woeful and forlorn,
But love and mercy plead his cause,
He was not made to mourn.

For by the fall the promise came,
That holy, heavenly ray,
Which filled his heart with hope and joy,
And cheered him on his way.
Thus man was not left destitute,
Though of his glory shorn;
God's gracious promise told him plain,
Man was not made to mourn.

The promise seen to faith's strong eye
In time became a star,
Which guided sages from the east,
E'en wise men from afar:
It guided them to Bethlehem
On that auspicious morn,
When angels the glad tidings brought,
Man was not made to mourn.

And on that morn when Jesus rose
Triumphant from the tomb,
The promise was fulfilled, and death
Had lost for man its gloom.
Through Adam's disobedience
We heirs to death are born,
Through Christ we gain eternal life—
Man was not made to mourn.

And they who love the laws of God,
Who walk with fear therein,
Believe God's promise, live by faith,
And shun the paths of sin;
Who help the suffering and distressed,
The cheerless and forlorn,
To them the promise comes direct—
Man was not made to mourn.

Go, mark the Christian on his way,
Beneath his feet joy springs;
Thro' trial, suffering, care and pain,
Exultingly he sings:
"Jesus is mine, and I am his,
He all my sins hath borne;
Deep in my soul I feel the truth—
Man was not made to mourn."

TRUTH vs. POPULAR THEOLOGY.

In these last days, when popular theology is so successful in blinding the eyes of the people by misconstruing the plainest teachings of the Scripture, it is no wonder that the Bible has become a dry book to most professed christians, and has well nigh lost its significance. In such times as these, it is refreshing for the candid seeker after truth to forget for a time the various conflicting statements proceeding from a thousand pulpits, and with unprejudiced mind spread out God's chart before him. For him who is willing to be guided by this chart, there is an inexhaustable amount of pleasure. One after another as the great truths become apparent to the mind, the book assumes a new character; a clearer light illuminates its pages: and to him who thus throws off his prejudices and puts on candor, the result is always the same; he is surprised at the harmony of the Bible, and astonished at his former blindness.

Time was when the gospel was preached as it came,—pure and unadulterated. The Apostles and Apostolic Fathers had no ambition to frame and add new doctrines, or to subtract from and substitute the philosophy of men; they were not afraid of preaching the whole gospel. That was the purest age of the church. But an evil day came.

For a hundred years after the death of Christ the gospel was preached without serious misconstruction; but a little later Justin Martyr, probably for the purpose of alluring others into Christianity from the higher ranks of society, began to mix the Scriptures with human philosophy: such as the natural immortality of the soul; eternal conscious punishment of the wicked, etc. This, of course, led to further adulteration and misconstruction, until gradually the pride and superstition of men transformed the gospel of Jesus Christ into a horrid mass of Papal corruption.

The dark side of the picture we all know; how for hundreds of years the world was enveloped in the spiritual darkness of midnight gloom, and how the blood of martyrs to the cause of truth was spilled by order of Papal authority. Surely the "Abomination that maketh desolate" was then set up, and for a long time the great Apostasy flourished.

It has been a wonder with many how its theology could be cherished by the masses with such credulity; but we need not wonder when we consider that human nature was then as we find it now. Opinions, habits, and theology are inherited. They come to the people through the minds of past generations. Those who think for themselves are the exception, not the rule.

Thankful should we be that there are exceptions, for Martin Luther was one of them; and but for such minds as his the world now might be as it was in his day,—swayed by Popes and Prelates. Luther chose to take the Bible as it read, and soon began to see the necessity of a reformation. He commenced his work, and as a matter of course met with persecution, as every reformer must. He was adapted to his work, and did it well, without flinching. He rightly said of himself that he was "altogether warlike; born to fight innumerable devils and monsters; to remove stumps and stones; to cut down thistles and thorns, and to clear the wild woods."

It is interesting to observe how naturally the candid Bible student falls back upon the primitive views of the church. We recognize advancement in arts and sciences; they are the developments of man, who is made capable of progression. But God is always the same. He has given us the gospel as it should be; and whenever man undertakes to alter or amend it, it inevitably leads to confusion, and sometimes moral corruption. Hence Luther first seeks for the old landmarks, and then commences to clear away the old "papal rubbish which had so long obstructed the paths made by Christ and the Apostles. He says: "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as,—the soul is the substantial form of the human body,—the soul is immortal;—with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."

William Tyndal about that time writes: "In putting departed souls in heaven, hell, and purgatory, you destroy the argument wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection."

So we see that these doctrines, with others which had wrought such mischief, were utterly condemned by those who recognized the Bible as the only guide. We might quote the writings of the christian Fathers of the church still farther back, but enough for the present.

Let us turn a leaf, and look at the theology of our generation, and see where we are drifting to. The work of the Reformers cleared the gospel of a large portion of the rubbish heaped upon it by the Papal superstition. Protestantism was the result. But, alas! instead of "bewaring of the leaven," it was allowed to work, as in the days of old. The doctrines incorporated into Romanism (then repudiated by the Reformers) are now once more gaining ground. It is hard for men to forget the heathen doctrine, that man can be dead and alive at the same time. The Devil takes advantage, projects a great enterprise, and invites all believers in the "immortality of the soul" to take stock in Spiritualism. Many comply, and the work is progressing finely. With Satan at its head, Spiritualism has succeeded in bringing the Bible into disrepute; is fast making converts, and reaping a rich harvest in the nominal churches.

Among those who still cling to the primitive Bible doctrines, Spiritualism finds but little encouragement. Demons cannot successfully represent themselves as the departed friends of those who learn from the Bible and believe that their friends are really dead, and that nothing but a resurrection will make them alive or conscious.

Popular theology of to-day tells us that when a sinner dies he goes immediately to hell, where he suffers conscious torment through all eternity. It is not particular to state which hell, whether hades or sheol; tartarus or gehenna. But never mind, it is a place of "suffering." If we ask what kind of suffering? we receive different answers. Some will tell us it is literal fire that keeps burning, but never consumes its victim. Others who can conceive this inconsistent with the character of a merciful God, say it is the eternal gnawing of conscience.

It is strange indeed that a person surrounded by devils and evil spirits for hundreds of years, with no good influence about him, should be so tormented with conscience. The theology of to-day is rather a hard master. It gets men into rather narrow straits. We have noticed that the wickedest men on earth are those least troubled with conscience.

It is a relief to fall back upon Bible grounds after being led away by the vain philosophy of men. We there find a natural and easy solution to this question—What becomes of the wicked? We there learn that the dead "sleep" till the resurrection; that all shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ; that some shall be consigned to the "second death."

We learn from another portion of the divine Word that sin when it is "finished bringeth forth death"; but theology keeps the sinner alive, and consequently as long as he lives he must sin. Truly this is a progressive age. But let the thoughtful beware.

Another doctrine which we find existing to a large extent in the nominal churches, is that which claims that the world is to be converted before the coming of Christ to judgment. How the idea could at first have received any credence is not easily explained; but it is easy to conceive of the masses believing it, because it was handed down to them from their fathers. In this generation, as in the days of Luther, ignorance of the Bible keeps the people blind; but when we open that book we read that the wheat and the tares shall grow together "until the harvest"; and Christ says that the "harvest is the end of the world."

Any one can see clearly, if he will, that this simple fact of itself completely demolishes this unfounded doctrine; but if its supporters refuse to believe the Bible, we should suppose that other facts would open their eyes. It is estimated that the unevangelical heathen number hundreds of millions more at the present time than they did fifty years ago. If they continue to increase in spite of missionary enterprise, we should think that this pet theory would begin to lose its supporters.

Thus we see that as great absurdities exist in the church to-day as did before the Reformation, and we attribute it all to the grossest ignorance of the Bible. This inexcusable lack of knowledge leads to one of the most flagrant sins of omission which can be charged upon the churches of this generation.

Evidence strong and conclusive is heaped up, proving that we are now living in the last days of this dispensation; that Christ is soon to come to set up his kingdom on earth; the "perilous times" are at hand that precede that event. Prophecy is every day changed into history, and the daily papers unconsciously point to its fulfillment; but the eyes of the popular church goers are sealed. The same state of things exists that caused Christ to weep over Jerusalem. They knew not the time of their visitation, which they ought to have known by the prophecies. The same kind of knowledge is enjoined upon this generation, but the people refuse to heed it. While a few faithful "watchmen" are proclaiming the "signs of the times," the masses take part with the "scoffers" who say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and are too sluggish and indifferent to search the Scriptures of divine truth; "for of this they are willingly ignorant."

A few more thoughts and we are done. Luther removed stumps and thistles of papal superstition, and we commend him for it. Those who are endeavoring to crowd out modern superstition, by crowding in Bible doctrine, are stamped "fanatics," and their teachings are stigmatized as novelties.

If the graduates from theological seminaries and their followers who prefer to consult the opinions of men as a means of obtaining knowledge, would peruse the writings of the early Christians, they might receive some ideas that might change their views respecting the "novelty" of these things. In the second century they would find Hermas writes thus: "Thou seest therefore that in the repentance of sinners there is life; but that for those who repent not death is prepared." Irenæus, who writes about the same time, says, "For life is not of ourselves, nor of our own nature, but a gift of God." Arnobius, in the third century, writes: "Wherefore we should not be deceived or deluded with vain hopes, by that which a new class of men, elated with an extravagant opinion of themselves, tell us—that souls are immortal."

The articles of faith subscribed to by the Baptists in the sixteenth century agree exactly with the views we hold relative to the inheritance of the righteous. They made this earth their future abode, after it had been purified by fire. Nothing is said about that imaginary place

Calvin says: "There is no reason why any one should expect the conversion of the world, for at length when it shall be too late, and shall yield them no advantage, they shall look on Him whom they have pierced." We might quote from numerous writers of the present day from different denominations bearing on the same points; but enough has been said to rid these doctrines of the charge against them, that of their being newly made.

How happens it that such a change has been wrought in so short a time? The Bible was the same then as it is now. Thinking men were as able to pass correct judgment then as they are now concerning it. And if for a hundred years after Christ the Church flourished without these inventions of men, may it not again flourish if again repudiated?

THE SAMARITANS:

WHO AND WHAT WERE THEY?

NUMBER FOUR.

This question is so frequently asked, we are induced to submit the subjoined account of them, as compiled from various reliable sources:

The Samaritans were descended from the remnant of the Israelites (the ten tribes) not carried away into captivity, and afterwards intermixed with Gentiles from the neighboring parts of Assyria, especially the Cuthi, who had come to occupy the vacant situations of the former inhabitants. In this new colony idolatry was introduced and permitted from the very beginning; yet so as to worship Jehovah in conjunction with the false gods. 2 Kings 17: 29.

When afterwards Cyrus permitted the Jews to return from captivity and rebuild their temple, the Samaritans, who wished to form a union in religious matters with the Jews, requested that the Temple might be rebuilt by and erected at the common labor and expense of both nations. But Zerubbabel and the other Jewish rulers rejected their request, urging that Cyrus had committed the work to them only, and had charged the governors of Samaria to keep away from the place, and only assist the Jews out of the public revenues of the province.

The Samaritans, however, said they were at liberty to worship there, since the Temple had been erected for the worship of the Supreme Being by all the human race. But the Jews repelled and rejected them, and when the Samaritans received this repulse, they felt much mortified, and laid wait for revenge. They endeavored to obstruct the restoration of the Temple, and the increase and prosperity of the Jewish state, by various methods.

Hence originated a mutual hatred between the nations, which was afterwards kept up and increased by the revolt of Manasseh,* and the erection of another temple on Mount Gerizim. For Manasseh, a brother of Taddus the high priest, had, contrary to the laws and customs of the nation, taken in marriage the daughter of Sanballat, the ruler of Samaria (Neh. 13: 23–28); and when the Jews, indignant at this, had ordered that he should divorce her as an alien, or no longer approach to the altar and the sacred institutions, he fled to his father-in-law, a high priest, who alienated many from the religious worship of the Jews, and by gifts and promises drew over great numbers, and even some of the priests, to the Samaritan party. But when the temple on Mount Gerizim was erected, still greater contentions arose between the Jews and Samaritans concerning the place of divine worship; the Samaritans denying that the sacred rites at Jerusalem were pure and of divine ordination; but of the temple on Mount Gerizim they affirmed that it was holy, legitimate, and sanctioned by the presence of the Deity. They received the books of Moses only, because the rest of the sacred books sanctioned and vindicated the divine worship at Jerusalem, and were therefore rejected, as also the whole body of Jewish traditions, keeping exclusively to the letter.

From these and kindred causes, the Jews were inflamed to the most rancorous hatred towards this rival nation, insomuch that to many of them the Samaritans were objects of greater detestation than even the Gentiles. See Luke 10: 33. It is no wonder, then, that there should have been such a constant reciprocation of injuries and calumnies as had served to keep up a perpetual exasperation between the two nations.

The Samaritans, however, did not entertain so much hatred towards the Jews, as the latter towards the former; nor did they deny towards them the offices of humanity. See Luke 9: 53, and 10: 32. Jesus not only disregarded but discountenanced this hatred, and as he did not hesitate to eat with taxgatherers, or "collectors of revenue," so neither did he avoid intercourse with Samaritans. See John 4: 5–42.

Olena, O. G. W. Stetson.

* Manasseh, above referred to, was not the tribe descended from Joseph's eldest son (Gen. 48), but a high-priest of the Jews, son of John and brother of Taddus, and succeeded Eleazer, his great uncle, and was succeeded by Onias 2d, his nephew. According to Josephus 11: 7, 8, he married Nicaso, daughter of Sanballat, governor of Samaria, and by his aid built on Mount Gerizim, in which he became the first high-priest about B. C. 260.

GETHSEMANE.—Matt. 26: 40.

Why sleep ye so easy within this loved bower?
What! can ye not watch with your Lord but one hour?
My soul is exceeding sorrowful now,
'Neath this load that I bear; and how sleepest thou?

O, watch ye and pray, lest your feet catch in snares,
The spirit is willing, sleep checketh your prayers;
Arise! thou dull sleeper, shake off this dull care,
For now is the hour ye must watch unto prayer.

O, earnestly watch ye, and dare not to sleep,
While temptations are thickening your vigils must keep,
And watch with your Savior while He, like a flood,
Shed tears in his agony, and great drops of blood.

O, remember my sufferings in Gethsemane,
What I bore in my passion, and all was for thee;
Then bear thee most manfully, and trust in my power
To keep thee from fainting while watching this hour.

Portland, Me. William C. Clark.

THE WATCHING CHURCH.

The present is the world's night, the hour of darkness and of gloom. "They that sleep, sleep in the night, and they that be drunken. are drunken in the night;" and the world sleeps, and the world is drunken now. Never since creation were men more stupid, besotted, hardened in sin, unconscious of danger, and defiant towards God.

Earth's retrospect is dark and terrible, its aspect is gloomy and perplexing, but its greatest woes are yet to come. And the thoughts of its portentous future press heavily upon my soul. A fearful vision lies before me;—a world slumbering on perdition's fiery brink: a church ensnared in sinfulness, lust, and pride; stupid watchmen drowsily proclaiming, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and mistaking the flush of twilight for the glow of dawn: clouds, darker than have mantled the sky since the first beaming of Bethlehem's star, thickening along the horizon; pent up surges of dessolation, fire, and blood, pressing against their yielding barriers; volcanic murmurs and upheavals presaging approaching outbursts of war, and strife, and carnage, and desolatoin; and beyond all these the battle of Armageddon, the day of God, the solemn judgment, the awful destruction that awaits the ungodly, and the triumphant deliverance of the ransomed of the Lord.

These are the scenes that rise before my gaze,—the visions that crowd my path in the busy whirl of human activity, and that press upon me in the place of privacy and prayer. These are the coming events which forecast their shades along my way, and spoil for me the pomp, the wealth, and pleasures of this world. These are the prospects that wake my soul to vigilance, and nerve my hands to toil: these are the considerations that inspire with zeal the watching church of the living God.

The sword cometh; how can I hold my peace? The Judge standeth at the door; how can I be silent or indifferent? The book of prophecy and the book of providence give warning of these coming woes, and the tokens of impending doom are as visible in the works of man, as they are in the word of God. All is secure, and all is unmeaning to the maudlin gaze of a besotted world, but all around is full of mighty import to the anointed eyes of a watching church. For "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness that THAT DAY should overtake you as a thief."—1 Thess. 5: 4–6. The day here mentioned is more definitely named in the preceding verses. The Thessolonian Christians, sharing the bereavements of mortality, sorrowed lest their loved ones should miss the glory of the coming kingdom for which they had watched and waited. To them the speculations of a vain philosophy were too vague and baseless for their credence, and the heathenish dreams of a fancied immortality had no foundation on which they could repose. The world had no hope in death, no comfort in the hour of dissolution. On the borders of the sepulchre arose the wailings of despair. "I think," said the younger Pliny, "of what a friend, what a person I am bereaved! You will say that he had completed his sixty-seventh year, which age is sufficiently long for the most robust. I know it. That he has escaped from continual ill health. I know it. That he has departed while his friends were living; and while the republic was flourishing, which was dearer to him than all of them. I know all this also. Nevertheless I grieve, as if for the death of one young and vigorous; but I grieve, though you may think me weak, for my own sake! For I have lost, I have lost the witness, the guide, and the instructor of my life! In short, I will say, what I said to my friend Calvisius in the freshness of my grief, 'I fear I shall be too careless of my life' wherefore give me some consolation: not such as these, 'He was old,—he was sickly,' for I know all this; but something NEW, something GREAT, of which I have never heard or read. For what I have heard, what I have read, occurs of its own accord; but it is overwhelmed with such great grief." *

To comfort the watching church of God surrounded by such an ocean of dark and dismal doubt, to bring them "something new, something great," of which the heathen world and persecuting magistrates like Pliny, had "never heard or read," was the purpose of the apostle Paul. "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren," said he, "concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope." But where was hope to be found? Glancing over the wide chaos of doubt and darkness which fills this earthly charnel-house, he sees bursting from the rock-hewn tomb of Joseph of Arimathæa one brilliant ray of light and hope. Here was the guiding beacon for a benighted world. Jesus had died, Jesus had risen. This was the fundamental fact; and upon facts, rather than philosophy, he sought to found their faith. Christ had abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light, through the gospel. "If we believe," what hundreds of living witnesses were then ready to testify, "that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with him." God "brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep," and even so will he bring all his people from their graves. The flock follows the Shepherd. The body lives with the head. Christ spoiled the enemy, and makes us victorious through his wondrous love and conquering power.

This was the sum of the apostle's argument. Those, therefore, who live until the appearing of Christ, shall have no advantage over those who are asleep, or who in former ages have lived and died in Christ. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout;" the "voice of the archangel" shall declare his coming, and the swelling echoes of the "trump of God" shall herald in the perdition of the sinner, the salvation of the saint, and the coming glory of the watching church.

What scenes shall follow!—forth from unnumbered graves, and caves, and dungeons, burst the immortal saints of God; earth heaves with the agonies of travail, and brings forth a nation in a day: up through the level waves of ocean, emerge the saints who have slumbered amid the coral groves and hidden chambers of the mighty deep, and all the holy join the rising throng, for "the dead in Christ shall rise first." And then, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, each living, waiting, saint feels that mysterious thrill, "the power of an endles life," which changes him from mortality to immortality, and fits him for the companionship of his Savior and his God.

And now they rise,—rise as did Elijah when "the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof" bore him upward to the skies; rise as did Jesus from the brow of Olivet when the cloud received him out of sight; rise upborne by angel hands, and drawn by the attracting power of Christ their Head and Lord. Earth sinks and recedes from their gaze; new scenes of glory flash upon their view; the deep, despairing wail of a ruined world sounds fainter and fainter in the distance,—while around them, and above them, burst the harmonies of cherubim and seraphim, the blissful chords that tell the happiness of heaven. Still they ascend:—the radiant cloud of light and glory unfolds a gorgeous portal, and unnumbered angels escort them in and give them welcome there.

Behold they come, a countless throng,
From every age, and clime, and tongue;
From every race, and every land,
They come before their Lord to stand.

Mortals have never beheld an assembly like that. They fly as clouds, they gather like doves to their windows, they hasten to the presence-chamber of their King. They greet each other with unspeakable delight. The long severed sons and daughters of the Lord exult in the gladness of their blest reunion. They shout for joy as the last weary one comes home. The anthem of triumph goes up, the Savior's smile is seen; the Savior's greeting heard; the pierced hand wipes the last tear away; the dead and living meet in joy once more; prophets and apostles gather in sweet companionship; martyrs behold their martyred King; sinners saved gaze upon their Savior, and so they are forever "with the Lord."

This is the primitive consolation. Calmly and kindly does the apostle place this glowing page before the weeping eyes of the afflicted church, bidding them "Comfort one another with these words." Blessed comfort! Blessed words! They have been the oil of joy to mourning hearts for eighteen hundred years; and still they "hush the low complaining sigh, and dry the flowing tear;" still they gild the place of weeping with the radiant hues of joy; still they plant about the borders of the tomb the flowers of never-fading hope; still they strengthen those who watch beside the dying; still they comfort those who weep above the dead. Never shall the christian's eyes cease to behold this vision, never shall his hope cease to embrace this promise, never shall his heart cease to thrill with this prospect until the rending heavens disclose the majestic form of the descending King, the quaking earth yields up its captives at his call, and the gathered host of God from every age and clime, unite to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb,

"Far from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally shut in."

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

or,

The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER FOUR.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

9. The wicked will die the second death by fire.

The instrumentality to be brought upon the wicked, for their final destruction, is always spoken of in the Scriptures as being by "fire." They are also compared to consumable matter; such as—"the fat of lambs," "chaff," etc. The following witnesses cannot be impeached; therefore we must take their testimony in regard to the manner in which the wicked will meet with their final reward.

1. David:—"Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and a horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup." "Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." "Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again."—Ps. 11: 6; 21: 9; 37: 20; 104: 35; 140: 10.

2. Zechariah:—"Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth."—Zech. 14: 12.

3. John the Baptist:—"Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."—Matt. 3: 12.

4. Son of God:—"The tares are gathered and burned in the fire." "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." "Go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." "To be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched."—Matt. 13: 40; 25: 41; Mark 9: 43–48.

5. Paul:—"The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7–9.

6. Peter:—"And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly."—2 Pet. 2: 6.

7. Jude:—"Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, . . . are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7th.

8. John:—"And fire came down from God, out of heaven, and devoured them." "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of life." "The fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake, which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 20: 9, 15; 21: 8.

"This "fire," of which these eight witnesses testify, cannot be a "symbolic" fire; if so, then was the fire which turned the "cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes," symbolic also. Now it is plain that if the wicked are to be destroyed "both soul and body" by fire, then it proves that they must have a resurrection from the dead, or they cannot be destroyed by "fire"; as the most of them have died the first death, by floods of water, by wars, by plagues, by famines, and a thousand other ways; hence, can never be destroyed by fire, unless they first have a resurrection from the dead. The wicked shall "consume away"—"into smoke"—"as the fat of lambs." Ps. 37: 20.

10. The wicked cannot receive their reward until after they are judged by the Son of God.

Men in this mortal life die the first death by the direct judgment of the Father, as the following texts will show:—

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." "For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt. . . . I will execute judgment: I am the Lord."—Gen. 3: 19; Ex. 12: 12; Ps. 9: 16.

The Son of God will not judge men until he comes the "second time." He came not the first time "to judge the world, but to save the world." John 12: 47. The passage where it is said—"Now is the judgment of this world" (John 12: 31), cannot mean that Christ's judgment of this world was then, for such an idea would flatly contradict what we have just quoted from the forty-seventh verse. The plain meaning of the text is this: Christ himself was then judged by this world, and by their judgment respecting him he was then "cast out." It is the official work of the Father above to judge men to the first death, the Lord Jesus having nothing to do with such a judgment. The Father first judges men; he rewards them afterwards with the first death. So with the Son of God. He will first judge the wicked to the second death, and then their reward will also follow their judgment; in the same order as the Father's—(1) to judge; (2) to reward. As the ungodly, through unbelief and sin, forfeit the second life, which is offered to them through the Son of God; he alone will judge them (by the appointment of the Father) to the second death, as the following texts will show:—

"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." "And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead." "Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." "For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law; . . . in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." John 5: 22; Acts 10: 42; 17: 31; Rom. 2: 12, 16; Jude 14, 15.

The Father's judgment to the first death is not eternal in its results; but the judgment of the Son to the second death is "eternal" in its duration: as there will be no recovery from the second death as there will be from the first. Hence, the apostle speaks of the "resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." Heb. 6: 2.

By the texts above quoted, we find that the Son of God is to "convince all that are ungodly" "of all their ungodly deeds"; and that the Father has "given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man." How, then, can the Son of God convince and execute judgment upon Cain, upon the antediluvians, upon the Sodomites, etc., etc., if they are never raised again from the dead? This will be impossible. It must, therefore, be a fearful position indeed for any one to deny the resurrection of the wicked dead! For in so doing they virtually revoke the decision of the Father, who has appointed his Son to judge, convince, and to execute judgment upon all the wicked; what the Son can never do, if the wicked remain eternally dead in hades.

Christ's day of judgment is yet "to come" (Acts 24: 25); and it will be a day of "indignation and wrath," as we read in Rom. 1: 18; 2: 8, 9;—"For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness, and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness." "Therefore unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness; indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also of the Gentiles."

In view of such a day of judgment, Felix of old was made to "tremble." Had Paul preached to him that he was to die, and without a resurrection to remain eternally dead in hades, and never have judgment executed upon him in the future, we hardly think he would have trembled as he did.

THE POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Picture to yourself a manufacturing establishment of vast extent, filled with the most perfect machinery ever seen, every thing in the most complete order, with a full complement of operatives all ready and waiting for the arrival of the moment at which their labors are to begin.

There is only one thing lacking now; that is, the power to move all this vast array of machinery. Without the power, all the operatives, all the polished, gleaming, bristling spindles, all the belts, and shafts and gearing, are useless; even the ponderous wheel itself is useless. But at the precise time appointed, the power is applied, the great wheel revolves, and soon all the machinery throughout the vast establishment is doing its appropriate work. Now apply this figure to the church. No matter how complete it may be in outward form, without the power of the Holy Spirit, it is but a vain show. Eloquent pastors, beautiful edifices, intelligent audiences, every possible convenience and facility are all in vain without this divine power.

Do any inquire why it is that so many of the churches of our land make no apparent progress, so many that do not even hold their own? They lack just this one thing needful,—the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. With this power, one could chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. Destitute of this, churches as well as individuals are but dead branches.

It seems almost superfluous to tell how this power is to be obtained. Do you desire it? "Ask, and receive." O, can it be that any who know anything of the way, the truth and the life by experience, can it be that any who read this, have no desire for the presence of that blessed Comforter, who is even now ready to convince "of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment"?

The power that created all things, that sustains and upholds all things "by the word of his power", is ready and waiting to work wonders as great and as glorious as that which astonished the assembled multitudes on the day of Pentecost.

Do not talk of the latent power of the church. Say nothing about what might be done if every man put all his wealth and all his talents and influence into the hands of the church. Let the Holy Spirit fill the hearts of the people as it did in the days following that time when they were "all with one accord in one place," and there would be no latent power; it would all be called into action, and sinners would cry out on every hand, "What shall we do to be saved?" Pray, brethren, pray for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Webster, Mass. F. H. Chamberlain.

A Rule for Talkers.—No one who wishes that conversation should be pleasant to his neighbors as well as himself, should speak more than two or three sentences at once. However much he may have to say, it will be all the more agreeably said for giving others the opportunity of assenting, illustrating, qualifying, or even contradicting. The ball needs to be returned by the opposite player to make a lively game.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 3, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DUBUQUE DISCUSSION.

Our discussion at Dubuque, Iowa, with Bro. J. S. Sweeney, has been one of special interest to the people in the city. It was held in the meeting-house of the Campbellites. Eld. Sweeney is one of their most able preachers, and has had much experience in debating. He is considered the most able debater in that denomination. He is pastor of a church in Chicago. He is a man of fine talents, and a good speaker. He opened the debate by taking the affirmative of the following proposition:—"There is in man a conscious entity, sometimes called a spirit, that remains conscious after his death." No effort was spared to sustain his points; but unfortunately for him, the Bible was all against his position. We think he did as well as any one could for the popular side. We had very crowded houses and intelligent audiences. The discussion was a pleasant one; and we think all enjoyed it. Bro. Sweeney presented the usual Scriptures which are thought to prove that man has a conscious, immortal entity, distinct from the body, which is supposed to go to its reward, or punishment, before the judgment; but the Scripture introduced to prove it, when carefully examined, was found to be on the other side; proving that "the breath of life" is the only spirit that leaves man at death.

It seems strange to us that any one who carefully reads the Bible, should come to the conclusion that a part of man remains alive, when the man is dead and buried, waiting for the resurrection before he can live again. Such a view is contrary to reason, common sense, philosophy, facts, and Bible. The time has come when those who hold the doctrine that man is naturally immortal are in great danger of getting swamped in Spiritualism.

We have rarely seen a more intelligent and select audience than the one in attendance at the discussion. Great interest was manifested to hear. The house would be full a half an hour before the time for the discussion to begin. We found at the close of the discussion that we had gained much sympathy, even from those who belonged to the same church with Bro. Sweeney. We learned that one of the prominent men of the city, who was not a professor of religion, sat up till near midnight to search the Scriptures to see if what he had heard in the debate was true. The people were very anxious to hear more. The last evening a motion was made to have the discussion repeated at some future time, because many could not get seats in the house, to which we cheerfully consented; but our opponent did not express any willingness to comply with the request, and the pastor of the church remarked before the audience that they did not wish to have any further discussion of the subject.

Our friends were delighted with the results of the discussion. The Lord gave special help, and the truth was welcomed by many honest souls, who are anxious to hear more. We left an open door in Dubuque. We were very glad that we had the discussion, and shall expect to hear good tidings in consequence of the effort. We trust the time will come before twelve months pass, when a special effort may be made for a revival of pure and undefiled religion in Dubuque.

CHICAGO.

The interest in the meetings at Chicago continues unabated. They are precious seasons. We returned there from Dubuque, Saturday, Jan. 23d, and found that the faithful labors of Bro. Ramsey had been blest, and new ones had given their hearts to the Lord, and were happy in his love. Several more started Saturday and Sabbath. Our love-feast Sabbath morning, Jan. 24th, was a most heavenly season. Bro. Ramsey baptized thirteen at noon, and there are others who are expected to soon follow their example. It was a joyful time at the baptism, and an affecting scene. One intelligent father, who has been converted during the meetings, and baptized, led forward his son for baptism, with eyes full of tears, and said, "A few months since I was spending my time in beer saloons, swearing and drinking, leading my noble boy to ruin; but now we are a happy family in the Lord, with family prayer, traveling to the promised land, rejoicing on the road."

There is great interest to hear, and our last meeting was crowded with attentive listeners. The prospect is very bright for Chicago. Many come from the different churches, and the common remark from them is about as follows: We came here prejudiced, and out of curiosity; but we must confess that we never attended such good meetings before. We feel at home here. We are delighted with the spirit of the meetings. Our hearts and hands are with you; and we bid you God-speed.

Sabbath, Jan. 24th, we had the pleasure of the society of Bro. Wm. Himes, Brn. Bywater and Mitson, who rendered good assistance in the meetings. In the evening, Bro. Potter was ordained to the work of the ministry. He is a true man, and we expect to hear of good fruits from his labors.

Monday morning, Jan. 25th, at 8 o'clock, we left for Dansville, N. Y., where we are now writing at Bro. Cogswell's. We had some very pleasant conversation on the cars, relative to the great truths in the Bible.

Last evening, Jan. 26th, we commenced our discussion here with Mr. E. V. Wilson, a noted Spiritualist. The Lord gave special help, and his children are rejoicing over the result. Mr. Wilson is a champion among the Spiritualists—a Goliath; but the smooth stones of truth are too much for error to encounter. When error and truth meet in combat, truth always has the advantage. Mr. Wilson took the ground that all men have a part of God in them, which is represented by "the breath of life; and that, consequently, they are immortal. We showed that all animals had the same "breath of life," and therefore they must all be immortal. And further, if his claim is true, that the "breath of life" is a part of God, the real man, then he is the one who commits all the deeds done in the world. This God becomes a thief, a drunkard, a liar, a libertine and murderer. Such is the God of the Spiritualists—only a MAN. Is this "ancient Christianity revived?"

"CALLED CHRISTIANS."

It will be remembered that when Jesus prayed for his disciples, he said: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that they may be one, even as we are one; . . . that the world may know that thou hast sent me." It will be seen from the prayer of Jesus that he is anxious to have his children all "one," that the world may know that the Father sent him. On this account, it is Satan's policy to cause all the divisions he can, so as to destroy the confidence of the world in Jesus and his religion. Then it follows that whatever tends to produce divisions among the children of the Lord, is not in harmony with the prayer of our Savior.

It is a sad fact that the professed church is now divided into hundreds of sectarian parties. We think no one, who looks at the matter from a christian stand-point, can fail to see that it is high time to make a real union movement, for the purpose of bringing all the children of the Lord into one church—the church of Christ—which shall be composed of all the christians in the world. The church in each town, village, and city, would be composed of all the christians in those places. It is very evident that all do not belong to the church of Christ, who are called Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Adventists, Episcopalians, etc.; but in all these denominations there are more or less of the true members of the church of Christ.

If we have a union of all the christians in any place, what shall we call that church? Supposing all the christians in the various denominations in any locality should come together, and unite as a church, by what name would the church be called? and what name should be given to each individual member? Suppose the Methodists should move that it be called the Methodist church, and each member be a Methodist; would either of the other denominations be ready to second the motion? or suppose the Adventists should move that it be called the Advent church, and each member an Adventist; would the christians in the other denominations second such a motion? We think not; and the same would be true of motions made in favor of any other of the sectarian names. Then what shall be done in such a case? We think if some one should move that it be called the church of Christ, and every member of the church a christian, that all would be ready to second the motion, unless some real sectarian should be present, who was afraid of losing his identity in the party to which he belonged.

Let us now look into the Scriptures, and see what we can find relative to the proper name for the followers of Christ. In Acts 2: 26, we read "The disciples were called christians first in Antioch." The words, "were called," are translated from the Greek word kreematisai, from kreematizo, which is defined as follows:—"to impart a divine warning or admonition, giving instructions or directions under the guidance of inspiration; and passive, to receive a divine admonition, be warned of God, be divinely instructed." Intransitive, to be called, named, be known by a particular appellation, i. e., imposed one one from his business or office (Acts 11: 26), whence, kreematismos, a response from God, a divine answer, communication, or oracle. Rom. 11: 4.—Greenfield.

We will now cite all the examples where the original word occurs, and mark their renderings in italics:—

"And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way."—Matt. 2: 12. "And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ."—Lk. 2: 26. "So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man."—Rom. 7: 3. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."—Heb. 11: 7. "But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal."—Rom. 11: 4. "But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee."—Matt. 2: 22. "And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by a holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee."—Acts 10: 22. "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."—Heb. 8: 5. "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."—Heb. 12: 25.

It will be seen that all the examples show that the word rendered "were called," in Acts 11: 26, indicates a "divine answer," or "communication," i. e., in Acts 11: 26, it signifies that they were divinely called CHRISTIANS. Is there any better name for the followers of Christ? Let us come back to primitive christianity in character, doctrine, and name.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The conference recently held at Paris, relative to the "Eastern Question," has been an event of much interest in the political world. Napoleon has had it under his thumb; and, no doubt, will be the chief gainer. Apparently but little has been accomplished; but they have set a ball rolling, which may not stop till serious results are accomplished. The "Eastern Question" is increasing in magnitude, and is intimately connected with the closing scenes of the present dispensation. All the great nations of Europe are more or less involved in its arrangement. It has become a burdensome stone. There is reason to believe that it will increase in magnitude till Jesus comes to set up his kingdom. The last features of prophetic history are now fulfilling. We cannot be far from the end. We may soon expect further tokens indicating the approach of the King of kings. Bright omens are coming, and we shall be very much disappointed if we do not see some of them before next January comes. Let all proclaim, The Lord is at hand. Let us all be ready to hail his glorious coming with joy. The pure in heart will be glad to see him, after his long absence. We can well sing,

"O hail, happy day!"

A VALUABLE BOOK.

Some time since we called attention to a valuable work, published by Dr. E. P. Miller, 15 Laight St., New York, entitled "Sexual Abuses," or the "Cause of Exhausted Vitality." This work should be in every family; especially where there are young people. Every young man in the country should have a copy. Parents, do not fail to provide this work for your children. The work contains information of vital importance to the youth. Aside from the Bible, there is no book we would sooner put into the hands of the young than this work of Dr. Miller's. It is a book for the times. Many could better afford to give a thousand dollars for the work, as a present to their children, than to leave them without the information it contains.

A REQUEST.

BRO. GRANT:—We, the undersigned committee of the camp-ground of the Iowa Christian Conference, would respectfully invite you to revisit our annual conference and campmeeting, to be held next June, 1869, at New Hartford, Butler Co., Iowa. The following are a few reasons why many wish you to visit them again: (1) Many of the brethren were disappointed in not seeing and hearing you last summer, in consequence of appointments which called you away so early in the meeting. (2) Those who heard you, wish to hear you again. (3) The community at large very much desire you to come. (4) We believe that it will be for the general good of the conference. Please correspond with the campmeeting committee, New Hartford, Iowa, or through Crisis and Voice.

THE ADVENT CORNER.

"This is the Advent corner," said Bro. T., of Ypsilanti, as he introduced me to a table in one corner of his room, where I found Advent papers, books, tracts, and pamphlets of various kinds, to which all who came inside his door were made welcome. I thought how much good such a table might do in the house store, office, and work-shop of many Adventists; provided it was continually spread with the truth, and all who should come in should be invited to sit down and eat.

A word to the wise is sufficient. There are plenty of tracts etc., and any one who can get three pieces of board and a few nails, can have a table. E. T. HIMES.

BRO. J. WENDELL writes from Pa.:—"Our meetings are progressing gloriously here in Pittsburgh. We have a large hall, and the congregation is on the increase. Last evening (Jan. 24th) they could not all get seats. Our meetings are advertised in the daily papers. Saturday a Mr. Vandermark gave notice in the Daily Dispatch that he would preach on the immortality of the soul on Sunday. I sent him an invitation to discuss the question with me. No answer yet. Pray for us."

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

REPORT OF THE MASS. A. C. CONFERENCE.

Springfield, Jan. 14. Met for business agreeably to call. President in the chair. Eld. C. Goodrich offered prayer. Brn. H. Munger and J. M. Currier were chosen a committee on membership. Brn. J. S. White, G. A. Streeter, and R. E. Ladd were elected a committee to arrange business and preaching during our session. The clerk read the minutes of previous meeting. The following members were reported: Brn. Boutell, J. S. White, A. M. Higgins, P. S. Butler, H. Pratt, I. B. Potter, H. Munger, R. E. Ladd, E. McCulloch, G. A. Streeter, C. Goodrich, E. Owen. Delegates: Springfield, J. K. Winter, J. M. Currier, J. C. Hancock. North Adams, E. Blanchard. Brimfield, Porter Smith. Westfield, E. Phelps, Jr., O. R. Reed. Boston, G. T. Adams. Chicopee Falls, Levi Allen. Brn. A. A. Phelps and Z. Ford were invited to a seat, and share in our deliberations. Voted, there be business meetings at 9 A. M., preaching at quarter past two, and half-past seven P. M. Business meetings open for the admission of members and delegates, and for reports from the same; also for any questions or business which may properly come before the meeting.

Bro. Streeter reported need of help in Goshen. Good accomplished in Hoosic, N. Y., also in North Dana. Bro. E. Blanchard spoke for North Adams. Much distraction from course pursued by Elder Ira Wyman; half their numbers fallen off; had a Sunday school in good condition; appealed to the conference for help. E. Phelps. Jr., reported Westfield church. Never stood in so good a place as now. Church numbered twenty-six members, organized on the Bible plan. Persons were seeking the Lord; some had found him recently. . . . J. K. Winter stated meetings were well attended in Springfield. No contentions or strife. Recently established a meeting at the South end of city; good had resulted. J. C. Hancock stated the Sunday school numbered one hundred and twenty-five; felt encouraged from recent efforts in "the regions beyond." Bro. Porter Smith reported interest rising in Brimfield. Much good resulted from Sr. Stoddard's labors among them.

Bro. C. Goodrich been much in Me., seen some turn at reproofs of God; devoted a portion of his time to labor among the really poor; felt the need of correct theory and right practice. Bro. J. S. White felt sensitive respecting the division and distraction among us. Was not conservative, did not feel like compromising God's truth; needed much wisdom in presenting it.—Adjourned.

Friday morning, nine A. M. Met as adjourned. Prayer by Eld. McCulloch. Bro. P. S. Butler had been mainly in Wilbraham, where a new church had been erected since September last, and a good state of things existed. Bro. E. McCulloch had been severely sick of fever. God raised him up; been mainly in Savoy church—a unit. At Plainfield Pond the pastor (Eld. R. Starks), had been much grieved from the course pursued by one who published and filled appointments conflicting with others, and unsolicited by the church; hoped the conference would recommend the Editorial Committee to withhold such persons' appointments from publication. C. Goodrich had known the man for fifteen years; his case was investigated by Elds. Pratt and Hemenway some years since, but their decision has been unheeded by him, and division resulted from his labors everywhere; his case demanded some notice from this body; to the effect his appointments be suspended publication. Remarks were made by G. A. Streeter and others, and the following Resolution passed:

In consequence of the course pursued by Eld. Wm. Blanchard, we ask the Editor of the World's Crisis to refrain from publishing his appointments in that paper. Also the following: Whereas, Those have come among us as preachers without producing any recommendations as to character and moral standing from persons where they are well known, and have developed a course of action injurious to their profession and disgraceful to the church; and, whereas, some have come among us who have been preachers in another denomination, or who have been associated with another branch of the Advent body, and could not, or did not, bring with them any recommendations as worthy members of their former connection, therefore we recommend to the Advent churches that they receive such preachers and such only as come to them recommended by the church or community where they are well known as men of principle and moral honesty.

The Ministerial Committee were called upon to report, but were not ready. Bro. H. Pratt reported a continual revival in Rochester; the labor was on the church; letters and tracts sent from thence to the old country had been known to produce cheering results; the prospect was exceedingly encouraging. Bro. Munger said the cause was going well in new places; in old ones, was too much and too long preaching. Bro. G. T. Adams. No special revival interest at Lowell street, Boston.

Sr. A. E. Smith reported a constant revival interest at the Mission in New York. Sunday school increasing; outside the Lord had given her souls for her hire; had been blessed financially; always abounded spiritually when lacking temporally. Adjourned.

Four P. M. Met in extra session as adjourned. Elder E. McCulloch reported for the Ministerial Committee on the case of Eld. I. Wyman. Several persons made remarks. Brn. White and Higgins were chosen a committee to present resolutions touching his case. Adjourned.

Saturday morning, nine A. M. Met as adjourned. Prayer by P. S. Butler. The following was unanimously passed: Resolved, this conference heartily approve the recommendation of the conference recently held in Buchanan, Mich., in choosing a committee to call a general conference of Advent christians in the States, Territories, and Provinces of the country to meet in convention at some place to be decided upon. Resolved, we recommend it be held in Rochester, N. Y.

The committee chosen for the purpose, reported the following, which was adopted: Whereas, evidence having been presented before this conference satisfactorily sustaining certain charges preferred against Elder Ira Wyman, involving his christian and moral character, we do, therefore, withdraw from him the hand of fellowship as a christian minister. We also request the editors of the World's Crisis and Voice of the West to publish the same in their respective papers.

Bro. R. E. Ladd presented the following, which was adopted: Whereas, a resolution was adopted at the Chelsea conference touching the non-reliving of the wicked, isolating that from all other doctrines; and whereas the preaching of any doctrines to the distraction and division of the church of God is contrary to the spirit of the gospel and injurious to the cause of Christ, therefore, . .

Resolved, that we as a conference disapprove of such preaching, and recommend to our preaching brethren that while each is at liberty to exercise his right of private judgment on all Bible subjects, and to maintain his independence on all questions wherein there is difference of opinion, yet always to follow "those things which make for peace, and things whereby one may edify another."

The usual vote of thanks was tendered the church, and the local papers, and the usual instructions given the clerk respecting copies for publication of these minutes both in the World's Crisis and Voice of the West. Adjourned to the call of the Clerk.

E. OWEN, Clerk.

REPORT
Of the Sixth Maine Ministerial Conf.

According to appointment, the Sixth Maine Second Advent Ministerial Conference met at Richmond (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday eve., Jan. 12th, 1869. Preaching by Bro. Sevey, at quarter past seven P. M. Wednesday morning, nine o'clock. The President not being present, the meeting was called to order by the V. P., and the following choice of officers was made: C. Goud, President; R. R. York, Vice President and Treasurer; L. F. Cole, Clerk. Executive Committee: I. C. Wellcome, R. R. York, H. B. Sevey. Prayer was offered. The Constitution was called for and read. Bro. S. F. Morse was accepted as a member of the conference. Brn. Wellcome, York and Carr, appointed a committee on business, reported to spend the forenoon in examining some Bible question. Bro. York introduced the question of church order, which was examined.

Some discussion was introduced by Bro. A. H. Walker, who was opposed to church organization, when the Clerk read the adopted report of the committee, chosen to investigate the matter of church order as taught in the New Testament, at the First Ministerial Conference; which committee consisted of Brn. I. Damman, R. R. York, and J. R. Hall. The report is as follows:—

"A church is a company of believers in Christ, united in the order of the gospel. The order of the gospel we understand to be as follows:—The officers of the church are Bishops or Elders, and Deacons. Bishops or Elders are those called of God to preach the gospel, set apart by the laying on of hands, and are to feed the flock of God, and take the general oversight thereof. The qualifications necessary for such are described in 1 Tim. 3: 1–7, Tit. 1: 5–9, and other passages. Deacons are those in the church who are set apart by the laying on of hands, for the work of attending to the temporal interests of the church. Compare Acts 6: 1–6, Phil. 1: 1, and 1 Tim. 3: 8, 10, 12. Church discipline should be attended to according to the rule laid down by the Savior in Matt. 18: 15–17, and Luke 17: 3, 4; also by the apostle in 1 Cor. 5: 2, and 2 Thess. 3: 6; with other scriptures."

Adjourned till afternoon. P. M. Opened by prayer as usual. The order of business was taken up, and the reports of the preaching brethren present were listened to. Bro. J. R. Hall from the Provinces reported good success in his field of labor in connection with Brn. Tozier and Corliss. One church organized through their instrumentality at Milltown of some sixty members. Bro. H. S. Mitchell reported two churches organized. Bro. H. D. Reed one church do. Bro. Peter Libby reported the church at Bonny Eagle. Bro. S. K. Partridge reported a church organized at Weeks' Mills, China, by Bro. A. Damn. The other brethren brought good and encouraging reports of last year's labors, showing that the cause is in a healthy and growing condition.

Next in order was the report of the Tract Agent, and he not being present, the following was submitted and accepted:

TRACT REPORT.

Deficit in 1867, $20.27. Paid for tracts in 1868, $30.02. Tracts scattered by I. C. Wellcome, $21.45. Tracts bought by J. A. Libby, $3.20. Total, $74.94. Tracts received from I. C. Wellcome, $10.00; from S. Hall, $10.00. Cash from Eld. T. Smith, $1.00. Collected by J. A. Libby, $22.95. Total, $43.95. Balanced by cash received from Mission Fund, $30.99. In behalf of the committee. Adjourned.

Thursday, nine A. M., opened by singing and prayer. Bro. M. B. Patterson received as a member of the conference. The question of uniting the Maine State Conference with the Ministerial Conference was taken up, and the proposition made by the State Conference at its last session to the Ministerial Conference was accepted after considerable discussion. The Report of the Maine Mission Tent was next submitted, and finally accepted.

MAINE MISSION TENT REPORT.

Paid deficit for 1867, $119.51. Expense incurred while under the charge of J. A. Libby, $30.69. D. W. Griffin's wages, $102.66. Expense under the charge of I. C. Wellcome, $36.20. D. W. Griffin's wages, $65.43. Paid ministering brethren for labor, $123.25. Chairman's expenses, stationery, etc., $1.97. Total, $479.71. Received on deficit for 1867, $41.00. Pledges unpaid, $78.00. Bro. J. A. Libby collected, $91.61. Bro. I. C. Wellcome collected, $170.31. Received by Treasurer, $4.00. Received of Mission Fund, $38.61. Received of the mob at Mt. Vernon, who attempted to destroy the tent, $100.00. Total, $523.53. Balance in the treasury, $43.82.

Voted, That a tent committee of seven be appointed. The following were appointed:—I. C. Wellcome, F. A. Baker, S. K. Partridge, E. M. Haggett, Moses Young, W. H. Mitchell, H. D. Reed. Voted, That Bro. R. R. York be Tract Agent, to receive subscriptions and disburse tracts, according to his judgment. Voted, That we make an effort to raise $500 or more the coming year for mission purposes in Maine. The following disbursing committee were appointed: Brn. I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, H. D. Reed. The disbursing committee for 1868 appropriated the mission funds, as appears in the reports, to meet the deficit of tract and tent expenditures.

Voted, That the Chairman appoint a committee on Ordination. S. K. Partridge, I. C. Wellcome and E. M. Haggett were appointed. Voted, That the Chairman and Clerk appoint the place for the next meeting. Voted, That our Constitution be so amended as to incorporate under Art. 6 so much of the Constitution of the Conference merged into this as embraces the provisions of a delegation from the churches and societies, viz:—"also of delegates duly chosen, from all churches and societies within the State, which are in harmony with this Conference, and wish a voice in its action, viz., one delegate for each church or society, and one additional for every ten members." Evening meeting. Preaching by Bro. J. R. Hall, which was followed by the ordination of Bro. L. F. Cole. Prayer by Bro. J. R. Hall. Charge by Bro. Wellcome. Right hand of fellowship by Bro. H. D. Reed.

Friday, nine A. M. Opened by prayer. Bro. W. H. Mitchell reported by letter. Eld. J. C. Wheeler having embraced the theory that the wicked dead will not be raised, in reply to the corresponding committee, requested his name dropped from the Conference records, which request was complied with.

Several brethren raised a discussion of church order, advocating that the churches were in a better condition without organization; they deplored the results of organizing. Bro. I. Damman was much tried by the practice of some in writing covenants and in giving members the right hand of fellowship. He was grieved to hear frequent reports that brethren had organized churches. This discussion consumed much time which would otherwise have been occupied in a Bible class.

Also some of the brethren were opposed to the action of the conference in receiving the one hundred dollars of the mob, and advocated that the committee should not have accepted the money which the mob wished to pay, but have left them to meet the consequences of the law, from whoever might enforce it. The conference argued that it was in their judgment an act of mercy in settling with them, and receiving a guarantee for future good behavior as security for the public safety, thus satisfying them, and removing the probability of others enforcing the law, with its heavy penalties. But these brethren felt that they were not in harmony with the views of the conference on this subject, and being opposed to church organization, wished to withdraw their connection with the conference. It was accordingly voted that, at their request, the names of Brn. H. B. Sevey, I. Damman, A. H. Walker, and J. R. Hall, be dropped from the records.

Resolved, That while time has continued beyond what many of us expected, yet we, as a conference, are earnestly looking for and expecting in full confidence the immediate return of our glorious Redeemer, and mean by God's grace to be found working and waiting until Jesus comes to gather all his people.

Voted, To instruct the tent committee to inquire as to the expediency of procuring a second tent, and to act on the same as may seem duty. Voted, That the report of this conference be sent to the "Crisis" and "Voice of the West" for publication.

Ordained preachers present:—S. K. Partridge, I. Damman, H. B. Sevey, H. D. Reed, C. Goud, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, H. S. Mitchell, A. H. Walker, E. M. Haggett, J. R. Hall, J. Carr, T. Rines, M. B. Patterson, L. F. Cole, Peter Libby. Unordained: S. F. Morse.

STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—We have a number of inquirers, who wish to know why we do not write more for the Crisis?—they seem to see so little concerning us. I thought it was quite the reverse; and feared the Editor of the Crisis would think we demanded a large share of space and service. But if he is willing to indulge them, it shall be our greatest pleasure to publish our whereabouts very often, and tell something of the good work done by this Mission.

One little item that we would like to publish, is to say to some of our correspondents that the physician at the "Star of Hope" is not a gentleman, as some who have written us certainly suppose. For instance, a letter recently sent to our superintendent reads thus: "We are glad that a kind-hearted gentleman has been sentyou, to take charge of the medical department," etc.

Well, it so happens that Sr. Smith has all her offices filled by her own sex; and this is one peculiarity of our Mission. We are all opposed to what is usually termed "Woman's Rights." We have no desire to go to the polls; do not think we would have much time to vote; but we all heartily believe that woman is called to mission work; and to this end she must preach; practice medicine; put up with all kinds of insult and inconvenience; plane her own boards; pull her own boxes and barrels through the house; in fact, have a perfect right to do all this, and much more, for the sake of being competent missionaries.

We find, too, a right to climb up broken stairways, and down into dark, dirty basements, or cellars, where sometimes the case would entirely forbid the entrance of a gentleman. We truly realize that we live in the days that Joel wrote of, when the Spirit should be poured out on our sex; and we have a chance at this Mission to find out that it fits them for any and every thing.

The multitudes that need our attention are still as great as ever, and their wants are legion. They continually apply at the dispensary with all sorts of complaints, many of which are entirely cured by the present of a coat or dress, and more frequently by filling a basket with potatoes or bread.

We find it very nice business to act as physician to this people, and feel that we all need to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. We feel to stand between these people and the donors to the mission, and must act faithfully as their stewards; therefore we seldom give more than a present panacea, till the person is visited and matters investigated.

In the meanwhile there are the real sick, and we are better prepared to meet their wants now, owing to a most blessed visit from Sister Holden. We had seen barrels and boxes from the Worcester church, and had remarked that they must be a most noble, generous people, whom we would like to see. We were shortly gratified in this desire, at least we felt partly so, as we saw one of the number (Sr. Holden, who perhaps is a type of the rest), come all the way to the mission, bearing us some most precious burthens. She came with purse and scrip; a box of medicines costing some twenty-five dollars (partly her own contribution, part from the church). But knowing we were not all sick, she had a huge basket well filled with wholesome provisions, cooked by her own hands. Among this assortment I must not forget one of the largest turkeys we ever saw. Just think how we missionaries looked, as we sat, day after day, eating our Christmas dinners; and beside eating it ourselves, we had the pleasure of carrying a dinner to two of our sick ones; one in an old-fashioned garret, where the rafters touched the floor on which we stood; a place where a fowl does not often find its way, and just such as very few think is in this great city.

I guess this good sister studies God's word, and I think she has found that place in Matt. which tells of those that fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the sick, etc.; and she acted as though she desired the Master to direct his conversation to her, when he shall shortly come and say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." May the Lord bless her, and all who do likewise. May his Holy Spirit continually comfort and direct them as a church, and keep them in peace till he comes.

We thought Sr. H. meant to tarry awhile with us. She went heartily to work for the Lord, and the people in the various abodes of misery she visited; in all our meetings; in our family; at our altar of prayer; everywhere, all the time; and just as we were well accustomed to seeing her in the family, lo! she was gone again. I know something more of the good work this church has done for us, but I leave that now, and tell you more anon.

Sister Smith is away again; yet we are doing all we can at home, and the Master is with us, and wonderfully blesses all our efforts. We find no better meetings anywhere than at the "Star of Hope."

Our Sabbath School is not so large as some others; but for sweet music and good attention it certainly cannot be surpassed. About half of the scholars are adults, and some of them old pilgrims, wearing glasses. You who love the Sabbath School, do not forget that these need clothing; and if they cannot keep up a tolerably good appearance, they will not venture out in Sunday society. And while we teach them, we want to warm and make them comfortable. If any of the benevolent feel like helping in this direction, I wish they might enclose a mite of the Lord's money, and in the note specify that it is "to buy coal." We burn half a ton per week, and want to give some away. E. S. MELLEN.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

BRO. GRANT:—The following are the receipts from the 1st to the 25th of Jan., among which are many prayers, good wishes, and "God bless yous," which cannot be computed; yet they figure largely in our memory, to cheer us amid the toils, hardships and privations known only to missionary laborers. Just here we would say to the friends of the mission, who send us money for the rent, if they could send it before the 25th of the month, it would oblige us.

Among temporal receipts, we gladly acknowledge ourselves recipients of many rich spiritual blessings. The hundred fold, sixty-fold, and thirty-fold are already ours. Thanks to our heavenly Father. We are about to lay a new siege upon the ranks of the enemy, by an extra effort. There is much to be done. Souls are at the altar at nearly every meeting. And men and women must be saved, if it takes us from our beds later at night. And even now we seldom lay ourselves down till eleven and twelve o'clock at night.

Daily we not only ask the Father to take care of "our mission," and its laborers, but also crave heaven's choicest blessings upon its contributors and supporters.

A friend of the Mission, Holden, Mass., $1.00; O. Nash, Bridgeport, Ct., $1.00; a friend, Woodhull, $2.00; E. T. Fellows, Northfield, Minn., $10.00; E. J., Winsted, Ct., 1.00; B. L. Basset, Bridgeport, Ct., $1.00; also a barrel of provision and clothing, same place; Bro. G., four barrels; G. W. Smith, Waterbury, Ct., $1.00; Frances Huxford, W. Hartland, $1.00; Wesson Mosher, Gloversville, N. Y., $5.00; Lizzie Potter, Abington, Ct., $5.00; also a barrel of clothing from same place; Mrs. G. P. Persons, Hockanum, Ct., $2.00; Mary Whitney, Mass., $1.00; Mrs. Thos. Brown, Chicopee, Mass., post office order, $5.00; S. B. W. Mulligen, Colebrook, N. H., $5.00; John F. Rathgeber, Pa., $1.00; D. Newton, West Boylston, Mass., $2.00; Waterbury, Conn. (no name), $1.00; "from a friend," Natick, Mass. (by A. P. Moore), $5.00. Box of provisions from the friends in Clinton, Mass. One barrel each from Sr. Brooks, and Sr. Humphries, Portland, Me.; from friends in Abington, Conn.; from friends in Exeter, N. H.; from Portland (no name); and from Bro. Woodbury, Lewiston, Me.

ROCHESTER.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Rochester, N. Y.:—My heart flows out in gratiude to God when I think what he has done and is still doing for you. For the last ten years I have felt much for the wounded and bleeding cause of my blessed Savior, in that city. For the last four years my earnest prayer to God has been, O Lord, have mercy on Rochester! The Lord in his own good time has moved away the dark cloud that has been hanging over that city. What a wound was made in the cause in days. The glory of the Lord that once stood over that city departed, but not without a grievous cause. But, praise God, his mercy endureth forever.

Now, my dear brethren, the Lord has been so kind to you in raising up such a goodly number to see the truth, and to profess it before the world, let me entreat you to watch the enemy. If you should forget for a moment where your strength lieth, and should begin to trust in numbers, how very soon the glory of the Lord would depart from you. Let every member resolve for himself or herself, as for me I will stand in the front ranks, trusting in God for help, and the mighty work of the Lord will go onward. What a position you occupy. God's truth, the standard that has been covered up so long by the traditions of men, has now been raised up, and you stand there in the sight of God and angels. All heaven is interested in the matter. I trust you all feel like grasping the standard a little firmer, like advancing a little nearer the enemy, following the great Captain in every command. The enemy outside has almost lost his power. Now, dear brethren, the only way to keep him from getting inside your lines is, for every one to pray to God to help. Charity suffereth long and is kind; beareth all things; endureth all things; thinketh no evil.

O Lord! baptize us all anew with that love which cometh down from above, so that we may all love one another, that the world may know thou hast sent Jesus into the world to save sinners. "Let brotherly love continue." D. Cogswell.

Correspondence.

Brethren and Sisters:—I cannot express to you how much my heart is cheered and made glad by reading your warm, loving letters in our beloved Crisis; and although a stranger to most of you, I feel that I am not a stranger to that love and blessed hope of which you write. I also feel acquainted with your griefs and manifold trials, which you must endure while still sojourning on this wicked, sin-cursed earth; and I hope and pray that when our blessed King shall come, we all shall be so well acquainted with him we shall hear him say, "Come, ye blessed."

How many trials our faith has had since some of us, twenty-four or more years ago believed our Lord would speedily return and take his wating Bride home! It seems to me truly wonderful—the way the Lord has led us on, step by step, from one period of time to another just in the future, loving and longing for his appearing. Else how many of us had fainted by the way. Is not the trial of our faith more precious than the gold that perisheth? May the Lord help us to endure to the end, is the prayer of your sister,

From Bro. R. Miles.

Bro. Grant:—I have been traveling in Missouri. I found some scattered pilgrims, one at Cameron, Bro. Moses Chandler's son. He has preached some, but moved to Missouri two years ago. He says he must go to preaching again. He went and got the Disciple house. The minister gave way for me to preach on his appointment. After I got through, he arose and told the audience they had heard the truth; invited me home with him and made me welcome. Tuesday night I preached again, and he witnessed to the truth.

There is a good field here in Missouri for preaching the gospel of the kingdom. If any of the preaching brethren should go that way on the Hannibal and St. Joseph R. R., call at Cameron, on Elder ——,* or on Dr. Chandler. At St. Joseph, call on A. Miles. There is not half the prejudice against us as a people west there is east. May the Lord bless his truth everywhere, and raise up disciples to Christ. R. Miles.

Bro. Grant:—I wish through the Crisis to acknowledge my most heartfelt and sincere thanks to the brethren at River Point, and vicinity, for their pecuniary aid during the late sickness of myself and family. May the Lord bless you, dear brethren, and give you an abundant entrance into his kingdom, is the prayer of your afflicted brother,

Bro. P. A. Smith writes:—"I returned yesterday from holding a meeting at Oak Grove. Had a first rate time. Baptized four more, and still they 'come.' The interest is spreading. Thank the Lord."

Bro. M. R. Phetteplace writes from Waterford, Mass.:—"The Lord has revived his work here. Fourteen have arisen for prayers, and we have twelve working converts. The work is still onward. Pray for us."

Obituaries.

Cole. Fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 17th, at Lake Village, N. H., Elder Timothy Cole, aged sixty-two years and four months.

The latter part of his life, he was at intermediate periods a great sufferer, his diseases being of a complicated and painful nature, terminating in softening of the brain.

By invitation of his eldest daughter, Mrs. S. Sanborn, he went from his home in Haverhill, Mass., to the above place Dec. 1st. On being seated, after they had helped him into the house, he exclaimed, "I have come up here to die with you, and I want you to bury me by the side of my dear mother."

His companion of forty long years was constantly by his side, but affection and tender sympathy could not stay the insatiable power of death.

On Wednesday, Jan. 20th, at two o'clock, he was borne to the Free Baptist meeting-house, where a large congregation had assembled. Several ministers were present and assisted in the services. Remarks were made by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Few ministers have been the honored instrument in the hands of God of the conversion of more souls than the subject of this brief notice. Timothy Cole was the first fruit of a reformation in Gardiner, Me. He leaves a wife, two daughters, one son, two brothers and three sisters to mourn his loss. Timothy sleeps now beside his "dear mother." Sweet be their rest until they awake in the image of Him who is the resurrection and the life. S. S. Brewer.

Sampson. Died in North Hatley, P. Q., Jan. 1st, 1869, Sister Betsey P. Sampson, of lingering consumption, aged thirty-five years.

Sr. Sampson experienced religion some fifteen years ago under the labors of Elder Thurber, and since has shown to the world that she has been with Jesus and learned of him. We truly feel her loss, for none knew her but to love her. But our loss is her gain, for she fell asleep in Jesus, and with a bright hope that when our Master comes to wake the sleeping dead, and to change the righteous living, she should come forth blooming with life and immortality to die no more forever, and believing that she had only a short time to rest; that soon Jesus was coming to reward his faithful children. She leaves two brothers, and one sister, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. By the request of the deceased a discourse was delivered by the writer from Ps. 17: 15.

John Chapman.

Smith. Died at Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 21st, Bro. Charles H. Smith, son of Bro. Eben H. Smith, aged nineteen years and ten months.

Bro. Charles was converted and baptized and united with the church at Portsmouth some two years since, and though deprived of the privilege of meeting with the people of God a great portion of the time, he has lived a christian. He met death with calmness and christian resignation. He sleeps in Jesus, and awaits the coming of the Life-giver to raise him to a glorious immortality.

By request of the deceased, the funeral sermon was preached by the writer, from Job. 14: 14.

Joseph W. White.

Twombly. Died, Jan. 8th, at the residence of Bro. J. M. Burnham, in Farmington, N. H., Mrs. Polly Twombly, wife of John B. Twombly (late of Laconia, N. H.), aged seventy-two years.

Sister Burnham, only daughter of the deceased, feels a degree of comfort at having had the privilege of ministering to the wants of her aged mother during her illness, and the consolation of a good hope that she has fallen asleep in Jesus. Bro. S. S. Mooney spoke words of comfort to the friends on the occasion of the funeral, from Isa. 25: 7-9.

Geo. W. Burnham.

Hinkley. Died in West Sutton, Mass., Dec. 10th, 1868, Mrs. Nancy C. Hinkley, widow of the late Noah Hinkley, formerly of Portland, Me., aged seventy-seven years.

She was the last of the friends and relatives with whom I was associated in my youth. We have hope in her death, for her life was consistent with her profession. Her trials were peculiarly severe, but she bore them with patience and resignation.

Chamberlin. Died in Bolton, P. Q., Dec. 12th, 1868, Deforest A. Chamberlin, son of Bro. Bethuel and Sr. Frances Chamberlin, aged fifteen years.

While performing the labors of the day in drawing copper, the copper caved in and instantly killed him. With him perished the hopes of fond parents. Deforest was beloved by all his companions, and he had proved himself an upright youth. A discourse was delivered by the writer from St. John 7: 6. John Chapman.

Cargill. Died in Plainville, Mass., Jan. 12th, 1869, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Rev. G. B. Cargill, aged thirty-eight years and eleven and a half months.

He died as he lived, with the Christian armor on. While engaged in his business, he worked for the Savior whenever an opportunity presented itself. We miss him, oh how sadly! but he rests from his labors, and we look forward with hope to the resurrection morning. C. L. Cargill.

Fuller. Died in Hebronville, Nov. 2d, 1868, after a painful illness, our mother in Israel, who rejoiced in the hope of eternal life, Mrs. Hannah Fuller, in the seventy-sixth year of her age.

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors."

Spear. Died in Greenfield, of diphtheria, Jan. 20th, 1869, Cora E. Spear, daughter of Howard and Lucy Spear, and granddaughter of D. W. S. and E. M. Spear, aged four years, two months.

She sleeps, and waits the resurrection morn.

D. W. Spear.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Constantinople, Jan. 26. The Sublime Porte, in a circular, denies the reports that have been extensively circulated, to the effect that Turkey is heavily arming. The Sultan confidently expects peace as the result of the Paris conference.

Madrid, Jan. 26. Governor Burgos was assassinated yesterday, when about to take an inventory of the goods in the Cathedral in this city. The excitement is intense. The people generally sustain the Government. Many arrests have been made.

Jan. 27. The Government has laid a claim to all the libraries, archives and works of art possessed by the churches, as the property of the State. It was while carrying out the orders of the Government that Gen. Burgos was assassinated. The event causes intense exitement.

Violent demonstrations have been made in this city against the Papal Nuncio, and the Government has withdrawn its official recognition of his diplomatic character.

The Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral of Burgos have been arrested and imprisoned.

London, Jan. 27. The Greek Government will probably give in its adhesion to the conclusions of the conference of Paris, but it is feared that its signature will be accompanied by reservations which can only tend to protract the difficulty with Turkey.

Official dispatches have been received by the War Office from New Zealand. They announce that a battle had taken place between the British troops and the Maori rebels at Poverty Bay, and that the latter were defeated with great loss in killed, wounded and prisoners. The victory had restored tranquility in that quarter.

Paris, Jan. 27. Gen. Dix, the United States Minister, at a public banquet this evening, made a speech, in which he declared that the cause of the Greeks was identical with the cause of liberty throughout the world, and he assured the people of Greece that they had the sympathy of America.

Dublin, Jan. 7. A meeting of influential citizens was held here last night, at which resolutions were adopted urging the Government to pardon the Fenian convicts.

Madrid, Jan. 29. The Provisional Government yesterday issued an address to the nation tending to restore calmness to the public mind. They decline to take active steps against reaction, but declare they are closely watching it, and, if necessary, will combat it. All religious questions they leave to be finally disposed of by the Cortes, which is soon to assemble. The abolitionists have presented a petition to the government, asking them to issue a decree setting free all children born in slavery since September, 1868. The petition was referred to the Cortes. The Diplomatic Corps have addressed to the Government a protest against the treatment of the Papal Nuncio. It is said that all the members of the Cabinet are now in favor of Duke Montpensier for King of Spain. The city of Madrid is quiet, but volunteers are kept under arms.

Archbishop Burgos has been arrested, and is now in custody of the military.

A proclamation has been issued granting a general amnesty to the insurgents of Porto Rico.

London, Jan. 29. United States Minister Tuckerman, in a speech delivered at a public dinner in Athens, yesterday, expressed the kindest feelings of the American nation for Greece, and pledged the cordial sympathy of his Government for the Greeks in their trouble with the Turks.

Athens, Jan. 29. It is reported that Bulgaris, the Prime Minister, has resigned. The action of the King of Greece upon the terms submitted by the recent Conference is considered as uncertain. Nothing definite as to his intentions relative to the matter is as yet known.

London, Jan. 29. Details of news from Rio Janeiro show that the success of the allied powers in Paraguay has been most complete. All the Paraguayan forts are in their hands. They have captured the artillery and baggage of Lopes's army, and 2000 prisoners. The dictator Lopes was a fugitive in the forest, and was surrounded by the allied troops.

Paris, Jan. 31. The Russian Government, through its Minister at Athens, urges Greece to accede to the propositions of the Conference at Paris.

It is rumored here to-day that the Greek Government has yielded and will sign the protocol.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Feb. 1. A letter from Porter C. Bliss, dated on board the flag ship Guerriere, off Montevideo, Dec. 18, says: "After three months of imprisonment in Paraguay, I have been rescued from the grasp of Lopez by the United States squadron under Admiral Davis, and along with my companion, Mr. Masterman, embarked on board the American gunboat Wasp on the 10th inst., and arrived here yesterday.

Mail advices from Hayti contain the following: A rumor to the effect that Salnave had made or was about to make a treaty with the United States, for the cession of the "Mole St. Nicholas," had been set afloat, and the revolutionary party was about to invoke the intervention of England and France against the proposed transfer.

Havana, Jan. 28, via Key West, Jan. 27. A reign of terror has commenced in this city, caused by the breaking out of open hostilities between the Cuban and Spanish factions, whose hatred for each other cannot be described. There is very little security outside the city walls. The Cubans from their house-tops fire upon volunteers and soldiers passing through the streets. The military enter houses, from which shots are fired, and massacre the inmates.

Jan. 26. The U. S. Consul here yesterday formally demanded of Gen. Dulce the body of Samuel Cohner, the American photographer, who was killed by some armed men belonging to the volunteer force. He also wished to be informed whether the Government was able to protect American citizens, and told the General that if he was not, the United States would be compelled to protect them.

Gen. Dulce answered politely, regretting the recent bloodshed and expressing a hope that no further trouble would occur. He also requested the Consul to send a list of the Americans to the government authorities. The body of Mr. Cohner was immediately delivered. The night passed quietly.

Jan. 27. The Diario report on the authority of official dispatches that Palma, Saremed, Cobre, and other towns, are full of fugitive insurgents and their families, and that 3000 of them have presented themselves to the authorities and received amnesty.

At Baracoa several chiefs gave themselves up and were pardoned. Other accounts from the interior received through Spanish channels represent that the insurgents are surrendering at many points to receive the benefits of Gen. Dulce's proclamation, but in the vicinity of Santiago the rebels are very active. They carry off the slaves and harass the troops. It is reported that they have destroyed by fire half a dozen large plantations near the town.

Passing Events.

The Gospel Banner publishes a letter from Rev. S. H. McCollester, who is traveling in the East, and has visited the remains of the Maine colony at Jaffa. About twenty-five now remain, and they appear to be doing well, though they have endured great hardships. Adams, their leader, has left the country, much to their joy.

☞ A celebrated cliff in Denmark, the "Queen's Seat," has just fallen bodily into the Baltic from a shock of earthquake. The rock, about four hundred feet high, was an object of great interest to tourists, from the magnificent view to be had from it.

☞ A learned Burman who attacked the corruptions of Bhuddism, was lately crucified at Mandalas, the capital of Burmah, and some of his followers imprisoned.

☞ There is a great revival in progress in the Baptist church at Colchester, Conn. Meetings are held every night, and hundreds of persons are unable to find room in the church.

☞ Elder Henry Plummer, for more than forty years a preacher in the Christian denomination, dropped dead in the door-way of his residence at Haverhill, Wednesday morning.

☞ Lent begins this year on Ash Wednesday, Feb. 10th. Good Friday comes March 26th, and Easter Sunday, March 28th, which is somewhat earlier than usual.

☞ A new needle gun is reported in Prussia, and a cannon, which can fire two hundred shots per minute, in Russia.

Married.

Dec. 25th, at the residence of the bride's father, Bro. Jeremiah Chandler, Andrew I. Cole, of East Concord, and Sarah H. Chandler, of Concord, N. H.

Notices.

Conference at Dover, Me.

There will be a conference held in Dover, Me., at Brans' Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. In behalf of the Eastern Maine Conference the brethren here are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. It is a new place for such a meeting. Call on Brn. Bray and Royal. Arrangements will be made to care for visitors. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend, and lend all that aid the gospel requires as far as possible. Bro. Robert Hall, from N. B., is expected to be in attendance with us. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of men, and God shall have the glory. In behalf of the church,

Israel Damman.

That Second Mission Tent.

We are now free from debt as a conference, when the pledges for tents and missions are all collected. "The Maine Ministerial Conference," at its late session, voted that the tent committee consult with those interested, and then determine whether to provide a second tent for Maine for the coming season. $100 is pledged, $40 more in the treasury. The brethren East pledged for this object last year $158 at once. Will they do it now? Will all interested in tent missions, within the State, write to me at once, giving their minds for or against it? In behalf of the Committee,

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

A protracted meeting will be held in the new meeting-house, at Freedom, N. H., commencing Sunday, Jan. 31st, and onward day and evening, as may seem duty. Day meetings will commence for the present at 10½ o'clock; evening at 6¼. Dear friends of Jesus, come and labor with us.

For the Brn., L. C. & M. McKinstry.

N. B. Friends will address us at Porter, Me.

* This notice was mislaid last week.—Ed.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at the Advent Hall, Meredith, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. Daniel Churchill, John Parsons, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and work for the Lord.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at Sawyer's Mills, in Starks, Me., Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, to labor for the salvation of the perishing. I. C. Wellcome.

E. M. Haggett.

Special Notice.

As considerable money sent to the post office in Buffalo has lately been missed, and I have lost in one case for certainty, and have good reason to believe that more has failed to reach me, I wish brethren who may have sent me any since Oct. 15th, 1868, and not received a reply, would write me at once, so that means may be taken to detect the thief. I always answer letters sent me with money in them. State the date when sent, as near as possible. J. Blain.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting or conference at West Deerfield, N. H., commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 16th, at 7 o'clock, and continue through the week, and over Sunday. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity and adjoining towns are requested to come and labor for the salvation of the perishing. Faithful and able servants of God are expected to be present to preach the word. For the brethren,

Enoch Morrill.

Washington, Ct.

A series of meetings will commence at Washington, Ct., Wednesday evening, Feb. 10th, and continue over the Sabbath. As this is a new field, we hope the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will come in and lend us a helping hand.

Alex. Elliot.
S. H. Glover.
C. H. Sweet.

Pine Swamp, Ct.

A protracted meeting will commence (D. V.), at Pine Swamp, Ct., Tuesday evening, Feb. 23d, and continue over the Sabbath. God was with us in the meeting which we held there in December, and we believe he will be in this. Come and enjoy the season with us.

Notice.

A protracted meeting is to commence at the Roberts' school-house, in Strafford, N. H., Thursday evening, Feb. 4th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. J. G. Smith.

John Parsons.

Notice.

Any Adventists in St. Paul, Minn., or vicinity, will confer a favor on their brethren of like precious faith, by sending their address to Edwin T. Himes, Minneapolis, Minn.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garrigues, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

☞ The church in Wrightville, Ct., take this method of returning their thanks to those brethren who so kindly presented them with a Bible for their Chapel, and also some half dozen hymn books.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, corner of Causeway and Lowell Streets. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, my mail, 10 cts.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 22 cts.

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 22 cts.

9. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.

10. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

For the World's Crisis.

BIBLE vs. THEOLOGY.

There's not a word in all God's book,
Or all its parts which form the whole,
That can be found, if one should look,
Which speaks of an "immortal soul."
That such a word cannot be found,
Is stated with defiant air;
The reason's plain, and would you know?
The answer is; "It is not there"!
"All souls are mine," the Lord avers,
And this is his most stern reply
To proverbs which sometime were used,
"The soul that sinneth it shall die."
"Death does not mean," say Pope and Priest,
"To cease to live; the soul can't die!"
And thus they rally round the flag
Of Satan who first coined that lie.
"What is the soul?" is oft-times asked
By those who would the truth embrace;
But Error rank, by agents bold,
Is oft dealt out to take Truth's place.
What saith the Scriptures? is the test;
And shall they be believed as true?
Unto this standard who appeals?
Yes, who is on the Lord's side? Who?
The Scriptures say that of the dust
God formed the man, not part, but whole;
Into him breathed the breath of life,
And "man became a living soul."
Thus "soul" and "self" do mean the same,
When rightly viewed; they mean the man;
This simple truth may there be learned
By all who will those pages scan.
"Souls live," "souls die," "souls eat," "souls drink,"
"Souls take their ease," "souls merry are."
Soul is a substance, soul has weight,
Soul's not a ghost, nor empty air.
But man, frail man, who like the grass
Soon falls and withers as the herb,
Thinks to improve God's work divine,
And make a being more superb.
This would-be architect declares
Such words, such thoughts, a wicked sin;
"This grass, this earthly 's, but the shell,
The house, the real man's within."
These doctors grave, these tinkers wise
In their own eyes, and by their rule,
Say "flesh and blood and bone and brain
Are not the man, they're but the tool,
By use of which the man doth work."
Now if this be a fact, why then,
For lack of tools there must exist
Great multitudes of idle men.
And some there be-it would appear,
Who idle might as well remain,
With all the tools which they possess;
For what's a man without a brain?
And then to prove themselves more wise
Than men by God inspired as true,
They say we must consult as aids
Both "history and science" too.
And now the conflict thickens fast;
God's "little flock," with hostile clan;
Truth against error is arrayed;
God's word against the word of man.
Who'll stand for truth? Who'll stand for right?
Who'll stand for God, though he stand alone?
Who'll bear the scoff? Who'll bear the frown?
Who'll bear reproach for a "seat on the throne"?
Then "gird up your loins" and in God's strength be strong,
Meekly tread the bright way; keep you spotless and pure;
Though the conflict be sharper it will not last long,
And with Christ for our Captain the vict'ry is sure.
Soon in glory he'll come for all who now confess
Before men his blest name, bringing crowns for reward;
Then all who to him have been loyal and true,
Will by him be confessed before angels and God.
Though they now sleep in death, and their dust scattered far
. Over earth or in ocean, by wind or by tide,
At the sound of his voice they shall "hear and come forth,"
Reformed and revived, never more to divide.
Then in the bright "land beyond river" and storm,
His sweetest of names ever praise and adore;
The immortalized host re-united and saved,
Their triumph shall sing on the glorified shore.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

JOHN CARTER, THE ARTIST: WITH COMMENTS AND QUERIES.

The following extract is from a column of book notices in a recent number of the New York Evening Post;

"JOHN CARTER, THE ARTIST.—The life of John Carter is a most singular history of what the human mind can achieve under the most disastrous circumstances. The facts of his career are so well known that it is scarcely necessary to recall them. A young man, ignorant and dissipated, a daily laborer, is thrown from a tree which he has climbed to steal rooks—an adventure undertaken with a party of his companions. He receives internal injuries from his fall that result in the complete paralysis of his body, from the neck down, and in this condition lives fourteen years, developing, in the meanwhile, an astonishing talent as an artist, which he exercises without hands, without having any control over the muscles of his body, by drawing with his mouth. His pictures are masterpieces as works of art, without any reference to the manner in which they were executed; when this is considered they become truly marvelous. The best known among them is 'A Rat-Catcher and his Dogs,' for some time exhibited in this city, and universally praised.

The story of John Carter must arouse reflection even in the dullest mind; must thrill with emotion even the most frivolous heart. In the words of the author of his memoir: 'This case is one of those examples (especially valuable in such times as these) which go far to show that the soul is a spiritual unit, and not the mere concord of numerous animal faculties; for all the moral powers remained unimpaired—nay, were refined and exalted by the loss of everything short of life. Surely the fact that John Carter for fourteen years retained and even increased all his powers of mind and spirit, even when his body was well-nigh dead, may help to show how reasonable, as well as true, it is to believe that the life of the spirit of man depends not upon the life of the body.'"

The above is certainly a remarkable instance of cerebral soundness and effective mental vigor, conjoined with an afflictive and extensive physical disability. And the critic derives from the phenomenon, as if it were an undebatable and necessary deduction, the independence of intellect and consciousness of the machinery and functions of the body. Nay, he imputes to a dreadful loss of function, an exaltation and refinement of the mental and moral faculties. But let us see if this be true.

One thing is obvious at once, and that is, the perfect integrity of the brain. An injury to its substance is spoken of; it has not been disturbed by any accident or violence, producing lesion, concussion, compression, softening or paralysis. Not one of these five disturbing or disabling circumstances is hinted at. And yet it is known perfectly well that any one of them is exceedingly perilous to the mental functions, and that when existing up to a certain point or degree of seriousness, is incompatible with thought. How commonly is this overlooked! As if a man could think without a brain! Why, outside of the microscopic world (and even there the law may be universal), I am not aware that any kind of intelligence whatever is known to the naturalist apart from either some kind of cerebral development, or at least nervous expansion, in which there is an inherent sensibility.

If it is then a universal law in the animal kingdom, that when there is no pulp or network, more or less analogous to the nervous formation in man, there is no thought or even sensibility, why do we in our pride and conceit claim for ourselves a superiority or exception to a general law? Why do we forget the revelation of our Creator concerning our real nature? Why do we perpetually run in the rut of a popular opinion which has for its origin, proximately, Platonic philosophy or a pagan hypothesis, and originally the dictum of the deceiver, that actually wrecked our life and welfare in the first Adam? Strange, this fatal and infatuated love of the error that ruined us, this caressing of the serpent that deceived us! Shall we behold without wonder a wounded man kissing the arrow that has pierced his heart, or praising the poison that has depraved his blood, when the mischief is without mitigation or question the work of an enemy?

Now John Carter's brain was untouched. It is worth the while to know and to note this fact. All intelligent reasoning creation knows the preciousness and value of the brain. Behold it compassed and protected all around with a powerful bony arch. It is in this wonderful, convuluted, vascular and palpitating mass, exceedingly delicate and highly organized, that the intellect resides, and we are safe in saying that, in the present constitution of man, without a brain there can be no intellect, not the slightest. And it is pure assumption to allege the possibility, even, of human consciousness, conception, or sensation, without a cerebral centre of some sort. A little common sense and a little Scripture are of far greater force and effect than mountain peaks of philosophy, conjecture, dogmatism, or tradition.

But as a consequence of the injury to Carter by his fall, the whole body below the neck is said to have been paralyzed. By this we are compelled to understand mainly, of course, the voluntary system of nerves, or the muscular tissues pervaded and actuated by them. We conclude that the functions of the muscles of the legs and feet, arms and hands, were totally destroyed. Possibly the action of other muscles was greatly impaired, such as the abdominal and pectoral, enclosing the abdomen and chest, with what are called, anatomically, detrusors, sphincters, etc. It is not said, but we may conclude it probable, that the nerves of sensation were also implicated in the injury. And suppose it were so. By a previous healthy function of both these nervous systems, especially the latter, considerable stores of knowledge were treasured in the mind. Whatever could be derived from the sensation of touch, and if we add another sense, of palpitation, was still possessed. The senses of smell, hearing, taste and sight, were still preserved unharmed. And last of all, the brain is as complete in its organic integrity and functional faculty as ever.

But let us look a little further. It is perfectly certain that the working of the internal viscera could not be very greatly interfered with without a speedily fatal result. Physical life would be clearly incompatible with any very great obstruction of their functions. There must be a gastric, an intestinal, a hepatic, and a renal function; in other words, the stomach, the intestines, the liver and kidneys, must perform in some measure their proper office, or life must terminate. And still more emphatically, the pulmonary and cardiac offices must be vigorous and free in a good degree. The oxygen of the air must enter the lungs in inspiration, and the foul carbonic acid be thrown off in expiration. And the great interior central engine, the heart, must day and night, without cessation, or anything more than a momentary intermission, toil, like the giant that it is, a faithful servant, to send the current of the blood through a thousand canals, perpetually refreshing and sustaining the frame with its powerful ministration.

Suppose the kidneys should suspend their function. The urea that should have been eliminated, accumulating in the blood, and circulating through the brain, induces stupor and insensibility, followed by death. Let the liver become completely paralyzed and inactive, and not only is digestion greatly impaired, but the bile remaining in the circulation is diffused everywhere, clogging and enfeebling the machinery of the whole organism. Destroy the function of the stomach, and inanition and death ensue. Paralyze the motion of the intestines, and the body succumbs under the incubus of the effete substances whose expulsion is absolutely essential to life.

It is not a question for debate whether these organs were wholly disabled or not. If they were, certainly Carter never would have painted a "masterpiece" with a brush in his mouth. There must have been considerable efficiency remaining in the action of the great internal viscera of the body; and particularly the functions of respiration and of the circulation must have been comparatively uninjured.

This paralytic's brain was therefore supplied with its first great desideratum, a regular and ample flow of blood. The internal carotid arteries carried their fervent floods of fluid life, pulsating through innumerable thread-like canals, into every part of the cerebral sphere. The brain thus constantly thrilled with the arterial impulses, and fed with the vital supplies that replenish and enrich its mysterious structure and animate its faculties, could think independently of the muscular paralysis below. Why? Because the supply that was simply indispensable to its activity, was constantly and sufficiently furnished. Suppose the blood supply had failed, or become deficient. Suppose the action of the heart had become too feeble to reach the organ of thought with its invigorating tide. It is not necessary to go further than to cite the phenomenon of syncope, or fainting, with its accompanying insensibility, to show the startling effect of a recoil of blood from the brain. A sudden shock, or a copious depletion that deprives the brain of its customary aliment, is marked by a sudden loss of power, manifested in prostration and unconsciousness.

And not only this, the blood supplied to Carter's brain must have been of comparatively pure quality also, otherwise, as every physiologist knows, the mind would have been clogged and encumbered in its operations. The glandular and absorbent functions could not therefore have been involved very greatly in the paralysis. And it is worthy of remark, yet further, that the kind of mental labor requisite for the achievement of these productions was not probably that arduous and exhaustive effort of intellect that is often evinced, in what are called the learned professions, or that is required in difficult mathematical calculations.

Why was Carter then so successful in his art? Was it because his faculties were improved by a paralytic state of the body? Or rather was it because his disabled situation rendering but this one occupation (for which he had a natural genius,) possible, to relieve the dreadful tedium of his helpless existence, encouraged and demanded mental concentration? This is undoubtedly the secret of his success. It is this single, simple, intense and tremendous concentration that wins success, and especially concentration coupled with unwearied patience, and a perseverance superior to every discouragement.

In the calm review of the subject, we are reminded of the infallible truth of the sacred Word, which declares that the blood is the life of man. The delicate and wonderful nervous system itself is secondary to the great interior, active and vitalizing current of the blood, and is dependent on the influence of its universal tide. It is here, in the blood, that the life of man begins, and by it is the mechanism of the body built up and perpetuated. It is this busy and perpetual stream of life that enters with its elaborate vital atoms the most secret recesses, and repairs the most delicate tissues of the body. Perpetually purified by contact with the atmosphere, and replenished with the elements of nutrition, it moves forever on in its interminable circuit, carrying its precious contributions with impartial generosity everywhere, a powerful restorer, and a priceless benefactor.

From an article entitled "The Tree of Life," in a well known periodical, we quote the following: "But of all that pertains to blood, the most wonderful, by far, is its very house and home, the heart. In all languages spoken on earth, and in the mind of all earth-born men, the heart is the very essence of life; it is man itself. 'The heart of Judah waxed gross,' and 'with the heart man believeth.' The Savior 'came to bind up the broken-hearted,' and of God himself if is said, 'It repented him, and it grieved him at his heart.' The second day has not passed in the 'innermost parts where the Lord fashioned us,' before the faint beat of the unseen heart begins its mysterious life."

And yet the heart itself is nourished by the very blood which it drives with perpetual strokes into all the organs and members of the frame. Out of the blood are gathered the materials which compose the brain. The bones are concreted from this same flowing, crimson minister of life. And it is this warmth-suffusing and waste-repairing blood that is the nutriment of our Adamic, mortal life. Nor from this case of John Carter do we deduce any such inference as the author of his Memoir has hinted, viz: that "the soul is a spiritual unit." On the other hand, we understand that man is a material unit, and that his soul is unquestionably the product of a complex and marvellous organism; that his faculties are due to "a concord of animal functions," and that the faculty of thought is inseparable from the agency of that delicate and superior instrument,—the brain. First, the vital air oxygenizes the blood, and then the blood animates and actuates the brain, with all the organs of the whole fabric; and, behold, you have the living, conscious, intelligent man.

It is unnecessary and inexpedient to apply to a scheme whose essential basis is found in the insulting misrepresentation of the Seducer, for an explication of the mystery of man's being. Man is indeed mysterious in his creation, as a product of the wisdom and power of God; but the mystery of an immortal soul is a lying and wicked mystery.

THE WEIGHT OF A TEAR.

A pair of scales before him,
A rich man sat and weighed
A piece of gold—a widow's all—
And unto her he said:

"Your coin is not the proper weight,
So take it back again;
Or sell it me for half its worth—
It lacks a single grain."

With tearful eye the widow said:
"O, weigh it, sir, once more;
I pray you be not so exact,
Nor drive me from your door."

"Why see yourself, it's under weight,
Your tears are no avail."
The second time he tries it,
It just bears down the scale.

But little guessed that rich man,
Who held his gold so dear,
That the extra weight that bore it down
Had been the widow's tear.

ADVENT.

Again the church puts the trumpet to her lips and cries, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

The world is growing old. There are signs in heaven and signs on earth, and the powers of both are shaken. The glory flashes up the eastern summits, and we listen for the trampling of the horses and the thunder of the chariots of heaven. The world groans and tosses in pain. It cries, as it has through all the long centuries of its darkness and sorrow, for the great day of God.

And the church of God is here to answer the cry, here to tell of the splendors of that day, here to prophesy of the new earth as well as the new heavens, here to justify the travail and the groaning of creation, here to declare that the Lord will not delay his coming, here to bid men prepare to meet him, and here herself to befit the earth for the coming of the Lord.

How goes the duty these days? Tell us, what of the night? Does the trumpet ring clear through the darkness? Are the watchmen manning all the towers? Are the beacon-fires ablaze along the walls of the city of our God? and is the host all ranked and ready, armed and unbroken beneath the standard of its service?

God help a sleeping church!—a church that even her trumpet blasts awake not! a church that sleeps at Advent as she sleeps at Easter, and at Trinity, and in the darkness of her Lents! She only mutters in her uneasy sleep. She turns and tosses, and composes herself again to deeper dreams. Shall the coming Christ find her so what time his chariot blazes down the heavens? The small quarrels, the miserable self-seeking, the petty ambitions, the poor rivalries, these absorb the energies of her children. God's host is demoralized before the enemy. There are confusions and mutiny in the ranks.

So the Advent finds us, and so many Advents past have found us, and the trump of the prophet, and the cry of the seer awake us not. Sleeping dioceses, sleeping parishes, sleeping watchmen, sleeping laymen—do we really pray, and mean it, that the Lord will come soon and claim his own?

Is any church awake and doing its duty that is not ready to see the Lord's sign in the heavens to-day, and sing triumphant Te Deums for the sight? Is any church alive that will not welcome to-night the Master's knock upon the door, and thank him that he has delayed no longer? The new day comes and ushers in the new time. Shall the past be mended in the future?

Let prayer besiege heaven this Advent for a broad awake church! Let the priest cry in his closet for himself and the flock entrusted to his care. Let the congregation cry exceedingly to God, before his altar, in his own house, day by day. Let each man who believes in and loves the Lord that died for him, cry mightily in secret, and in his family, and in the congregation, for a blessing long delayed. Let laymen wrestle for priest, and priest for layman. Let parish and mission station and diocese, let bishop and babe storm heaven with supplications that will not be denied, for this church, that she may at last awake, and work, and watch, and prepare the way of the Lord.

Prayer will burst in the gates of heaven, and prayer only. Talk will not, discussion will not, plans will not, no matter how wise. Conventions will not, nor convocations. How would it do to get the whole church to praying? not merely saying, or reading prayers but actually praying from the very centre of the soul, prayers that will not cease till God replies?

It is the one duty of this church of ours, this Advent, to lay herself at the feet of Christ and ask him to touch her and so awake her. Her place is in sack-cloth at the seat of mercy, with confession and with prayer. She is rich and full of goods. She has waxed wanton. She has pleased herself with riches. She has made even her worship minister to her self-indulgence. Ah! it were better for her that she were turned into the caves and huts again, than thus to bring her pride and luxury to the altar of the Lord! There are times when the work seems hard; but never hard because of enemies, never hard because of obstacles; only hard, and sometimes almost hopeless, because of the blindness and deadness and the sleep within.

It is a time for new resolutions, a time to look at a wasted past, and resolve to make the better future mend it, a time for all souls to shake themselves from sleep, for "careless daughters" to arouse. And the place to go, awake or only half awake, is to the feet of Christ, who shall give the light.

Would God this Advent might be the date of a new era of spiritual life and power, that the Lord would "revive his work" in our unworthy hands; that he would fill us with the might of his new creating Spirit, the Lord and the Life-giver, that so our Christmas bells may "ring in the Christ that is to be" with us in a deeper and a still more personal sense, than ever we knew before. For the flaming presence of the Spirit in power, let us pray with more determined supplication this Advent, that so we may be awake "like men that watch!"—American Churchman.

Gems.

— Fear not, trembling believer. The bark which bears thy spiritual destinies is in better hands than thine; a golden chain of covenant love links it to the throne. That chain can never snap asunder. He who holds it in his hand gives thee this as the pledge of thy safety: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

— No man does his best except when he is cheerful. A light heart makes nimble hands, and keeps the mind free and alert. No misfortune is so great as one that sours the temper. Until cheerfulness is lost, nothing is lost. Keep in good humor.

— The moment a man gives way to inordinate desires, disquietude and torment take possession of his heart. The proud and the covetous are never at rest; but the poor and the humble possess their souls in the plenitude of peace.

— A broken and contrite heart unlocks our inward senses, and makes us see and hear and feel the things which could no more be seen, heard, or felt before, than a man in a deep sleep can hear see and feel the things that are said and done about him.

A saint is not free from sin; that is his burden; a saint is not free to sin; that is his blessing. Sin is in him; that is his lamentation; his heart is not in sin; that is his consolation.

— If the sun is down, look up at the stars, if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven. With God's presence and God's promise, a man or child may be cheerful.

— Have you learned to know you are ignorant? This is God's way of making wise; he bids you ask wisdom, and promises to give.

— The highest flames are the most tremulous; and so the most holy and eminent christians are more full of reverence, and fear, and modesty, and humility.

— It is not until the flower has fallen off that the fruit begins to ripen. So, in life, it is when the romance has passed that the practical usefulness begins.

— To enrich the mind and purify the heart, to keep the tongue still and the arm active, to eat slowly and sleep quietly—this is true philosophy.

— We should act with as much energy as those who expect everything from themselves; and we should pray with as much earnestness as those who expect everything from God.

— Envy, if surrounded on all sides by the brightness of another's prosperity, like the scorpion, confined within a circle of fire, will sting itself to death.

— When the million applaud you, seriously ask yourself what harm you have done; when they censure you, what good.

— He that can please nobody is not so much to be pitied, as he that nobody can please.

— Deliberate with caution, but act with decision; and yield with graciousness, or oppose with firmness.

— We should not be too niggardly in our praise, for men will do more to support a character, than to raise one.

— There are no two things so much talked of, and so seldom seen, as virtue and the funds.

— In time we transact business for eternity; whatever, therefore, we do now should be done well.

— God is the safety of his people, but we tempt Providence if we do not make use of the necessary means for our preservation.

— We often omit the good we might do, in consequence of thinking about that which it is out of our power to do.

— Christians, if you be poor in this world you should be rich in faith; and if you be rich in this world, be poor in spirit.

— The conscience has to do, not with fitness, or expediency, or advantage, but with right and wrong.

— Beauty is no longer amiable than while virtue adorns it, and virtue itself is true beauty.

— God hears the heart without words, but he never hears words without the heart.

— Where the hedge is the lowest, the devil leaps over.

— Flattery is a false coin which is current only through our vanity.

— It is wisdom to say but little respecting the injuries you have received.

— We promise according to our hopes, and perform according to our fears.

— We should view all men in the clear sunlight of charity.

— He who at all times can sacrifice pleasure to a duty approaches sublimity.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM SR. CAROLINE TULLER.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you permit me through the Crisis to communicate with dear brethren and sisters scattered here and there, who I believe would be glad to know of my welfare, and whom I would be glad to address personally. I never tire of reading the Crisis, and the sight even of names of friends with whom I have enjoyed sweet intercourse in years gone by, affords real pleasure. Such will rejoice to know that I am trying to improve my little remnant of mortal life in laboring among the Freed people of this city. Although I have found some things trying, yet I thank God from my heart that he has given me this privilege; and to-day more than ever before, I have been inspired with the hope that my unworthy efforts may receive the approbation of the Master.

I am connected with the Ely Normal School, and in my department have nearly forty scholars, form twelve to thirty years of age. As I look into their faces, and witness the expression of intense eagerness to grasp the knowledge of letters and words, I seem to feel a return of youthful vigor, thinking not of weariness, though my labor exceeds anything I ever attempted in the palmiest days of my youth.

I love to teach them to read, but the one great desire of my heart and constant effort is, to teach them the principles of the gospel of Christ. In their present state of mental cultivation, they comprehend but little; but by many the beautiful simplicity of the Gospel is appreciated.

Besides my day school, I have two classes in Sabbath School. To-day has been a precious Sabbath. My morning class consists of ten large boys, who can read well and are quite intelligent. My afternoon class are members of my school, and are but just learning to read. I select a portion of the gospel and read and explain it to them, and then ask questions, till the different points in the lesson are understood and fixed in their minds. Afterwards, I go to the Hospital and read to quite a number of old women who are there supported in their old age by government. To-day I selected from a bundle of tracts sent by Bro. H., the poem called "The Old, Old Story;" and if the author could have stood by, he would have thanked God for the inspiration that helped to pen so rich a gem for the lowly. They seemed spell-bound. They could take in every word, so beautifully simple! I have been much cheered in my visits to these old pilgrims. They have an intelligent appreciation of the gospel plan.

My heart is often made sad by the extreme suffering among the old and sick. They come to me often for help, which I cannot bestow. A small quantity of clothing has been sent here which was soon distributed. It is very trying to turn them away, so poorly clad that they suffer much. I can only point them to the better land, and the way that leads to it. Will you not pray for me, dear friends, that I may be a blessing to this people? I feel like working with my might. I was never more convinced than now of the correctness of our views respecting the condition of the world, and the approaching harvest.

Your Sister in love,
MRS. CAROLINE TULLER.

CAUSE FOR THANKFULNESS AND HAPPINESS.

Varied are our wants, and just as varied are the gifts that we receive from above; yes, in just the measure we need are these bounties bestowed, and every mind may realize this truth, that is, if it is capable and willing to perceive and acknowledge a great and good God above. Surely if we are willfully blind to all dealings of a higher Power and will not recognize the gifts as coming from him, but disdainfully consider them valueless in comparison to the peculiar blessings bestowed on our neighbor, allowing envy to take the place of gratitude, then necessarily there is only left for us bitterness of spirit and perpetual disquiet.

What restless beings we are, forever wishing for something we do not possess, and thus overlooking much that is for us to enjoy.

What have we to be thankful for? Suppose each one put the question to himself, and candidly think over the mercies of one day. Would it not shame us to such a degree that repining would forever cease?

We do not make half enough of life on account of our discontent; yes, 'tis truly so, and oh, how many of us in God's great day will be called to strict account for our lives of murmuring! People might enjoy thousands of things in this world that now they scarcely glance at, had they only been taught thus to do; hence, we come to a great and noticeable defect in education, and one that ought to have been remedied long ago; for in these last days it can scarcely be expected that men will stop and invent a new system which shall forever do away with the mighty errors of the past.

No, men move too fast, and you cannot get the multitude to see and appreciate what, if only carefully considered, would prove to be a guide-board pointing to ways of delight and pleasure such as they only dream of. Only the few stop and listen to your word of entreaty, and by so doing get the blessing and reap through life the fruits of wisdom.

Truly there are gross, palpable natures that are only pleased with things of substance, and can never appreciate the pure, the elevated and noble things of God; yet man was not made for a beast, and he alone is to blame for his remaining in such a condition. No, man was given a mind and intellect which, if rightly cultivated, should be to him an inexhaustible source of happiness.

And now we come again to the great mistake made in the world by those who act in the capacity of guides and instructors, who fail to show the people how rightly to cultivate the intellect and heart. They point to much that is useful and good in its place, but fail to make manifest the essential means for the cultivation of universal happiness. From infancy we might be taught how to make life delightful. I do not mean life in relation to a higher existence, but life here on this earth.

We are not placed here to drag out a tolerable existance and get through as soon as possible, nor merely to prepare for the future. God has given us this life to enjoy for a while at least. He has given us of his treasure-house things new and old, and is still showering them down on us, although the blind, grasping multitude fail to see or appreciate them. Man's use and function is to be the witness of the glory of God and to advance that glory by his implicit obedience, and resultant happiness. So whatever enables him to fulfill that function is truly useful to him.

What merely helps us to exist is comparatively of little consequence toward this object, although the world seem to think that their houses, lands, food and raiment are the things useful, and that sight, thought, admiration, ect., are profitless. Such, however, are barren rocks with no verdure or green thing to cheer or beautify their dreary souls. Only idlers and dreamers, as they call them, seem to search out and enjoy the beauties and glories of human existence. They, sickened by the sensuality and low-mindedness of their fellow beings, and believing that there are greater, purer joys even on earth, take time and probe this condemned life, till the exquisite essenc eof pure and really satisfying happiness flows out in a stream before them. They publish the glad news to the world around them, and try in vain that they too, may taste and enjoy the richness of the pure stream; but as the flying crowd hear their words they only cry, "Away with them, they are dreamers, and deceive us. Happy may they be in their illusions, and imaginations, and rovings after happiness, but we can't stop to play with earnest life. Business and pleasure occupy and engage us; money is the only thing needful, and its bright goal is what we seek."

So on they speed with hurrying footsteps to their low resting place, the grave; stopping not to drink of the little brooks, where the music of God's birds and the whispering leaves might many a time have cheered and comforted their weary, aching hearts. But too late; life has been to them but a name, and that now has gone. Poor deluded souls!

God does not design us to live such a barren, comfortless existence, but that we shall fill ourselves full of happiness all the days of our pilgrimage, and then we shall have greater capacities for the abundant fullness of God's gift in the future, i. e., eternal life. If men thought, loved and prayed more, they would be happier, that is the great secret of human happiness.

We might enlarge upon the theme by multiplying words to show in what ways we may cultivate happiness, but it would all be comprised in what those three words express—thought, love and prayer. M. A. T.

IN MEMORIAM.*

Mournfully, mournfully,
Came the sad sound,
Our dear sister sleepeth
In slumber profound;
Peacefully, quietly,
She sank to her rest;
The coffin enshrouds her,
The turf on her breast.

Her sufferings are ended,
Her sorrows all o'er;
Reposing in Jesus,
Where grief comes no more.
How blest are the dead who
Have died in the Lord;
They rest from their labors,
And wait their reward.

Peace, peace to the household
By sorrow opprest,
And sweet consolation
Fill every sad breast:
May this precious promise
Each mourning heart cheer,—
He'll banish all sorrow,
And wipe every tear.

Soon, soon they will meet her
Where evil comes not,
In that blissful union
All sorrows forgot;
Perchance ere the wild flowers
Above her shall wave,
Blooming, immortal,
She'll arise from the grave.

Hygiene.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

I have one of the great Prussian instruments for extracting the morbid secretions of the system, the cause of nearly all the pains and aches we are heir to.

"THE RESUSCITATOR (German, LEBENSWECKER) is in itself a representative of an entire apothecary; for it acts as a tapefactor, a reviver, an aperient, and a regulator of the circulation of the blood. Rheumatic pains, headaches, toothrches, cramps, asthma, quinsy, etc., etc., must yield to it forthwith. Diseases of the eye, ear, stiffness of the joints, tetters, jaundice, hemmorrhoids, green-sickness, gout of all forms, inflammation of the throat, syphillis, etc., are certainly and safely cured."

Every family ought to be made acquainted with these facts, and get a machine, as it costs so little, and no medicine to take. I can get the instrument and medical book of instructions for about $10.50, delivered to your order, cash in advance. I wish you all knew its value. You would not hesitate. If you write, send a stamp.

CAUSES OF SUDDEN DEATH.

Dr. J. M. Howe, of New York, writes as follows on this subject:

Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from the diseases of the heart do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden death, the experiment has been tried in Europe, and reported to a scientific congress held at Strasburg. Sixty-six cases of sudden death were made the subject of a thorough post mortem examination. In these cases only two were found that had died of disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty died of apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs—that is, the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, there not being room enough for a sufficient quantity of air to enter to support life.

The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are—cold feet, tight clothing, costive bowels, sitting still until chilled after being warmed with labor or rapid walk, going too suddenly from a close, heated room, into the cold air, especially after speaking, and sudden depressive news operating on the lungs and circulation of the blood. These causes of sudden deaths being known, an avoidance may serve to lengthen out valuable lives which would otherwise be lost under the verdict of heart complaint. That disease is supposed to be inevitable and incurable; hence men may not take the pains they would to avoid sudden death if they knew it lay in their power.

A judicious and persevering use of the inhalation of the common air through the inhaling-tube, would, we are persuaded, even in persons who have no tendency to consumption, in many cases prolong life full ten years. It would toughen the throat and lungs, and do away with all the liability to congestion and inflammation of these organs, to which so many are liable by reason of the lack of out-of-door, vigorous exercise, and of a sedentary life; and especially as persons advanced in age, it would tend greatly to keep up to its normal condition the circulation and arterialization of the blood and a healthy state of the digestive organs, and thus lessen the liability to sudden death.

NEURALGIC HEADACHES.

About ten years since I was laid up with an excruciating neuralgic headache, which seemed to encircle the ear of that side of the head alone affected. The idea that the headache had something to do with the ear as a centre occurred to me, although in the ear itself there was no pain. I had a little almond oil, and also spirits dropped into the ear, but without any good effect; when the thought suggested itself that perhaps a little of the anesthætic ether (not the nitric) might do good, by deadening the nervous pain. I had some drops of rectified sulphuric ether, therefore, put into the ear; and in the course of half an hour my headache was entirely gone.

I have since found, both from my own occasional experience, and that of others, that ether so applied, is in nearly all cases an effectual cure of these very painful headaches, face-aches, jaw-aches, and tooth-aches, which are commonly known as neuralgic and rheumatic.

If a very severe case, two or three days may elapse during which the pain may be apt to recur, especially from new and even slight exposure to draughts; but repeated applications, of half a dozen drops or less, of ether, at a time, seems certain to subdue the most violent attack, sometimes in a very few minutes. A drop or two of almond or olive oil, afterwards put into the ear, I have thought, tended to protect from a new attack. As the ether sometimes gives pain in the ear for a moment while being applied, a single drop should, first of all, be carefully put in, and then more, as the case will allow; but I have never suffered the least bad effect, either in my hearing or otherwise from the use of ether in this way, nor have I heard of any from others who have tried it at my recommendation.—Ex.

THE EFFECTS OF HIGHH-EELED BOOTS AND SHOES.

What stupid ninnies some persons will persist in making themselves by continuing to wear boots and shoes that give them pain every moment, and which hinder their easy and graceful movements. It is, indeed, true, as the Scientific American affirms, that this silly fashion must be creating a rich harvest for the corn doctors, and it is sure to result in a greater or less degree of personal deformity. Especially may the latter consequences be expected in the case of young children. When the heel is raised, as is the prevalent custom, the bones of the thigh, pelvis and leg, as well as the foot, are thrown into abnormal positions; and while the bones maintain their plasticity, the effect of such unnatural tension is sure to be perpetuated, in shape of crooked shins, bandy legs, elephantine toe-joints, and cramped, ungraceful gait. Let us hope that before the evils shall be greatly multiplied fickle fashion may remove the cause, and give us something more sensible and endurable than these toe-screws which are giving us the hobbling gait of Chinese women, and which possess neither beauty nor comfort. Let boots and shoes be made to fit the feet; and do not attempt to require the feet to adjust themselves to the unnatural form of many fashionable boots and shoes.—Church Union.

RATTLESNAKE BITE.

Ammonia, or hartshorn, is doubtless the best remedy known for the bite of the rattlesnake. Alcohol is good, but not to be relied upon for a cure in all cases. So with several kinds of vegetable remedies; they cure in some cases, but not in all. Next to ammonia, mud is probably the best. A son of Mr. J. D. Sharp, of Spring Valley, Minnesota, was bitten on the foot by a rattlesnake. Several remedies were applied, each said to be a certain cure; but they all failed. He grew spotted like a rattlesnake, they said, and became very sick, and likely to die. At length they put his foot into a pail of mud. He was relieved in fifteen minutes, and continued to improve until he was well. If one has such a bite to treat, and cannot get ammonia, let him give whisky, or some other stimulant, internally, and apply mud to the part bitten, changing it once in three hours during the day.—New York Observer.

FAILING EYES.

Persons suffering from dyspepsia, or any other malady, must take care of their eyes. Any disease impairs the strength, and the nervous system is depressed; and when laboring under this form of depression, the eye is particularly liable to become weak. The reason of this is, that "of the ten nerves which go off from the brain, six are distributed wholly, and the other four partially, to the eye." Through the great sympathetic nerve, the disturbed stomach, or liver, or intestines, communicates with telegraphic speed with the brain, and so with the eye.

The first advice to be given with reference to the comfortable use of the eyes, undoubtly is—to keep intestines and liver and stomach in a healthy condition, or, in other words, do every thing to confirm the general health. If this be impaired, do not read, and especially do not write long, without giving the eyes rest.—Health Reformer.

TO LABOR AND TO WAIT.

Watching, ever watching!
O, how long!
Will the rosy morning
Never bring its dawning,
And the birds' sweet song?

Hoping, ever hoping!
Though the heart
Weary oftimes groweth,
And God only knoweth
All its bitter smart.

Praying, ever praying
Let me be!
Savior, thou wilt hear me,
Succor, bless and cheer me,
Cheer me tenderly!

Working, ever working
I would be!
O, when I am weary,
And my work is dreary,
Father, strengthen me!

Dying, surely dying
I shall be!
When the foe prevaileth,
And my spirit faileth,
Come and set me free!

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

DAVID ON THE SOUL OF MAN.

How the soul is susceptible of capture.—Contrary to the received hypothesis, that no strategy, or persecution, or pursuit, can overtake and detain by force a righteous man's soul, the theology of David expresses its practicability. The native evasiveness of its subtle essence is popularly represented to be its security from apprehension, so that no depredator shall pirate it away into mortifying custody here. It is true that at the moment of death, in the case of some more flagrant offender than usual, there is sometimes supposed to be imminent over the expiring mortal the Satanic bandit and adversary, who immediately seizes the immortal exhalation, the soul, and transports it agonized and reluctant into his den of darkness, or excruciates it in intolerable flames, with a pitilessly lacerating trident compelling the victim into the heart of purgatory. But the soul of the upright is said to be superior to arrest, here, ever, and everywhere.

But how the truth is mixed and debased and mystified with errors and fancies of men. The soul of the sinner is certainly destined to be lost, if not rescued by grace through faith; but that soul our Bible teaches us to be the sinner's own self, or his life. For him to gain the world and lose his life, is unprofitable. The Psalmist in his prayer, confident in his rectitude, protests that if he has returned or rewarded evil to him that was at peace with him, "let the enemy persecute my soul and take it." In other words he would say, "Let him catch and seize me, and vent his vindictiveness on me"; "yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay my honor in the dust."

The persecution and capture of a soul here is simply of a living self. The captivable soul is not an insubstantial mist, or immortal glimmer, but a material man, or the life of the man, a life exposed, dependent, organized, and mortal. To persecute and take this life, it would be necessary to strike at the patient and busy and wonderful work of the inner organism, the central engine, the heart; the pulsating hose, the arteries; the cellular bellows, the lungs; the sensitive threads, the nerves; or at some other one or more of the vital viscera, cerebral, hepatic, or what not. Surely God is great to make man of the dust. To spin the delicate fibres, to weave the wonderful tissues, to build the countless canals, to match the joints, to tie the ligaments, to harmonize all the varied structure into one mechanism, and so to constitute the erect, active, and intelligent man; this is a work worthy of God, for his own Son Jesus Christ, the second Adam, stands full in our view in the divine word a glorified, "perfect man."

Harmonious with the letter and spirit of the above scripture is the implication of the prayer, "Deliver my soul from the wicked, thy sword." That is, literal, material me; deliver me, and save me from reckless and treacherous foes; the violence of men grown callous and cruel with prosperity. Deliver me from men pampered and proud, in whom satiety and opulence have extinguished compassion, and whose haughty and hardened hearts are fortified with projects of honor and power perpetuated through their posterity. These proud and unholy men God knows how to use as an affliction to other sinners, as easily as a giant wields a sword; but good David begs a Father's care to screen and keep him from the thrust of the steel. That it is the man himself, as a man, and not an immaterial inwardness, we know from the context, and the language of other passages in the same prayer; thus: "Keep me"; "hide me"; "incline thine ear unto me"; "as for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness."

The fact is, in every sudden and critical danger, the sufferer and possible victim pleads or strives for his life, the preservation or rescue of his real present self, his organized and physical being. Such is the great thought of the "man overboard," as he feels under him the treacherous, dreadful embrace of the sea, and thinks, agonized, of the infinity under and around him, shrieking out a prayer that the yielding waves may not swallow him up, nor the measureless abyss become his grave. This is the instinct of nature, allowing for the fortitude of the few hearts that may brave death undaunted, or the courage and consolation inspired by a living, christian faith.

A rightly instructed prayer for the welfare of the soul, in the matter of a future life, is a prayer for the same self that dies, the same self that thinks, that detects peril and prizes life before death, and only can live again by divine power through a resurrection.

The simple and precise identity of soul with self, is further obvious from the home-thrust query, "How say ye to my soul, flee as a bird to your mountain?" Why, you audacious enemies of the hunted Bethlehemite, why are you so imperative? How come you to so scoffingly counsel flight to a man of faith? Why so ready, whether enemies or friends, to recommend a retreat to the familiar solitudes of some mountain den, or the shelter of some ragged rock? Better ponder David's argument of security, to wit: "In the Lord I put my trust." But still there is peril. Here are the wicked, with their withy bows and whittled javelins, ready to snap a death missile at the righteous. The bow-string is hard and strong. Yet the Lord's throne is in heaven. An eye of such inconceivable sharpness, and ever watchful observation, as lets no iniquity escape its notice, is bent on the menacing mischief.

The Lord purifies the righteous with trials for the moment; but over these wicked whom he watches a cloud is gathering—such a cloud of treasured and terrible things as he will bid ravel out and rain down its mysterious and fatal fierceness! "Snares, fire and brimstone, a horrible tempest," will be seen falling with confused but deadly precipitation, enclosing, overtaking and overwhelming the guilty. Does any body imagine that the advisers here inquired or suggested such a novel expedient as a temporary exit of a soul from its tenement? Did they propose the curious and extreme idea, that David might as well disembody himself, and retire to some fissure among the crags for safety? Or was the real purpose, the animus and aim of these bow-men, to drive David's soul out of his body by killing him, and then either by way of insult, or from a momentary pity, to point the road to yonder mountain-steep, where his harassed, woe-struck, shivering soul might snug itself away in some quiet nook, or compensate and solace itself on some height of sublimity? Would the good man's friends, as zealous as the three counsellors that stand around Job in his woe, paint to the vision a post-mortem future like this? Did David suppose there was any notion of the kind in any one's head? I think every body will say, No!

When one's theological system develops a situation so undesirable as a poise between the ridiculous and insane, the part of wisdom is obviously a retreat. Why not a rectification? Who does not see clearly that in this eleventh Psalm "my soul" means me? It is too plain for further comment. The soul is the living, vital self, organized, and constantly liable to death, by disease or violence.

But why did the pious and royal singer sometimes talk to his soul? Why did he ask questions and utter exclamations? why did he rehearse, and converse, and exhort, if it was not the case of a compound being, addressing the noble, the sentient, the intelligent, and immortal part of the duality? Thus: "O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord," etc. The answer is interrogative and short. Why does a man talk to himself? Why in all literature, and in all history, and in every day life, do rational beings soliloquize? It is nothing wonderful. Every body occasionally talks to himself, I opine. A lady was remarking to me, not long ago, that it was a habit of a woman in her service to be often thus occupied for some minutes.

In the Bible we find soliloquy sometimes alternating with prayer, or merging into the most emphatic and devout discourse upon the goodness of God. Soliloquy is a phase of testimony, a form of declaration. Is the speaker therefore dual, in the sense of an internal self separable from a mechanism of matter, alive, intelligent and deathless after death? Is the self an immortality hedged up and housed in a frame of flesh? Is it a consciousness absolutely everlasting, that can subsist without viscera, that really cares not much for blood and brain, lungs and veins, heart and arteries? Nay, that counts all this most artful and amazing fabric but a prison, a pound, or a pack-load? How solemn and simple the truth that these walls and valves and threads, so beautifully devised, and so ingeniously inimitable, furnish the only possible condition of life and consciousness this side of the resurrection.

Let the spiritist remember that his soul is a life due absolutely to the most cunning harmony of mechanisms, the most adept mystery of material motions, planned and actuated by the Lord Almighty. My soul is myself, my living self, sentient and voluntary. I am alive because God has given me life. My life inheres in my breathing body, my beating heart, my bounding arteries. I think, I feel, I hope, I know, because of my organization. If a bullet crash through my brain, or perforate my heart, I die, my soul expires, my life is gone; but by the loud shout of the Son of God, I spring up again in the resurrection, and, if a true believer, I shall live eternally. How many millions of saints, when awaked on that lovely morning, will answer back the call of their Love with a shout that will make the welkin ring again. His snow-white, shining head, his eyes afire with love the most joyful, the most intense, and the most intelligent, his face immortal sunshine, his whole aspect gladness and majesty, his arm a reservoir of strength, his voice melody incomparable, his greeting all congratulation and unutterable kindness.

O! how precious and blessed will all this be to the dead raised incorruptible, and perfected at the coming of their Chief.—So we see what issues hang on the advent and kingship of Jesus. C. Colegrove.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

Luke 16: 19-31.

BY J. M'CAMMON.

"There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table; moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the end of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they would repent. And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

My mind has of late been called to the consideration of this subject, more particularly by friends with whom I have had some discussion on the same; friends too for whom I entertain the highest respect, both for their education and talents, but who have had their instruction in the same school and under the same teachers as many of the rest of us have done. It is not for us to treat their opinions with levity, but so far as it lies in our power to enlighten their minds with the truths of the gospel, so long hidden under the accumulated rubbish that heathen superstition and Catholic dogmas have thrown around them.

I am aware of the struggle that I myself went through, after more than half a century spent in learning the doctrines of the schools. I am not astonished at the smallness of the number that are willing to examine for themselves to see whether these things are so; but cling with a tenaciousness to their opinions as though life itself depended on the issue.

Of this number are those who continue to teach that in the scriptures above quoted the doctrine taught is that of a veritable rich man and a veritable Lazarus that lay at his gate; and that when Lazarus died he was borne by angels to the mansions of the blest, enjoying the society of all those that went before. But the rich man, whose death and burial were afterward, was hurled down to the regions of the damned, there to writhe in agonies, and to have none but devils and damned spirits for his companions forever. And those who have the presumption to dissent, must feel their anathemas without measure. Now if we are mistaken in our views, and these doctrines are still true, a key can be found, either in the narrative itself or in the original, that will unlock the mystery.

I will first call your attention to the Illustrated Dictionary of the Bible, edited by William Smith, classical examiner in the University of London; and as far as my knowledge extends is considered a standard work, both in England and America.

On the word translated hell in our version, he says, "This is the word generally and unfortunately used by our translators to render the Hebrew word sheol. It would perhaps have been better to retain the Hebrew word sheol, or else render it always by the grave, or the pit."

In another place he says, "Where hell is used as the antithesis of heaven, merely illustrates the Jewish notions of the locality of sheol in the bowels of the earth. The Hebrew ideas respecting sheol were of a vague description. Generally speaking, the Hebrews regarded the grave as the end of all sentient and intelligent existence. In the N. T., the word hades like sheol sometimes means merely the grave; or in general, the unseen world. It is in this sense that the creeds say our Lord went down into hell, meaning the state of the dead in general, without any restriction of happiness or misery."

If this is the way on which the foundation of the doctrine of eternal misery is laid down in our standard theological works, have our doctors of divinity anything stronger than a rope of sand upon which to hang their hopes? But not to be tedious, I desire to bring one more witness to the stand on this subject. John W. Nevin, author of "Biblical Antiquities," published by the Amer. Sunday School Union, in giving the opinion of the Jews on the Greek word hades, says, "It became common, especially in the language of poetry, to employ the imagery of a sepulchre, in representation of the general condition of the dead. A vast cavern was conceived, stretching abroad with immense extent, in the deepest parts of the earth. Continual gloom hung over all its scenery, and the most profound silence reigned on every side. No step of living man had ever descended to its unknown depths, nor had the eye of such ever discovered one of its secrets. It was all wrapt in awful mystery; it was the land of silence; it was the region and shadow of death. Round its sides the form of the departed men rested, every one in his separate place; and when its powerful gates unfolded, it was but to admit some new inhabitant to its dreary mansion, as he came from his state among the living on earth, to mingle with the countless multitudes below. This unseen, unknown condition of the dead, was called in the ancient language of the Jews sheol; and in the Greek language, which was used in writing the New Testament, hades. In the English Bible it is sometimes styled simply 'the grave'; at other times it is designated by the world, 'hell.' On Rev. 20: 13, he says death and hell, or hades, are represented as real persons; the last receives all its power directly through the triumphs of the former; and when the one is compelled to release its captives, the dominion of the other is also over. So it shall be in the end; the whole mysterious state of separation between the body and spirit shall come to an everlasting conclusion; death and hell shall be forever stripped of their ancient power,—swallowed up, as it were, in that infinitely more tremendous ruin that is to follow. That will be the second death."

Could we stop here, how beautiful, how learned, how truthful the description just quoted; how worthy the christian heart; but the learned doctor does not stop here, but continues, from the words "second death"—"The lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, where the ungodly shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." Just as though the second death and the lake of fire and brimstone were synonymous. But where, oh, where among the Greek or Hebrew words can the learned doctor find such a meaning? Echo answers, Where? The whole thing is assumed without a show of proof, unless we find it in the narrative itself, to which we shall now turn our attention.

"And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." Let us pause here a moment and examine this part of the subject. What Lazarus was it that the angels (or messengers) bore away? was it the one that died, or were there two—one dead, and one still living, that the angels bore away? Here is a knotty question that I must leave for our learned Doctors to decide.

Again, is Abraham's bosom the bosom of our old father Abraham who died and was buried in the cave of Machpelah by his two sons Isaac and Ishmael? If so, will those who contend for this interpretation inform us when it was that Abraham had a resurrection? Or if there were two Abrahams, one sleeping in Machpelah's cave, the other holding one Lazarus in his bosom? If there are not two, then is our ancient father, his locks of a silver whiteness, sitting holding the beggar in his bosom, which he has been doing for the last eighteen hundred years.

Here is a gordian knot. Let the learned Doctors, who are so eager to pronounce their anathemas on the devoted heads of those that dare think for themselves, step forward and untie it. Until this is done, it is more than useless for me to contend with a phantom.

Failing to find a satisfactory explanation of the above scriptures, we turn our attention to a parabolic solution of the same. Though the word parable is not found in this connection, yet the learned agree in one thing, placing it among parables; they therefore call it a parable; and if a parable, then it relates to something tangible.

We would then say, we think that the rich man and his five brethren are fairly represented in the Jewish priesthood and the Jewish nation; and that we can find a strong similitude between Lazarus and the Gentile or heathen nations that surrounded them.

First, then, the rich man was an acknowledged son of Abraham. He is not accused of wickedness, but that he was rich and his clothing was of purple and fine linen, and he fared sumptuously every day. (Nevin in his "Biblical Antiquities" says "purple" was a very bright color; and kings and princes, when they appeared in state, were generally arrayed in it. This color was procured from the blood of a certain shell-fish, as it was found in a certain white vein near the animal's throat. By reason of its great scarcity it was considered more precious than gold.)

If we are right in our application of this parable, we have before us, in figurative representation, a nation favored above all the nations of the earth. To them were entrusted the oracles of God. To them were the holy prophets sent. Nor would we stop here. In their glorious Temple, and in the magnificence of their worship, there was no parallel. All the knowledge the Gentiles received was but the crumbs that fell from their table.

This is fully illustrated in the Scriptural account of the Syrophenician woman, when she came to the Savior to plead for her afflicted daughter. At first he treated her with seeming rudeness, and said, "Is it right to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs? . . . . Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table." She was satisfied with Lazarus' portion, and she found it. Her daughter was healed.

(To be concluded.)

THE PALM-TREE CHRISTIAN.

"The righteous shall flourish like a palm-tree." One of the most prominent features of the palm-tree is usefulness. A certain traveler informs us that the natives of the palm-tree regions celebrate, either in prose or verse, the three hundred and sixty uses to which the trunk, the branches or long leafed stalks, the leaves, fibers, and fruit of the palm are skillfully applied. So likewise, christian reader, if you would be like the palm-tree in usefulness and growth you must consecrate wood, bark, fruit and leaves—all—to the service of your Master. If you are safe, planted on the Rock of Ages, have you been the means of helping some other perishing struggling one to the same place of safety? Have you stretched down the arm of prayer, liberality, advice and influence, to help up some other one on that same rock of safety? Of two christians, the one intensely endeavoring to save others, the other on his knees thanking God for his own escape—the former, in our opinion, is the sublimer sight, and comes nearer the fulfilling of God's will. The one is but the expression of gratitude; the other is the embodiment of gratitude itself in effort.

Take away some professing christians, and who would miss them, so far as their usefulness is concerned? Who has sat under their shade, and been refreshed? Who has partaken of their food and been strengthened? Who has been gladdened by their freshness and beauty? Who has been piloted by them to the well-springs of living water in the arid desert of life? Who has from sight of them and contact with them, thanked God and taken courage? Where is their fruit, their good fruit, in the sight of God or man? If at this hour God was to cut them down as cumberers of the ground, we fear that, as they would look back upon a wasted, barren life, and as eternity and the judgment would loom up before them, their bitter, unavailing cry would be, "Leaves—nothing but leaves!"

"And shall we meet the Master so,
Bearing our withered leaves?
The Savior looks for perfect fruit—
We stand before him humbled, mute,
Waiting the word he breathes—
'Nothing but leaves.'"

Let not this be the melancholy cry of your life. If a christian at all, be like the palm-tree, beautiful and useful upon earth; and then you shall wave it in triumph, as the emblem of victory in heaven.—Independent.

For the World's Crisis.

DOES MATT. 10: 28 TEACH THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL?

One of the strongest passages from which the immortality of the soul is inferred, is Matt. 10: 28, where Christ said, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Here the inference is drawn thus: If men cannot kill the soul, then the soul must be immortal. This may be termed good logic. Now read the second clause: "But rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Here I draw the inference thus: There is one that can not only kill but destroy both body and soul; therefore the soul cannot be immortal. This is fully as good logic as the above.

But "to the law and to the testimony." "The soul that sinneth it shall die"; and, "He that converteth . . . . shall save a soul from death."—Ezek. 18: 4; James 5: 20. Having then this plain declaration of the Bible, we must come to the conclusion that a soul which shall die, because of having sinned, and that can be saved from death, by being converted from the error of his way, can not surely be immortal.

Then, in a closer examination of the above passage, we find that the second part of it declares that a soul can be destroyed, which at once should set aside the immortality of the soul. It is the first clause that gives the trouble; because if we make that to teach the immortality of the soul, then the question, Who is able to destroy a soul? comes up. Here the objection is generally raised, Destruction does not mean death, so that a soul may be destroyed and yet live. Well, I suppose we all agree that destruction means destruction, at least; and yet the advocates of the immortal-soul doctrine contend that the soul is indestructible. To this they are driven by necessity. But we say, in conclusion, the soul which can be destroyed in hell (Gr. the Gehenna of fire) can not be indestructible.

READING THE BIBLE—WHEN, WHERE, HOW OFTEN?

How often should we search the Scriptures? Daily? Yes, daily; we need daily food. How frequently do we require the food that nourishes our bodies, to sustain our physical system healthfully, vigorously! Do we not require spiritual food, the bread of heaven, as frequently as temporal food, to strengthen and invigorate our christian graces? Without constant, healthful nourishment for the body we perish—we die! So also in furthering our speed heavenward, in sustaining life eternal, we need constant aliment, angels' food, whereof if a man eat he shall never die. The children of Israel gathered manna daily.

"Lord, evermore give us this bread." "Give us this day our daily bread," is recorded in the Lord's Prayer. The soul must be nourished with heavenly food daily, else spiritual starvation is certain. The noble Bereans seached the Scriptures daily. Search the Scriptures daily, in your closets, your secret retirements; drink into the spirit of inspiration on your bended knees, before God. No one neglecting his closet duties is prepared to stem the popular current, rise above the world, fight the good fight, triumph in God, overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. In the closet, in humble, fervent supplication for angels' food, with the heavenly pages open before us, we renew our strength from day to day, make rapid strides heavenward. The word of God is a special aid in these retired, devotional communions. It opens the door of utterance, lets in the light of heaven—glory eternal! The most holy and useful in all ages have spent hours on hours alone with God, lifting up "holy hands without wrath or doubting." David meditated on God's word day and night (see Ps. 1), and thus he was like a "tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season." Our closet duties prepare for family duties, social duties, public duties.

We should read the sacred oracles in our families daily—morning and evening, around the sacred altar. In gathering your household's friends, as you rise up, and as you lie down, be sure to open the volume of divine truth. Let God speak; hear what the Lord from heaven will say; his word is life—life, "quick and powerful"; it produces solemnity, holy and reverential fear; opens to the mind and heart new fields of thought; provides suitable, appropriate language, soul-cheering, divinely eloquent, for approaching acceptably the Most High. Again, read the word of life eternal in your social gatherings, in meetings for prayer and praise, in the great congregations, in all assemblings for God's service.

A prayer-meeting without a Bible is not a prayer-meeting as God would have it. Family prayer is not family prayer, as God would have it, without the Bible. . . . The Bible is the watchword, the motto, the text-book, the guide, the safeguard, the soul, the life, the power, the foundation for prayer, the prayer of faith. The Bible opens the way, prepares the way for acceptable, heartfelt devotion. The Bible enlightens, invigorates, stimulates, kindles the soul joyfully, brightens hopes, confirms faith. Reading the Bible adds interest to your social gatherings, holy unction. It fills the mouth with arguments divine, supplies appropriate spiritual language for supplication. Let God speak, utter his voice in your families and prayer-meetings.

Friends, read the Bible; read it in your meetings for prayer and praise; read it in your families while gathered around the family altar. Read it attentively, reverentially and prayerfully, with self-examination. Read it, meditate upon it, digest it, bring it home to every heart. The influence of this sacred volume on the mind and heart of the hearers, is salutary on the hearts of your little ones; often quick and powerful; sharper than a two-edged sword, convicting and converting. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Take the Bible, beloved, be sure to take it—the book of books. Make the Scriptures your sun, your shield, a lamp to your feet, a light to your path. The Bible is the bright and morning star, and hope of glory.

The studying the Bible must be not only a daily business, but a business of life, business unceasing. Once reading of other books may suffice; not so with God's book; the longer we live, the more earnestly, perseveringly, and prayerfully should we examine its sacred pages, and treasure their contents in our hearts. The Bible must be our guide, our counsellor, our instructor, a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path as long as we live, the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me," saith the Lord Jesus.

TRUTH AND ERROR.

Is it possible for any person, or any class of persons, to have the whole truth, pure, entirely free from error? I think it is clearly evident that the great mass of the human race, high and low, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, hold tenaciously to errors of greater or less magnitude. And there is one apparent reason why so many receive error for truth. They are satisfied to take it second-hand.

We may compare the Bible to the water, which furnishes the power which moves the machinery of the mill. What would you think of a man who should construct a mill, and when all things needful were completed, instead of letting on the water requisite to turn the wheel, he should tell you that the mists that rise below the falls were much better than the water of the river? He might call your attention to the surpassing beauty of the mist, the brilliant hues reflected, rainbow like, but he could never convince you that the power requisite for the specified purpose could be thus furnished. You would pronounce the man insane who should make such a statement and act upon such a belief.

But this is the way millions ask for the truth. Instead of going directly to the Bible, they study the opinions of fallible men, and these quite often misguide, even though found in books elegantly bound, and as beautiful to look upon as the gorgeous hues and gay colors reflected by the mist.

Let us go to the fountain head—the Bible and its Author. God will not mislead you, the Bible will not deceive you. The Holy Spirit will lead you into all truth. And ye shall know the truth, and by the truth be made free.

THE BELIEVER'S ROCK.

BY REV. THEO. L. CUYLER.

The Lord liveth; and blessed be my Rock! With the same feeling that the half-drowned mariner, after struggling from the billows, plants his feet upon a jutting rock, and then calls out to his shipwrecked comrades to come up where he is, and find solid safety—with that same feeling does the grateful believer exclaim, "Blessed be my Rock!" It is both a declaration and a doxology. He finds a permanent support beneath his feet, and this rock of his salvation is worthy of all praise. Therefore, let God be praised! He magnifies the Lord himself, and calls on others to do the same. Having found strength for his weakness, support for his hours of trial, joy in affliction, and grace all-sufficient, he longs that every troubled, tempted, disappointed heart should come up and rest on the same unchangeable rock.

Every other support for the soul out of Christ is a delusion. One man rears his expectation on wealth. This is his "rock," and upon it he will build solid happiness. He is going to be happy in making it, happy in holding it, and happy in the luxuries it will purchase. "Other men don't know how to keep money or to use it," he complacently says; "but I mean to enjoy mine." He calls it mine; but in an unlooked for moment the coveted riches "take wings," like a swallow, and fly away. Even while they remained, they gave him no solid satisfaction. They did not fill up the terrible gaps and emptiness of the soul. Gold could not buy off disease, or secure good sleep, or quiet his heartaches. Gold did not make the prospect of a dying pillow any the pleasanter.

"You must be a happy man," said a person to one of the millionaire Rothschilds. "Me happy!" replied the great banker, "when, just as I am going to dine, some one writes me a letter, 'If you don't send me £500 I will blow your brains out.' Me happy, when I have to sleep with pistols under my pillow!" Poor rich man! That was not a very solid satisfaction which he had put beneath his uneasy head. No man can say of wealth, Blessed be my rock! It is always with me; it satisfies every desire of my soul; it inspires a pure and holy joy: it will purchase for me a happy death-bed and a glorious immortality.

Nor dare any man say that of literary fame or political honor, or social rank or earthly eminence of any kind. Napoleon's boasted "rock" proved to be but a fog bank. What a contrast between the poor chafed and disappointed exile of St. Helena and the glorious old prisoner of Cæsar, who sang aloud in his cell, "I have fought a good fight! Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord will give me in that day!" Lord Byron, the petted idol of London drawing-rooms, never tasted an hour of such solid peace as the pious shepherd of Salisbury Plain did when he thanked God for his plain potatoes and salt. There is hardly a sadder verse in the whole English tongue than that which Byron addressed to his own weary, disappointed soul:

"Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen,
Count o'er thy days from anguish free;
And know, whatever thou hast been,
'T is something better—not to be!"

What an awful thought that a human soul, in the very height of its glory, should seek a refuge for its misery in annihilation! And the record of political preferments does not furnish any more encouragement for men to seek a rock of permanent satisfaction there. That successful statesman only spoke out a familiar truth when he replied to a friend who wished him a Happy New Year, "It had need to be a happier one than the last one has been; for I never saw one happy day in it."

Amid all such sorrowful confessions of the failure of rank, wealth, honors to satisfy the human soul, we hear from tens of thousands the grateful thanksgiving, "The Lord liveth, and bessed be my Rock!" In many a hut of poverty, where contented piety has eaten its barley-loaf, and given God thanks; from many a chamber of sickness, where Christ has cheered the long wakeful nights; over many a little coffin, in which a darling child was sleeping; even in the valley of the death-shadow, have these joyful words been uttered. For a believer's trust in this world is on a rock; and his hope for eternity is on the same enduring "Rock of Ages." There is only one solid resting-place for us in all the universe. Everything else is quicksand.

When any man takes God's word for his guide, embraces Christ as his Savior, rests on his atonement for pardon, leans on Jesus for support, and strives to live by Jesus as his model, then may he be said to be "founded on the rock." His support is immovable, and his "portion" is everlasting. If you ask such a man why he expects to be saved, his simple answer is, "Christ died for me, and his blood cleanseth from all sin." If you inquire of him whence he derives strength for the strain of daily life, its wrenching trials and temptations, and solace under daily disappointments, he can testify that down in the depths of his soul there is an underlying grace which Christ doth furnish. Christ underlies him as New Hampshire's granite does Mount Washington. If you take away the divine Jesus from this man, you take away his hope, his peace, his strength, his joy amid trial, his character, his all. You make him poor indeed. The Lord still liveth; but he is no longer that man's "rock."

Reader, I point you to this everlasting rock-bed of comfort and of strength. If you are yet without Christ, you are yet without hope. You have many an uneasy, anxious moment, that no one knows of but yourself. There are still more anxious moments coming soon. A dying bed will soon be spread for you. There is an hour coming when gold will be of no avail; and high station will not fright away the messenger of death. There is a storm coming that will wrench and try your moral foundations as the late earthquakes of Peru tried the foundations of cathedrals and of palaces. See to it that you are not grounded on a quicksand. Dig deep, and lay your foundation on Christ, the everlasting Rock! And then, as the Lord liveth, you are safe.

"Your soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake, He'll never—no, never—no, never forsake."

SIN AND THE SAVIOR.

I feel, when I have sinned, an immediate reluctance to go to Christ. I am ashamed to go. I feel as if it would do no good to go—as if it were making Christ a minister of sin to go straight from the swine through to the best robe—and a thousand other excuses; but I am persuaded they are all lies direct from hell. John argues the opposite way. "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father." Jer. 3: 1, and a thousand other Scriptures are against it.

I am sure there is neither peace nor safety from deeper sin but in going directly to the Lord Jesus Christ. This is God's way of peace and holiness. It is folly to the world and the beclouded heart, but it is the way. I must never think sin too small to need immediate application to the blood of Christ. If I put away a good conscience, concerning faith, I make shipwreck. I must never think my sins too great, too aggravated, too presumptuous—as when done on my knees, or in preaching, or by a dying bed, or during dangerous illness—to hinder me from fleeing to Christ. The weight of my sins should act like the weight of a clock—the heavier it is it makes it go the faster.—M'Cheyne.

☞ During Payson's last illness, a friend coming into his room, remarked familiarly, "Well, I am sorry to see you lying here on your back." "Do you not know what God puts us on our backs for?" said Dr. P., smiling." "No," was the answer. "In order that we may look upward."

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 10, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DANSVILLE DISCUSSION.

Our discussion at Dansville, N. Y., evenings of Jan. 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, has been a glorious success, and caused great rejoicing among the friends of Jesus. Mr. Wilson, our opponent, is a tall, large man, of great force of character; strong will; very positive, exercising unusual magnetic influence upon an audience. He is shrewd, has good common sense, and a faithful advocate of Spiritualism. He claimed that Jesus was a sinner, and that he was not the Son of God in any sense more than other men. He still further advocated that he was the natural son of Joseph, thus making him a mere bastard; and then to cap the climax professed to adhere to the Bible. It was painful to hear his blasphemous talk; but it served to open the eyes of the people to the hideous deformity of the doctrines taught by the spirits and their followers.

Previous to the discussion, Mr. Wilson had been lecturing in the place on the subject of Spiritualism, and had challenged every body to meet him; but none ventured. Many are being led astray by his eloquence, earnestness, boldness, and positiveness; but the Lord has turned against him the tide of public sentiment, and caused a happy change in many minds, which before were unsettled.

The battle was an earnest one, followed by results that produced much comfort in the hearts of the Redeemer's children. Their uniform testimony was, "We never loved the Bible so well before."

We had daily prayer-meetings, which were profitable and interesting. We continued them just one hour, and all enjoyed them much better than those which are conducted in a dronish manner for two hours. If all would learn to pray, speak and sing short, not occupying more than one half to three minutes, they would find their prayer-meetings doubly interesting. When all have taken a part, if there is time, speak again. Try to be more familiar, and throw off all dead formality. Brn. A. C. Newell, W. J. Hobbs, W. Marlatt, and J. Allen were with us. They all engaged in preaching the word, in company with Bro. D. Cogswell, of Dansville, at whose house we found a real pilgrim's home.

Mr. Wilson asserted that "all evil is undeveloped good." If this statement were true, then all good is developed evil. The spirits teach there is no such thing as sin, and no God but man; and that all the spirits of men in the supermundane sphere, including the men in the mundane world, go to make up the one God. He claimed that "the breath of life" in man is a part of God, immortal, and pure. We called his attention to the fact that "the breath of life" is in a man's nostrils; and asked him for proof that it is the intelligent part of man, or a God, as asserted by the spirits. Of course, the proof did not appear. We also reminded him that if the intelligent part of man is God, then his God must be a very strange one; for he gets drunk, lies, swears, steals, cheats, fights himself, is licentious, and commits all the crimes in the world. We got no response from him on this point. It seems strange that sensible men can be so deluded by Satan as to believe such monstrous absurdities; but it fulfills the Scripture which teaches us "that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils;" and for this cause God shall send them "strong delusion, that they should believe a lie," "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." Spiritualism is the most dangerous and Satanic of all delusions of the day. It has nothing in harmony with Christianity. Whoever consults the "familiar spirits" does that which is "an abomination unto the Lord." Deut. 18: 10–12.

In one of our prayer-meetings at Dansville, a Spiritualist lady remarked at its close, that she also loved Jesus. We asked her if she meant by the word Jesus what we did? She said she did not. Her Jesus was only a "principle." The Spiritualists teach that when one adopts the principles taught by the spirits, that then Jesus comes to them, and that is his second coming; and that there is no other coming. Thus God is made "the breath of life," and Jesus but a "principle." Is not this denying Father and Son? Who is antichrist? "He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." 1 John 2: 22.

Saturday evening, Jan. 30th, we took occasion to expose the purposes and plans of Spiritualism in its political aspect, which is an important feature of the system, beginning to be developed. The Spiritualists propose to have a "World's Convention" this year to devise plans for more extensive operations. Is it not time for christians to be awake, and be clothed with the whole armor of God? Truly these are "perilous times."

Sabbath day, Jan. 31st, we met at half-past nine A. M., for a love feast, and had a good one. The Spirit of the Lord was with us to cheer our hearts with the bright hope of eternal life at the coming of Jesus. We occupied Union Hall during the day and evening, and had large, intelligent, and attentive audiences. The discussion and subsequent meetings have caused very happy changes in the feelings of some who attended.

During our stay at Dansville, we had an interesting visit with Dr. J. C. Jackson, the Physician-in-chief of the noted Hygienic Institution in that place called "Our Home." The Dr. and his associates have had great success in curing the sick. He has now about one hundred and fifty patients; and we think it would be exceedingly difficult to find another such a cheerful company of sick people. The Dr. is a natural physician, and has done a great work in leading people to observe the laws of health.

We also had a very pleasant visit with Dr. F. W. Hurd, formerly an associate with Dr. Jackson. He loves the "blessed hope."

Our late visit to Dansville has been very pleasant. We always feel at home there among the dear friends. It is a fine section of country, very fertile—like a garden spot. We have seen no place where fruit trees grow more thriftily than in D. "Our Home" on the hill-side overlooks the village, affording a very pleasant prospect. The spot for the Cure is well chosen. We are acquainted with no place where we would rather send a sick person than to "Our Home." The situation, the air, the water, the mode of treatment, and the experience of Dr. Jackson, we think are unsurpassed by any other institution in the world. Many hundreds have received great benefit from that institution. We are fully satisfied that Dr. J. has adopted the best known method of treating disease.

Monday, Feb. 1st, we left Dansville for Rochester, N. Y., where we are now writing. We have just had an interview with the elders of the church, and learn that the Lord is still their special helper.

ROCHESTER.

From Dansville, we went to Rochester, N. Y., and had a meeting Monday evening, Feb. 1st. We had a very interesting season. The evening before, the hall where our meetings had been held settled several inches, causing considerable alarm. In consequence of this accident, the Mayor opened the City Hall for our use, where we had a large, attentive audience. We have rarely enjoyed a more interesting occasion. The people seemed very anxious to hear the truth, and had open hearts to receive it. The Lord has truly awakened a great interest in that city. It is easy talking to people who love the truth. There are some noble souls in the Rochester church, who glory in the cross of Christ. This is especially true of their elders. They are true to the cause of their blessed Master.

It was a great feast to our soul to have the privilege of seeing the dear saints in R. once more. The happy greetings at the close of the meeting will be remembered with much pleasure. We have the best of evidence that there is no love so strong and abiding as that in the bosoms of christians for each other. It is a great favor to have a warm spot in the affections of the faithful followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

The church in R. has been highly favored in enjoying the fatherly watchcare and earnest labors of Bro. H. Pratt, one of the true christian watchmen, who is well posted in the wiles of Satan, and has had much experience in leading the timid soldier of the cross through the enemy's land in safety.

During the month of January, Bro. S. W. Thurber has been with the Rochester church, and his labors have been blest. He is to remain the first two weeks in February. Quite a number have started in the service of the Lord during the past month, and are rejoicing in hope of eternal life through Jesus our Lord, when he comes. Bro. Thurber was with us in good cheer. We also had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Wm. Ingmire, who is now preaching with good success at Brockport, N. Y. We found him rejoicing in the Lord, and waiting for his coming.

At 10.20 P. M., we left the city en route for Castleton, Vt., where we arrived the next day at 11.30, A. M., and was met at the depot by our dear Brn. S. G. Mathewson, and C. S. Sherman. We found the church in a very prosperous and healthy condition, as usual. Several have started in the service of the Lord within a few months. There was quite a panic in the place in consequence of the small pox, which had broken out in several families. We had a good meeting, bade them farewell, and took the cars again at about 9 P. M., and arrived in Montreal the next morning at half-past nine o'clock, in an earnest snow storm, which continued till it surpassed any thing of the kind experienced for years in Canada. About two feet of snow fell in addition to a good supply they had before. The wind sported with it, and piled it up in massive heaps. During the storm last evening (Feb. 3,) there was a dance in St. Patrick's Hall, and about 2 o'clock A. M., the roof fell in, in consequence of the great weight of snow upon it. This brought the dance to a sudden close, and injured some of the dancers. It was the largest hall in the city.

We had a profitable meeting in Good Templar's Hall, though the storm kept many away. The church in Montreal needs help. They have had to struggle against a very strong tide of opposition raised by the popular denominations, who seem determined to crush all that will not subscribe to their creeds, and help support their institutions. For several months the church has had but very little preaching, but have had good prayer and conference meetings. They love the way, the truth, and the life. Dear brethren, in your prayers remember the church in Montreal, that the Lord may help its members to stand firm in all their conflicts with the adversary.

GERMAN TRACTS.

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

PEACE.

The world moves. The efforts of men in these last days to outstrip each other, and to surpass every thing that ever has been, are without a parallel. Gigantic schemes are proposed, which might be thought to be only the utterance of the dreams of lunatics; but in a short time the world stands wondering at the sight of their accomplishment. No efforts are spared to gain worldly fame.

There is a new thing on foot now in Boston, which will be best understood by reading the following from the Boston Post:—

"LET US HAVE PEACE.

"Great National Peace Jubilee and Musical Festival, to be held in the city of Boston, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 15th, 16th, and 17th, 1869, in honor of the restoration of peace and union throughout the land.

"This most important event in American history is to be celebrated by the greatest outpouring of national, sublime and patriotic music ever heard upon the American continent.

"The President of the United States, members of his cabinet, members of congress, heads of departments, and the governors of all the States to be invited.

"An immense coliseum, capable of accommodating fifty thousand persons, is to be erected especially for this occasion, and to be magnificently decorated, historically emblematic of state and national progress since the formation of the union.

"The festival to be inaugurated at noon on the first day by prayer and the delivery of addresses, welcoming the distinguished guests and visitors to Boston and Massachusetts; also a congratulatory national address on the restoration of peace and union throughout the land; to be followed by a grand national concert, the principal feature of which will be a great chorus of twenty thousand voices, selected from the schools of Boston and its vicinity, who will sing national airs and hymns of peace, accompanied by a grand orchestra of one thousand musicians, including all the leading bands and best performers in the United States, with the additional accompanying effects of artillery and infantry firing, chiming of bells, etc.

"The scale upon which it is proposed to carry out this festival, will represent in its magnitude and splendor the greatest cause for national rejoicing that the American people have ever been called upon to celebrate, the restoration of peace and union throughout the land. It will bring together in fraternal greeting the leading men of the nation and people from all parts of the land, and aside from its significance as the first grand national reunion since the close of the war, it will be the greatest feast of sublime and inspiring harmony that has ever been heard in any part of the world.

"Subscription—season ticket, admitting three (one gentleman and two ladies), to all concerts and other entertainments throughout the festival, $100. Fifteen hundred subscribers will secure the entire fulfillment of the undertaking."

"The structure in which such an immense affair is to occur of course will have to be a gigantic one, and will exceed in size anything ever erected in this country. The location has not been decided upon, and will be subject to the decision of the city government. It will probably be upon the Common. The building will cover an area of ground five hundred feet long and three hundred feet wide, and will require over eight hundred thousand feet of lumber for its construction. The plan of the building has already been prepared by Mr. F. Allen, architect, at 61 State street, and is very finely executed, as its conception and detail are admirable. It is to be built in coliseum form, the seats sloping gradually from near the 'eaves' of the building to the floor of the parquet. The building will be thirty-five feet high at the eaves, and one hundred and ten feet high from the ground to the apex of the roof. The inclined plane, which extends entirely around the structure, will be constructed in gradually descending steps. On the sides the lowest step will be elevated ten feet above the floor of the parquet, resembling in that respect the first balcony of a theatre. Upon the ends, however, there is a continuance of the inclined plane to the floor of the parquet. The building will be entered from all points of the compass, and there are three entrances upon each side and end, making twelve in all. Two of the entrances upon each side will lead directly up a flight of steps to the upper row of seats, or rather to a promenade ten feet wide, which will extend entirely around the building, making a walk of one thousand eight hundred feet in length. From this there are to be broad aisles through which people can pass easily to and from their seats. It is well to mention in this connection that when it is said that the building will seat fifty thousand people it is meant there will be chairs provided for that number, which will be movable."

The foregoing makes us think of 1 Thess. 4: 16–18, and 5: 6, which reads as follows:

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words. But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, PEACE AND SAFETY; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober."

A CORRECTION. Bro. J. C. Wheeler wishes to say that the statement in "Report of Me. Min. Conf.," that he withdrew from said conference because he believed in the non-reliving of the wicked, is incorrect.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

AID FOR BRO. LEROY JACKSON.

BRO. GRANT:—I am authorized to say, in behalf of a responsible sister, that she will be one of twelve to raise $75 to send Bro. Leroy Jackson to the Memphis school for three months, agreeable to the suggestion which appeared in the Crisis of Jan. 20th. This sister proposes that if eleven others will give $6 each, she will give the other $9.

We hope an immediate and hearty response will be received to this worthy and important object. It appears that Bro. Jackson would be the means of doing much good among his colored brethren, and the freedmen, if he can only obtain a little more education. May God bless the efforts of the friends of the hitherto down-trodden, but now freed men, to educate and lead them to Christ.

T. M. PREBLE.

[Any disposed to act upon the above suggestion, can forward to the Treasurer of the A. A. Mission Society.—ED.

"TOO FAR IN CRIME."

"I am too far in crime to be reached by that." So said a middle-aged, rough-looking man, as I handed him a tract while distributing on one of the principal streets of this city.

"No, no," said I, "you're not too far in crime to be saved by Jesus."

He turned quickly, crossed the street, and I saw him no more. As I passed on, I breathed a silent prayer that God might convict him of sin by his Holy Spirit, show him the great sacrifice for the sins of a dying world, and lead him to put his trust in Him who "came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."

"Too far in crime!" These words are still ringing in my ears. And I shudder to think they express the fear of many who are crushed beneath their load of sin, and groaning in despair, feeling that they are without hope, without God in the world; that their iniquity is greater than may be forgiven.

Dear reader, are these your fears? Are you cast down beneath a load of guilt, and sin, and shame? Do you feel utterly helpless, hopeless, and lost? that you never can free yourself from the burden that rests with mountain weight upon your guilty soul? Do you wish the cloud which has darkened every step of your pathway to be removed forever? If so, I have glad tidings of great joy for thee. Thy debt is paid. Why should the ransomed mourn? "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Look to Jesus, just as you are. Do not stop to better yourself in the least; you never can do it. Every instant of delay is drifting you further and further from Christ. Throw yourself at the feet of Jesus, with all your sins and fears and doubts. Believe that he lived and suffered and died for you; that "he was wounded for your transgressions, and bruised for your iniquities"; that "with his stripes you are healed"; and, "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." Rest, rest, with all your sins, and trials, and sorrows, on the blessed Jesus, and resting you will find peace.

Careless reader, I have a word for you. Are you slighting the mercy of God in the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, by quenching the Holy Spirit, and counting the "blood of the covenant . . . an unholy thing," and hearing with calm indifference the messages of God's grace dispensed on every hand? If you are, beware! "The day of the Lord is near; as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee; thy reward shall return upon thy own head." Tremble, for thy delay may seal thy doom! O! flee to Christ as your only hope, your only refuge. He will save you. Trust in him. "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Now is the accepted time.

A PREACHER WANTED.

BRO. GRANT:—We want a minister of the gospel, who is pure and holy, who does not conform to the maxims, customs and fashions of the day, such as festivals, oyster suppers, picnics, and all gatherings of mirth and pleasure; to be short, who is not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, and is a Holy Ghost preacher, to come here and hold a series of meetings, that the cause of Christ may be built up in this place.

There are two churches in town—Methodist and Christian; but it is difficult to tell a member from the world's people, they act so near alike; and I cannot see for my life as there is any visible change for the better. I am told that the fault is in me; that I am wrong, therefore every one else is wrong. That may be true, but I aim to obey Christ and his apostles, therefore I cannot unite with any but the church of Jesus Christ, that is built on a solid foundation, is not divided, and its members do not conform to this world. I believe that christians are a humble, loving people; hence I find no fault with any that bear good fruit.

Brother Grant, when I look over the list of appointments for preaching in the Crisis, and none for Ohio, it makes me feel sad. Now is there not a Lorenzo Dow in your denomination, who will leave home long enough to teach us what we must do to be saved, and warn the people of the shortness of time, and the necessity of being ready for the burning day? I entreat of some preacher to come to Sparta, Ohio, and give us a start. There are ten or twelve here who love the appearing of Christ, and believe we shall receive our reward at his appearing and kingdom. May the Lord help you to come.

ON REVIVALS.

Good men tell us they are skeptical about revivals where people are asked to rise for prayers and urged to the anxious seat. Men say they do not hold out. In the parable of the sower there were but few that had deep root.

A minister of great experience in revivals, says he never knew a dozen persons converted out of revivals.

We are not to decide how small a test God puts to the mind of the weak and trembling, how small a ray of light reaches the mind. The test to a strong and well enlightened mind will not do for all.

Those churches that doubt the expediency of extra means of grace fall into a formal state. It is good common sense to give the mind to the matter night after night, so that the mind may get fully interested. Therefore we would say to all, Hold extra meetings. the mothers get away in secret and cry to God, and weep over their children.

But some will say, The church is not in the right place. This is the way for them to get into a good state. If men and women will labor for others, all this darkness will be gone.

The great trouble in the Advent body is, too much doctrine, too much effort to give intellectual knowledge, without coming to the simplicity of the gospel.

THE SAINT'S REFUGE.

"God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble."—Psa. 46: 1.

How cheering is the promise of God to the wayfaring christian when tossed on the rough billows of life. How soothing to the child of God, when in trouble, to know that the Lord is near to sustain and comfort. How precious the friendship of Him who will not let a sparrow fall to the ground without his notice. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden," issues from his friendly lips.

There is no cross so heavy but he is ever ready to help; no trouble so great but he is ever ready to give strength to bear it; no affliction so heavy but he is ever present to soothe and comfort the wounded heart; no trial so dark but his presence can lighten and his word and promises strengthen to bear up under all; no danger so imminent but he is ready to shield on every hand; no temptation so strong but he opens a way of escape.

"I will trust in the Lord" says the Psalmist. Yes, it was safe to trust in him then; it is safe to trust in him now, dear brother or sister under trial or in affliction. It is good to flee to the Lord at all times.

God is our refuge from all the various evils and temptations, all the dangers and trials, which beset us on every hand in this world of sin and sorrow. Ye who are in trouble or trials of any kind, flee to the Rock of our salvation. Keep your trust firmly in him. He is a strong tower. He will ever shield us, and bring us safe to the promised land, where sickness, sorrow, sin and death will never be allowed to enter.

May reader and writer be among the number who shall live a life of faith and trust, and enter in through the gates into the city of our God.

"IN THE REGIONS BEYOND."

2 COR. 10: 16.

Early in April last, Bro. Thomas Flint, on his way from Magalloway to Bridgton, made me a visit, and earnestly requested that I should send an appointment by him on his return; to which, after some hesitation, I consented. In about five weeks my companion and I went to Errol, N. H., where our first appointment was given, and found a very respectable gathering of young people at the school-house, near the bridge that here crosses the Androscoggin. We were much pleased with the good order and earnest attention that seemed to pervade the meeting; and, though there are but very few professors of religion here, and but little preaching, yet there is a manifest desire among the people to sustain meetings, and learn the way of life. Friend Davis, at whose house we were very pleasantly entertained, though not himself a professor, has for some three years past taken the supervision of the Sunday school, which is quite interesting.

It may be here said that this region, if not beyond, is so far aside from the beaten path of preachers, as to be seldom visited by them; yet there are many inducements for the faithful servant of God to bear the glad message of salvation before the people here. First, they have not been hardened by over preaching; secondly, they are desirous to maintain Sunday schools, and the principles of good society; thirdly, they appear not to have been perverted by sectarianism.

After our third meeting here on Sunday, we proceeded next morning for the first settlement on the Magalloway river, nine miles distant, where we were very agreeably cared for by Bro. F., in whose new hall we held a meeting in the evening. Here, too, is quite a field for gospel labor, from which doubtless a goodly harvest might be garnered for the Lord. Who will bear the bread and the water of life to the destitute and the famishing?

The Young Pilgrim for February 6th.

"The Beautiful Land,"—verses of much sweetness and beauty. "I don't see the use of prayers,"—a good lesson to boys and girls who get tired of praying. "Working for Jesus," showing how our little christian readers may do good. What is it to be "a Gentleman"? "The secret of Success." "I never knew a Mother's care." "The Snow Man," with a cut. "A Snow Scene." "The Little Doctor." "What would you do?" "Praise." "The Young Pilgrim's Love-Feast." "Who are Drunkards?" "Be careful, young persons." "Gambling." Bible Questions, Enigma, Puzzle, etc.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. H. Williams.

BRO. GRANT:—Although some time has elapsed since I have written for the Crisis, I have not forgotten the many friends of like precious faith, who doubtless wish to hear of my success in the gospel. That the work is laborious, all who enter the field learn by experience; for none but earnest workers are successful in promulgating truth.

In pressing this battle I have encountered poverty, persecutions, and trials, too numerous to mention; often have I received forty stripes from the tongue lash, which cut to the very heart; yet by God's grace I have been enabled to count it all joy, and conclude that such is the preacher's salary now. But, thank God, we shall soon exchange the cross for the crown.

When first I felt the "wo," many were the suggestions of Satan. I thought of home, of friends, of honor, of my incompetency and ill health, and many other things; still the Lord said, Go preach "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." After examining the many promises to those thus called, I ventured to trust God. With some timidity and weakness I took hold of the gospel plough, and commenced operations. But, alas! the field was uneven; my plough came in contact with hearts of stone, roots of bitterness, and great logs of dead professors. Often have these obstacles caused the plough to shake me terribly. With sad heart and tried patience the thought of resting in the furrow till Jesus comes has entered my mind; but my team, ever true, has taught me a lesson in faithfulness, and not wishing to lose the kingdom by looking back, I am still ploughing.

But perhaps it would be just to speak of the sweet connected with the bitter; at least it is more gratifying to human nature. When man succeeds in an enterprise that he loves, it affords him great pleasure: this is true of the Christian minister; when souls are converted under his preaching, he is paid, in one sense of the word, for all his labor.

It has been my privilege, while laboring in northern New York, to see many souls hopefully converted to God, and to bury them with Christ in baptism. In some places our Covenant has been introduced and adopted. However, it has been my lot to labor in localities where the inhabitants are poor in this world's goods; and as the result, my pecuniary remuneration has been small; but we feel to thank God, and the friends who have contributed, for what we have received, and will wait till Jesus comes for our great reward.

Since engaging in this work I have labored under great embarrassment for the want of books. I need very much Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, a standard Bible Dictionary, a Cottage Cyclopedia, Canon of the Holy Scriptures by Prof. L. Gaussen, and Emphatic Diaglott, advertised in the Crisis. For the want of means I am unable to purchase the above-named works, and will probably have to get along without them, unless some of the brethren who have means to spare and are interested in the mission of northern N. Y. feel disposed to aid in this direction; however, we leave it all with God, and pray that his will may be done in all things.

I am determined to press forward in this work until I am crowned with immortality. May the time soon come when we shall enter into the full fruition of God's promises. Thy brother in Christ, C. H. WILLIAMS.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a pilgrim and stranger here on the earth, as are all the children of Abraham. I desire to be faithful to what is committed to my trust, though it be ever so small. I am poor in this world (yet rich in faith, I trust), having left all to follow Jesus in the way of holiness and truth. I sometimes see the Crisis, and observe that the sisters write. Now in my humble abode the angels seem to whisper sweet words to me, too sweet to die away and be forgotten; they may not be of any worth to any, but myself; but I send a few thoughts, and if you think them worthy, please use them.

Sweet Charity! Heaven's sweetest, purest gift. How we love thy soft melody. Without thee the tongues of men and angels are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. Thy sweet voice stills the angry tempest of the soul, and bids our fears be calm. We love and adore the Giver of such a gracious gift, condescending to dwell in houses of clay, made pure by the blood of Jesus.

Thy charms sparkle and dazzle as we gaze, admire, love, and adore. We listen to hear thee speak, for sweet and harmonious is the sound. As the melting tones strike our senses, they echo back to heaven and thrill its mighty hosts.

1 Cor. 12: 4. "Charity suffereth long and is kind." How long?

"Never cease—till youth's bright dreams are fled,
And earthly joys are mouldering with the dead;
And bitter wrongs have dashed the cup of bliss,
That virtue prizes more than worlds like this;
And sit and sing amid the ruins wild,
And bear an olive leaf to the afflicted child.

Child of heaven—too kind to do thee wrong,
And every needful gift to thee belong.
I envy not the rich, the proud, the gay,
And am not rash to praise my own pure way;
To modest mien I do myself incline,
Seek not my own, but other's good I mind;
Am not provoked when scorn is on me cast,
And think no evil, though the proud do boast:
Rejoice not when the wicked rule instead,
But in the truth, and are made free indeed.

I bear all things that mortals e'er befel,
Believe all things, the sacred page doth tell,
And hope all things, the promises make sure,
To gain eternal life all things endure.
I never fail, though prophecies decrease,
And tongues and knowledge, every thing, do cease.
But part is known, and prophesy the same,
But when perfection comes then all is plain.

I when a child so spake and understood,
And reasoned thus until a man matured,
Now through a glass have the dark riddles shone,
Then face to face shall know as I am known.
And now abide the threefold gift of heaven:
Faith, Hope and Charity, the last the sweetest given."

BRO. GRANT:—I have been a free subscriber of the World's Crisis for the past two years; and since its columns have gladdened so many of my lone hours, and comforted me in my loneliness with the blessed hope of "resting by and by," I feel it my duty as well a pleasure to tender to you my hearty thanks, and may the "Father of mercy and God of all comfort" bless you for thus remembering one of "his little ones." MARY R. BROWN.

From Bro. W. A. Sheffield.

BRO. GRANT:—Bro. P. A. Smith commenced a series of meetings on the 18th ult., which continued three days, held in our new Advent building, ten miles north of Lake City, and in a locality known as Suwannee Shoals.

Our church was built thirty by thirty-five feet, and on the last day of the meeting was filled to overflowing; and there were not over a dozen persons present who did not believe the doctrine advocated by Bro. Smith, who is battling successfully in a new field, alone and oppressed by disease. He is rapidly overcoming the prejudices of the people, and all other obstacles. He is certainly a faithful steward. There was but one baptized at the meeting above alluded to, though much good was done in preparing the minds of others who admit the correctness of the doctrine, and will ultimately join. We number in this section of Florida over fifty Adventists, and Bro. Smith will, if the Lord permits, commence a series of meetings six miles north of the new church, on the 16th.

If Bro. Smith could remain with us and preach more constantly, much more good could be done; but living in Jacksonville, some sixty miles from Lake City by rail road, it is only occasionally that we can hear him preach. Bro. Smith brought up when he came last, a couple of northern brethren and their wives who expressed themselves well pleased with the country and people and a desire to come out again. We have prayer-meetings regularly, and a number of our new converts lead in these meetings.

We have also gotten up a Bible class under the direction of Bro. Smith, and have chosen one of our new members for a leader, which position he is to hold four meetings, and is then relieved by some other brother chosen for the purpose.

Our prayer-meeting services commence at half past ten o'clock A. M., and the Bible class at two o'clock P. M. We take our dinners with us to church and eat them between the services. The last class subject was the new birth—what is it, and when does it take place? Though there was a division of ideas, yet after the summing up by the leader it was unanimously decided to be the resurrection. The next subject will be the inheritance of the saints, its nature and location.

W. A. SHEFFIELD, Steward of the church.

Columbia Co., Fla. Jan. 1869.

From Bro. Wm. Johnston.

DEAR BRO. * * * I meet with much opposition on account of my adherence to these views, and often wish I could be where I might enjoy the society of brethren of like precious faith. For more than fifty years I have entertained them, and during all that time have been too fearful of hurting the feelings of my christian brethren by openly propagating them, until these few past years. Yet, in all my discourses and conversations, either in public or private, I never made use of such unscriptural expressions as "immortal soul," "deathless spirit," "the death that never dies," "eternal misery," "triune God," "holy trinity," etc., etc.

Thus I escaped censure until within these five last years, when it was thought best, by some of our ruling spirits (and there are some in every church), not to give me any appointments unless I could harmonize my views with those of the church. Still they renew my license year after year; and now I am determined to preach, and spread abroad the truth wherever I may have an opportunity, hoping that the good Master will forgive my past weakness, and enable me for the future to go forth without the camp; and if reproaches come, to bear them patiently for Him who has borne so much for me.

As it regards the Sabbath question, I verily believe that the seventh day of the week is "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." On this account I am also much opposed. O! what imperfect creatures we are in this state of existence. But thanks to be God, if we continue faithful unto the grace given us till Jesus comes, then "when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality," we shall see eye to eye, and shout, "O death, where is thy sting?" and live with him forever. Yours in love.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON.

New Bloomfield, Pa., Jan. 27th.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Pray for the Star of Hope Mission. God is still pouring out his Spirit there. I have left good and faithful laborers there at work for God, feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, carrying medicine and nourishment to the sick, through the snow and rain and cold, with wet feet and skirts, all mud and filth, going up and down the cellars and garrets, themselves weak, faint and cold from empty stomachs and long walks. O, you who have all the comforts of life, remember these silent workers for God!

To-day I am writing these lines in a nice warm room at Sister D.'s, of Portland, very comfortable indeed; but I look out the window and see it is raining very hard. How quick my mind wanders to New York. My heart is with the laborers. I have been through those trials, and sorrows, and labors of love, and as I see them in my mind going up and down the streets, through this mud, carrying clothes to the Sunday school scholars, to have them ready for the morrow, I see them come in cold and hungry, and but little comfort there. No wonder they feel homesick. As my mind goes out to the Mission house, I cannot keep back my tears, and away down deep in my heart I say, God bless the missionaries. I would say to you, dear sisters, though hundreds of miles from you in body, I am with you in heart, and I know Jesus is with you. Lift up your heads. Your days of sorrow are almost over. In a little while we shall see the King in his beauty.

RELIGION OF THE HEART.

Empires, kingdoms, cities, have arisen and gone down. Time with his iron teeth has crushed hundreds of generations, but religion has survived the wreck of nations and republics. Its influence upon the heart and life is just what it was in the days of Abraham. Away with all proposed substitutes! We must have the religion of the heart, pure and undefiled, or no religion at all. The heart must be changed, the whole man made new, and filled with the love of God. This is the old kind of religion, and the best of all. We must have spiritual life, spiritual power—Holy Ghost religion.

Oh, this endless round of forms! without one spark of fire; without any signs of life—dead, heavy, spiritless. It won't do. The cause of God demands energy, life, spiritual life and power. These everlasting drones, what can they do in this great work? These kid-gloved and silver-slippered christians, what have they ever done for the salvation of souls? They come and go like shadows, and leave no trace behind them.

The world needs earnest men, men of God; men baptized with the Holy Ghost and fire; men that will lay off their coats and roll up their sleeves, and reach down into the mud and mire to rescue perishing souls. This is the old way, the way our fathers did, and the way christians will do now, if they are baptized with the Holy Ghost.

But there seems to be a settled determination to move along smoothly—to have everything exceedingly nice. The church-house, the minister and members must correspond. Everything must go according to order. Well, order is all right, provided it is God's order, and provided men and women are saved from sin by it. Whatever order will accomplish the greatest amount of good, is the best possible order. But is no use to hide from our minds the necessity of deep, heartfelt earnestness. The people must be moved, the heart be stirred to its very bottom. Men must be aroused from the deep sleep of sin. Time is short, and souls are too precious to go dreaming and mincing as many do.—Ex.

Obituaries.

Bro. B. was one of the first who embraced the Advent faith in that vicinity, in which and for which faith he has lived and labored and sacrificed for more than twenty-five years.

About fourteen months previous to his death, he was thrown from a carriage and so injured about the spine as to cause the most excruciating pain until worn out, when he sank as the flickering candle in its socket. He had no hope in the grave. He believed that death was the penalty for sin, therefore he fought it bravely. A dear companion, upheld by an unseen hand, watched over him with tender care and enduring patience until the last; and she, with a daughter, the church and community, deeply mourn the loss of a just and good man.

By special request of the deceased, the religious services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Eld. I. H. Shipman and others. Text, 2 Tim. 4: 6-8. N. Wheeler.

Bryant. Died at Bryant's Pond, Me., Jan. 28th, Bro. Alexander Bryant, aged sixty-two years.

Bro. Bryant was for many years a lover of the Lord, and one of the first in Maine to embrace the doctrine of the Savior's speedy coming. Though suffering with disease for several years, he did not murmur, but was enabled by grace to rejoice in the hope that in a little while he should find rest in the better land. He rests in hope of the soon coming of the Lord, to give him immortality; leaving a lonely widow, several children, and a large circle of friends, to mourn his loss. May "great grace" be with them all. R. R. York.

Turner. Died in Etna, Jan. 21st, Joseph Freddie, only son of Charles H. and Sr. Mary Turner, aged four months.

May God console the afflicted family, and prepare them to meet the loved one in the coming morning. Words of comfort were spoken by Rev. J. Morrill, from Matt. 19: 14. S. F. E.

Bates. Died in Cambridgeport, Dec. 2nd, 1868, Bro. Edward Bates, aged seventy-six years.

Bro. Bates was a great sufferer, but bore his sufferings with christian fortitude. He died in the triumphs of faith, and the "blessed hope" of the resurrection was his comfort to the last. In behalf of his afflicted family, A. P. Moore.

Harris. Died in No. Adams, Mass., Jan. 24th, 1869, of inflammation of head and bowels, Geo. C., infant son of Bro. and Sr. A. & L. Harris.

May the blessing of God rest upon the mourning circle. The writer endeavored to speak words comfort. Geo. A. Streeter.

Madagascar.—It is estimated that there were one hundred and fifty thousand persons present at the coronation of the Queen of Madagascar, in September last. This Queen has renounced idolatry, and instead of an idol being placed at her side during the ceremony, there was a copy of the Bible, while on the four sides of the canopy over her throne there appeared in gilt letters, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men." In her coronation speech the Queen said, with reference to Christianity, "There is no compulsion, and there is no prevention, for God made you." This indicates that henceforth there is to be full religious liberty in Madagascar.

Feb. 4. Bands of Carlists have made their appearance in Catalonia. They come from the valley of Andona and seek to produce a rising against the Provisional Government. Troops have been sent out to disperse them. The press of this city, fearing civil war, urge the Government to take active measures, and the people to unite against the reactionary party.

Feb. 5. The Provisional Government will present to the Constitutional Cortes the draft of a Constitution embracing the clause prohibiting slavery in all the Spanish possessions. It will be left to the Cortes to decide as to the method of freeing the slaves.

The erection of a synagogue in this city has been licensed by the authorities.

Paris, Feb. 4. Advices from South America report that a Brazilian force has gone to Asuncion to establish a Provisional Government.

London, Feb. 3. A dispatch has just been received from Athens conveying the unexpected intelligence that the Greek Ministers have refused to agree to signing the protocol of the Paris Conference, and that they have tendered their resignations to the King.

Feb. 5. The Powers participating in the Paris Conference have granted a brief space of time for Greece to decide on their proposals.

Paris, Feb. 7. Queen Isabella has issued another manifesto, denouncing the revolution in Spain and asserting her right to the throne.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Feb. 3. About 9 o'clock this evening a heavy thunderstorm took place here, which lasted about a half an hour. The flashes of lightning were frequent and sharp, followed by heavy claps of thunder.

Havana, Feb. 5. Further advices from Mexico state that Quiroga and other Generals have pronounced in favor of Santa Anna and the movement is progressing.

Jose de Arnas, the Peace Commissioner to the insurgents, has returned unsuccessful. The insurgents demand that sufficient guarantees be given them that Gen. Dulce and the Spanish Government will comply with the promises made. Authentic information from Puerto Principe denies the statement that Gen. Augustina Arrango was assassinated by order of Quesada. In view of their return to arms and of the demands made by the insurgents, it is certain that the war will continue. The fate of the island can only be decided by arms, as the Government cannot grant the demands of the insurrectionists. The war in the Eastern Department continues. Santiago and the immediate surroundings were free of revolutionists.

Salnave has attacked and destroyed the town of Forbeck. He also bombarded and destroyed Port Salat, and captured Aquin. The inhabitants of Aux Cayes and the other towns in that vicinity are panic stricken, and all who are emigrating to Jamaica.

Ballooning across the Atlantic.—Mons. A. Chevalier, the Swiss aeronaut, who proposes to make a balloon voyage across the Atlantic to Europe, arrived in this country a fortnight ago. He is quite young—only about thirty—but has had an enlarged experience as a balloonists during the past twelve years. He has spent a fortune on flying machines—his latest invention being a steam one, described as being "constructed after the model of the bird—long, wing-like sails project from either side of the ship, and a fan-like arrangement at the stern stands in the place of the tail of the bird, and serves its purpose in raising or depressing the machine in its course through the air." The worst feature of this machine was its persistent refusal to ascend. By the common mode of ballooning Chevalier has made hundreds of ascents in every country in Europe and in Australia. Once he sailed in his balloon from Paris beyond the boundaries of Russia. On another occasion he crossed the St. George's Channel from Dublin into England. In one of his trips he made the extraordinary flight of seven hundred miles in four hours. In another ascent, made just before coming to this country, he was driven forty-five miles in an hour.

His trans-Atlantic trip from New York he undertakes partly for the great effect it will have, if successful, on his business on the other side of the water, and not less to determine the existence of a continuous "belt" of westerly currents which the philosophers say must exist at the height of 8000 to 10,000 feet above the surface of the earth. M. Chevalier has brought with him, in complete readiness, the balloon in which he proposes to make his perilous journey. It is of a peculiar shape, and of these dimensions: ninety-five feet in height, one hundred and fifty feet in diameter; capacity for gas, one hundred and twenty-five thousand cubic feet. The car, being made of bamboo, and in the shape of a house, resembles a long bamboo hut, and will probably accommodate as many passengers as will desire to go upon the voyage. M. Chevalier is desirous of making the start at an early date as possible, and, at all events, before the return of warm weather. His reason for this is that the balloon would suffer a dangerous loss of gas by expansion in the heat of warm suns. Chevalier has shown scientific men that he is not a mere showman; has interested them in his undertaking, and will proceed to perfect the preparations for his interesting and unprecedented voyage under propitious circumstances.—Journal.

"The Coming Ship."—The "coming ship," as the intended rival of the Great Eastern is designated, has at present been exhibited in model only at San Francisco. It is to be of the same size as the Great Eastern, except that instead of twenty-eight feet it will draw only eighteen feet, and it will carry proportionally less tonnage. It is designed to carry four times as many passengers as any present style of ship, and to substitute for bunks regular beds; it will also give four times the space to a state room. The San Francisco Times says: "The present mode of bunking passengers is unworthy of the age. Sea sickness, if preventible by construction, should be rendered obsolete. This desideratum is attained in Thomas Silver's coming ship; it is secured by the proportions of the ship, and by their being thirty feet less of the hull out of water than in the Great Eastern; but the motion is rendered almost imperceptible by a new device. The state rooms, instead of being at the outside limits of the vessel, are amidships; that is, along the centre line of the ship, where the roll is scarcely perceptible. The saloon is to be five hundred feet long, and clear of obstructions. It is not for dining. Instead of a public table there are to be two competing restaurants at the extremities adjoining the saloons. The ship will sell passage only; the board being payable as meals are ordered. It is contemplated to carry second class passengers and third class in the same way. The present first class bunks will be for third class berths."

Condition of Arkansas.—It is officially stated that in Arkansas, during the three months preceding the calling out of the militia, there were received at the Governor's headquarters authentic accounts of over two hundred different murders perpetrated with impunity in that State, and very many of the most fiendish outrages; but during the forty days which have passed since martial law was declared, but one single murder and not a single outrage has been heard of in the State.

Passing Events.

☞ The recent mild weather brought out the Mayflower buds, a number of which were found in Plymouth cemetery a week ago last Sunday.

☞ A cold climate would seem to be conducive to a long life. The Russian journals state that, at Irkutsk, in Siberia, of the persons who died last year, not less than twelve were 100 years old and upwards; of that number six were over 110; two had reached their 126th year, and one died at the age of 131.

☞ Velocipedists have encroached so greatly upon the privileges of pedestrians in Lyons, France, that the Mayor has issued a proclamation compelling the former to attach lanterns to their machines at night, and to keep the middle of the street.

☞ The wages paid Louis Napoleon for his services as Emperor are $8,000,000 and he owes $16,000,000.

☞ The oldest minister in Vermont is Rev. Ammi Nichols, of Braintree. He is in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and the sixty-fourth of his ministry, having preached in Braintree fifty-eight years. Next to him comes Rev. Samuel Parmelee, D.D., of Westford, who is eighty-seven years old and is in the sixty-second year of his ministry. He has preached more than 10,000 sermons and attended about 100 funerals.

☞ The Empress Eugenie is said to have a very cordial hatred for Prince Napoleon. She looks upon him as her rival in the regency in case of the Emperor's death, and is said to have been in ill humor all the day she heard that the Prince, who has been very ill, was out of danger.

☞ Wisconsin has a population of nearly five hundred thousand, of whom three hundred thousand are Roman Catholics, and not over fifty thousand are connected with evangelical churches.

☞ An Austrian author asserts that Napoleon I. had twenty-one illegitimate children, of whom five are still alive. The Emperor Napoleon III. supported nearly half of them, while he refused to do anything for others.

☞ The Montana Democrat says that two-thirds of the winter season has elapsed there without affording anything like severe winter weather. They are enjoying weather which would do ample justice to the boasted beauty of fair Italy's clime. Days are magnificent, the nights gorgeous.

☞ Queen Victoria's eldest daughter, the Crown Princess of Prussia, is said to be strongly in favor of woman's rights, and entertains advanced views on all social, educational and theological subjects.

☞ The Great Powers have granted a delay of eight days for the Greek Government to make its final decision in regard to the proposals of the Paris Conference.

☞ Six hundred and seventy-three miles of the French Atlantic cable have been manufactured in England, and the whole will be done in season for the Great Eastern to commence the laying of it in August next.

☞ The Presbyterian knows a church where the choir is paid two thousand, and the contributions to domestic missions do not amount to one hundred.

☞ The majority of New York ladies have laid aside hoops.

☞ Great excitement prevails in Athens.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 26th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. Sibley, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

The Advent Christian Quarterly Conference of New York State, will be held at Springwater Valley, Livingston Co., N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, March 4th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Brethren and sisters, come to this feast. Come praying earnestly that sinners may be converted to God, and that much good may be done. Probation is almost over. O Lord, help us all to feel how much is depending upon us as christians.

Conference at Dover, Me.

There will be a conference held in Dover, Me., at Brans' Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. In behalf of the Eastern Maine Conference the brethren here are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. It is a new place for such a meeting. Call on Brn. Bray and Royal. Arrangements will be made to care for visitors. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend, and lend all that aid the gospel requires as far as possible. Bro. Robert Hall, from N. B., is expected to be in attendance with us. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of men, and God shall have the glory. In behalf of the church,

Israel Damman.

That Second Mission Tent.

We are now free from debt as a conference, when the pledges for tents and missions are all collected. "The Maine Ministerial Conference," at its late session, voted that the tent committee consult with those interested, and then determine whether to provide a second tent for Maine for the coming season. $100 is pledged, $40 more in the treasury. The brethren East pledged for this object last year $158 at once. Will they do it now? Will all interested in tent missions, within the State, write to me at once, giving their minds for or against it? In behalf of the Committee,

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting or conference at West Deerfield, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Feb. 17th, at 7 o'clock, and continue through the week, and over Sunday. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity and adjoining towns are requested to come and labor for the salvation of the perishing. Faithful and able servants of God are expected to be present to preach the word. For the brethren,

Enoch Morrill.

Washington, Ct.

A series of meetings will commence at Washington, Ct., Wednesday evening, Feb. 10th, and continue over the Sabbath. As this is a new field, we hope the brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will come in and lend us a helping hand.

Alex. Elliot.
S. H. Glover.
C. H. Sweet.

Portland, Me.

Meetings are held in Advent Hall, Cushman's Block, 353½ Congress St., three times on the Sabbath, and Tuesday and Friday evenings, at 7½ o'clock. Preaching brethren from abroad, wishing to send appointments to Portland, will please correspond first with Eld. R. R. York, or with either of the following committee:

H. C. Freeman, James Berry, S. K. Dyer, } Church Committee.

Pine Swamp, Ct.

A protracted meeting will commence (D. V.), at Pine Swamp, Ct., Tuesday evening, Feb. 23d, and continue over the Sabbath. God was with us in the meeting which we held there in December, and we believe he will be in this. Come and enjoy the season with us.

Bro. Thomas H. Jones is desired to give information through the Crisis where he is laboring; where his post-office address is, or how he can be reached by letter. Many inquiring friends in Dover, N. H., and elsewhere are anxious to know.

Notice.

Brethren wishing to preach at Collinsville, will please first consult Seth Woodruff, Unionville, Conn.

Notice.

As I am at liberty after March 1st, churches desiring my labors can correspond with me at Sandy Hill, N. Y., for a few weeks. C. H. Leverton.

Notice.

Any Adventists in St. Paul, Minn., or vicinity, will confer a favor on their brethren of like precious faith, by sending their address to Edwin T. Himes, Minneapolis, Minn.

Notice.

Pictures of Chloe Lankton and her residence in New Hartford, Ct., can be had of J. C. Garriques, 608 Arch Street, Philadelphia, by enclosing $1.00. The proceeds, above cost, to go to the benefit of Chloe.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, my mail, 10 cts.

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

9. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.

10. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

"MY CANDLE WILL SOON BE OUT."

The hour was late, and the night was dark,
  The blast was severely keen,
While, wrapped in gloom, in a dismal room,
  A woman at work was seen.
And as she plied her needle, she eyed
  Her glimmer with anxious doubt;
And, faint and sick, said, "I must be quick,
  My candle will soon be out."

O man of God! by the burial clod,
  Which soon may be turned for thee;
By life's brief stay, by the judgment day,
  By time, by eternity.
With every nerve thy Redeemer serve,
  And spend not a day without
Striving to win precious souls from sin,
  For thy candle will soon be out.

Thy Master's course, till he reached the cross,
  Was one of incessant toil;
He bore thy woes, he subdued thy foes,
  That thou mightest share the spoil.
To do God's will, his law to fulfill,
  He constantly went about;
With every power he improved each hour,
  As his candle would soon be out.

Be stirred, my soul, thou art near thy goal,
  Time flies on the swiftest wing;
Work while 'tis day, and in every way
  Thy powers into action bring.
Let my life be bright as a shining light,
  My spirit like Christ's, devout;
My days are few, there is much to do,
  My candle will soon be out.

O sinner! think of the feeble link
  Which holds thee above the grave;
If that should snap—oh, woeful mishap—
  No power thy soul could save.
Hell is the end to which sinners tend,
  And short is the longest route;
Weigh well thy fate, ere it be too late,
  The candle will soon be out.

Whate'er you be, you will shortly see
  The Judge of the earth appear,
Now, now be wise, for the dread assize,
  The day of the Lord, is near.
To fix your fate in a changeless state,
  The Lord will descend with a shout;
O seek his face in this day of grace,
  For your candle will soon be out.

For the World's Crisis.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.
OR,
The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER FIVE.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

11. When do the wicked receive their reward?

The wicked will have their reward assigned to them at the same time the righteous will have their reward assigned to them. But the wicked will not have their reward executed or completed then. And so with the righteous. They are to be rewarded with "life"; or, in other words, they will have their reward assigned to them when Christ comes "the second time" to judge "the quick and the dead." This will be the time of their judicial judgment; but it will take eternity to bestow on them their full reward. So with the wicked; they will have their reward assigned to them at the judicial judgment, at the same time the righteous are rewarded by assignment, when the "Lord Jesus Christ" "shall judge the quick [living] and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1. But the wicked will not receive their executive judgment until "death and hades" deliver up the dead which are in them; and then they will be "cast into the lake of fire." And in this lake of fire they will receive their full reward, which will be "the second death" (Rev. 21: 8; Ps. 11: 6); and this will be at the end of the "one thousand years" mentioned in Rev. 20. This view will not conflict with Matt. 13: 40–43; 16: 27; 25: 41–46; 2 Thess. 1: 7–10; 2 Pet. 3: 7; and such like passages.

The words "then" and "when" in these texts just referred to, do not signify that all the events brought to view will be fulfilled at once, any more than they do in the following texts:—"Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you," etc. Matt. 24: 9. This delivering up of the saints for persecution and death, was not confined to a few years, but continued through hundreds of years. "Then shall be great tribulation," etc. Matt. 24: 21. This "great tribulation" also was not confined to a few years, but continued through hundreds of years. "When ye shall hear of wars and commotions," etc. Luke 21: 9. This hearing of wars, etc., was not confined to a year, but covered a space of many years. "When he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth," etc. John 16: 13. Now this work of the Holy Spirit has not been confined to a few years, but has already continued more than eighteen hundred years. Thus we see that these "thens" and "whens" in their application cover a space of many hundreds of years.

So of the "whens" in 2 Thess. 1: 6–10. There are two whens spoken of in this text; and they refer to the time "when" Christ "shall be revealed from heaven" to give the saints "rest" from trouble; and to the time "when" Christ is "to be glorified in his saints"; and also to the time "when" the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord."

Now must all this be confined to the exact time "when" Christ is "revealed from heaven"? If so, then we may conclude that the "rest" for the saints and their glorification will all be fulfilled then. But we know that the "rest" for the saints and their glorification will be continued throughout eternity.

Hence, sometime during the period covered by this word "when," the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." This word "glorified" signifies "honored, dignified, exalted to glory." And must this glory and dignity be confined to the exact time when Christ shall be "revealed from heaven"? Certainly not; for in Rev. 5: 13, it is said that this "honor and glory" will be given "unto the Lamb for ever and ever." And this "honor and glory" will continue after even the wicked have been destroyed, after the "everlasting" punishment has been inflicted; and every foe, sin, and the effects of sin, shall have all been removed from the earth. But Christ will still be "glorified in his saints" long after these things shall have passed away. Therefore, we see that this "when" does not have its complete fulfillment at the precise time "when" Christ shall be "revealed from heaven."

As Christ comes to remain, all that is done during his stay may justly be said to take place "when" he comes, or any time after he has come. Therefore, when the Son of God shall come as Judge of the world, "then" during his stay he will reward both the righteous and the wicked. But it will take eternity to give the saints their full reward; but the wicked are to receive their full reward "when," as it is written,—"Fire" will come "down from God out of heaven, and devour them."

If sinners would escape the "second death," they must now seek Christ as the only Life-giver. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL.

Bro. Grant:—The following is part of a letter of the New York correspondent of the Republican Statesman, printed here in Concord. It so perfectly illustrates the "woe" which Jesus said should rest upon rich men, that I send it to you for publication. The writer is a Wall St. man, having been for many years connected with the business for which that street is famous. It is, therefore, reliable. Yours truly, C. W. Sargent.

"We have seen many cases in which money proved a terrible curse. For instance, old John Jacob Astor lived for years in a state of extreme distress. The care of his property and the fear of poverty wrought a frame of mind which seemed akin to madness. He would consult all his friends about investments; and if the investments chosen on such an occasion declined in value, his distress was extreme. His parsimony became excessive, and, between that and his fear of losing, all his life was a burden to himself and those about him. Another case was that of Mr. H——, who got rich keeping a retail store and by close economy made a fortune.

Trade in due time moved up town; and Mr. H. being now advanced in years, sold his stand for a large sum and moved with his family to a modern house. There the style of housekeeping was changed, and they lived at more expense. This gave the old man much annoyance and prayed upon him so that to escape his troubles he one day cut his throat. The founder of one of the greatest banking houses in Wall street, Mr. P——, having retired into opulent indolence, became so unhappy over his wealth that he committed suicide in a similar manner.

Another capitalist sold a piece of real estate, which was resold a short time after at the trifling advance of $500. He was so much annoyed by this that he lost health and appetite, and finally was found hanging in his own garret. A rich member of the bar shot himself, a few years ago, in the broad corridor of the second story of the City Hall. He was a bachelor, which might explain part of his misfortunes, but it was the devouring care of a large property which drove him to his fate. About the same time a leading and opulent leather dealer in the 'swamp' committed suicide. This was Mr. L—— & Co., a concern whose successors are still among the kings of the leather trade. Mr. L—— lived in grand style and owned a fine gallery of pictures; but, after all, the grandeur of his position was too great a load, and he sought relief in the most fearful of crimes. We give names in initial, and they will be recognized by many. All of these tragedies came under our cognizance, and we could increase the list were it necessary to do so.

Among other misfortunes which attend wealth, is insanity; and several of our most successful business men are now in various lunatic asylums. Mr. J——, a member of a great hardware house, died a few years ago in the 'Hartford Retreat.' Mr. H——, another leading merchant, was, when we last heard from him, in the Utica asylum. Mr. O——, a large dealer in provisions, and a man of wealth, being lately missed from home, was found at Binghamton in a state of lunacy.

Another very painful case is that of a Mr. A——, who, though under forty-five, has made $500,000; but this success has turned his head, and he is now among the incurables in the Bloomingdale asylum, while his fine estate is in the hands of trustees. Insanity is the great avenger of those laws of health which are broken by nearly all who seek wealth: and we do not wonder that the pastor of a Fifth avenue church was wont to include in his 'long prayer' a petition for all who were threatened with insanity.

Among other miseries of the rich in this city is the ruin of their boys. A physician who attended the last hours of Mr. C——, a millionaire, perceiving that the sick man's end was near, said 'You had better send for his children.' 'I can find Dick,' replied the coachman when ordered to this errand, 'I know where he is, it's at—porter-house;' and in the course of an hour the drunken wretch reeled in to see his dead father. The death of this Mr. C—— was caused by sudden excitement growing out of business. He had sold a house worth $100,000, which was an unusual event, and then he received news that a large piece of real estate was threatened with heavy depreciation. All this came in one day; and before another sunrise he was a corpse.

CONTENTMENT.

The poet says a thing of beauty is a joy forever; and the beau monde seem to have accepted that as orthodox. That beautiful belle has more beaux than any other young lady in the village. Is she positively happy? After attiring from the most beautiful wardrobe and ornamenting with the most costly jewelry, we look in the mirror and it seems to echo beauty, beauty. Are we truly happy? Some think that if they can have all they wish they are completely happy. Money will purchase every thing we wish, therefore it will make us happy. Wealth will gratify us with friends and influence; in short, it will make us completely happy. While we admire well developed and active bodies, we place far above in our estimate, genius and talent. And people call us intelligent; then we are comparatively, yes, supremely happy.

Thus men reason, some for beauty; some for wealth; some for genius. But if experience be a criterion, beauty, wealth and genius combined will not make contentment, and without contentment there is no lasting happiness.

"A contented mind is a continual feast." Contentment is the key to happiness, the satisfier of the soul. Contentment is defined by Webster as a resting or satisfaction of mind without disquiet. "Godliness with contentment is great gain." 1 Tim. 6: 6. Contentment without external honor is humility. Grew says, I would not be contented to remain in ignorance and vice. Do the best you can and be contented. I cannot conceive how a rational mind can be contented without the blessings of the christian religion; that alone can satisfy the longing of the soul, and make the happy possessor contented.

A clear conscience is a conscience at rest, satisfied. Religion will give happiness now and forever. He who has his life hid with Christ in God is safe,—contented. Beauty of soul may remain unchanged by time, but earthly beauty must yield her charms to the destroyer. Your wealth may give you a place here, but cannot in eternity. You may by nature possess talent and by study accomplishment, but if you have not a clear conscience before God and man contentment will be a stranger, and the blessings of eternity unknown.

The life of her who has contentment that comes from the christian religion will glide smoothly, beautifully and evenly along, gathering strength and happiness, towards the ocean of immortality. Clouds may rise in the mental horizon; the pall of death may call forth cries of bitterest anguish and deepest grief. Contentment, like the morning sunbeams, lights up the horizon and dries the tears of anguish and grief, leaving you in the noonday of happiness.

We admit the worth of beauty, wealth and talent, as aids to happiness, when religion controls, developes and strengthens them. There is no beauty to be compared to the beauty of holiness; it is the garb of the angels. There can be no wealth to be compared with a treasure in heaven. Heaven's banks never fail. There is no accomplishment so great as to be accomplished in doing good. In helping others you best help yourself. Beauty will call forth the praise of men, but virtue will secure the favor of God.

Wealth may give us honor and station here, but goodness will give us a place in heaven. Learning may write our names in bronze and marble with an iron pen, but religion will write them with the pen of atonement in the Lamb's book of life. Contentment is the poor man's wealth; the miser's most distant neighbor.

The contented home is a miniature of heaven, and its children are ministering angels. Satisfy the requirements of a conscience enlightened by grace; do duty, and when this mortal shall have put on immortality, then contentment will be consummated.

REV. HENRY DANA WARD.

Bro. Grant:—Last week I was urged to go and hear a man by the name of Ward,—an old man, who was from Philadelphia. The name sounded familiar to me, and as he had been preaching on the prophecies, and his subject that evening (and it was his last) was the new heavens and earth, of course I was drawn to hear him. I had not been there long (in the Freeman Place Chapel, under the auspices of the Old South Church), before I inquired the full name of the preacher, and to my surprise I learned it was Henry Dana Ward, an Episcopal minister from Philadelphia. It will be remembered by those living, that twenty-eight years ago last fall, at the first conference in Boston, this noble standard-bearer was present and delivered one of the excellent discourses on that occasion (which was put in print, and we have it now). I knew that if he had not changed (like others) his views, I should be extremely gratified to hear him; and as his subject is one of the glorious parts of the Bible theme, I at once resolved to put on paper with my pencil all the best parts I could of his discourse, which I took down into notes. For the benefit of your readers, I have written them out.

The services were opened by Dr. Blagden, senior pastor of the Old South Church in this city (Orthodox). He read the twenty-first chapter of Rev., then offered prayer. Mr. Ward then entered at once on his subject,—new heavens and new earth. He stated that indifference as to the belief of many, and of christians, as to their future abode, has caused the church to run into many views not found in the word of God,—the belief that at death they go to regions far away; the belief that the kingdom is within them; and the belief, like the heathen, in the immortality of the soul. The first verse of Genesis is earth, and the topic of the Scriptures to the end of Revelation is tied together in the promises always touching the earth; and the church could see the glorious things but for the fog of the world. Even the dreams of the Jews return to Palestine. Why, we read that when Sodom's captivity is restored, then Jerusalem will be restored. The prophecies relating to the restoration of Israel were from the Babylonian captivity. Men are wayward, taking great liberties to say many things,—"that the redeemed shall have facilities to fly through the regions of space, from one planet to another." Who put such things in their minds? Not the Scriptures. It is not right to slight anything the Father has revealed.

The Hebrew word arris is earth, land. And here he read a large number of texts proving that when they spoke of earth, land, world, they always refer to this globe—earth, and no where else, and mean what they say. I am bold to say the earth is what is promised to Abraham and his seed, regenerated man,—"All this land will I give to thee." The same promise extends to all God's dear people. But many sell their birthright for a mess of pottage.

The doctrine of the kingdom in the skies is of men, and not in the holy word. It is on the earth, and not in Jupiter, or any other imaginable place. However figurative it may be, it figures nothing on the sun or moon, or anywhere else. It is what is written, and who shall say it is not so? It is the plan that these things mentioned shall occur. Men believe what they see and reach after it. They do not believe what they do not see.

In the fifteenth of Corinthians we are not told a spirit is in the grave, to have a resurrection, but it is a body, to live again. There is an enmity in the mind to this earth, because of its sorrows, trials and death. It is not to be wondered at that there should be such dislike to return to it; but when we read such words of the prophet (Ezk. 36: 12), "Yea, I will cause," etc.

The Greek word necros is dead body, human body, and nothing else that Paul is speaking of. Dead spirits leaving the body in the ground? No, the Greek word means dead body. (Here he read the thirty-seventh of Ezk.)

We read the wages of sin is death. Now while the body lies in the grave it is receiving the wages. But the comforting hope of the church is, to be raised to life again, and their bodies to be made like unto Christ's glorious body. Now the people do not believe this; but they believe the spirit living and never dying. The doctrine of the resurrection will resume its place in the church. I speak boldly, with the Scriptures before me.

Paul in his fifteenth of Corinthians distinctly says of those who have "fallen asleep in Christ" "that they are perished." And so they have if only their spirits are to live and that without a resurrection. Who can show any better reasoning? If the bodies do not really come from the grave again, and only the spirits live, why, we and they are yet in sin, sins not forgiven after all; they are all perished who expected a resurrection of their bodies; for Paul is speaking in relation to the bodies of such as Abraham and others, who have fallen asleep. We must take the ground that there is a resurrection of the real body, or that we are indeed in our sins.

"And now, my brethren in the ministry, I take to myself this 'charge in the sight of God.' 1 Tim. 6: 13–16. Amen. When this whole earth shall be full of the glory of God, then even the sun and moon will remain as they are; the earth will revolve on its axis as now, but the glory will so eclipse the light of the sun, that there will be no need of it to lighten the earth; it will be so glorious. These things are promised in the blessed word of our Father. This is the comfort of the waiting church."

At the conclusion of his discourse, I approached him and said to him that twenty-eight years ago I heard him in this city on this glorious subject. He was glad to find one who recognized him, and of course a hearty shake of the hand was indicative of the feelings of his heart. He stated that he stood now where he did then. I was extremely sorry that we did not know of his being in the city till that evening, as we should have taken much pains to have heard all his discourses. W. C. Stone.

GREETING.

Dear brothers and sisters, we've met here to-day
  In the name of Christ Jesus our Lord;
Our Father bestow his rich blessing, I pray,
  On all who would hear his pure word.
Our Father we thank from a full, grateful heart,
  Who brings us to meet with his children to-day;
Like Mary we've chosen, dear friends, the good part,
  That from us shall never be taken away.

'Tis blessed indeed with God's children to meet,
  To hear them outpouring their glad souls in prayer;
To feel the dear presence of Jesus so sweet,—
  'Tis a foretaste of glory, dear friends, to be here.
I've prayed for this meeting; God answereth prayer,
  All glory and praise to his dear blessed name!
On Jesus I cast all my burden and care,
  My soul he has warmed to a heavenly flame.

Grace, mercy and peace, from Christ Jesus our Lord,
  Rest down on his dear waiting children to-day;
Our soul is made glad through his life-giving word,
  All glory to Jesus! forever and aye.

CONN. STATE CONFERENCE.

This conference met at New Haven, according to notice, and found the church ready to welcome most cordially all who came. Thursday A. M. brought a good attendance of preachers and delegates, who at once proceeded to business, all of which was done "decently and in order." This meeting will be long remembered as one of great interest, and it will be safe and truthful to state that it was the best meeting the conference ever held. The chapel (twenty-eight feet by forty-seven feet) was filled. The preaching was excellent, and in the Spirit; and we are fully satisfied will eventually result in good.

About the transaction of business, especially the matter of ordination, the Conference were very careful, having learned by past experience that it is absolutely necessary in these "perilous times" to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves"; and every step was taken with the greatest caution and under the direction of the Spirit, striving to please our Father in heaven.

The feeling of unity and love that existed truly remarkable, and it really reminded one of the New Jerusalem; indeed brotherly love was manifested by all present; and may God grant, for Jesus' sake, that this love may ever abide with us all.

Preachers present: Elds. B. Hitchcock, I. B. Potter, B. St. John, A. H. Steele, W. J. Ripley, H. Rockwell, S. W. Treat, S. C. Hancock, G. L. Teeple. Brn. H. H. Dickinson, R. K. Stark, H. H. Perkins, W. A. Durand, J. L. Wood, S. M. Tatro, Sr. M. L. Durand. Visitors: Elds. A. D. Flagg, J. K. Bellows. Delegates: B. Taylor, New Britain; S. M. Tatro, Collinsville; G. W. Denny, New Haven; D. Grant, Wrightville; H. H. Dickinson and R. K. Stark, Hartford; Brn. Butler and Baldwin, New Preston.

The report of both preachers and delegates shows a decided improvement in the condition of all the churches. There is a great interest in many of them. The truth is spreading rapidly, and some embrace it. The Conference adjourned to meet at Collinsville, by invitation of the church, Apr. 21st, 1869.

LENGTH OF PRAYERS.

The subject of the length of prayers is occupying the attention of some of our exchanges. A correspondent of the Congregationalist and Recorder approves of the opinion, that prayer in the pulpit should never occupy over eight or ten minutes, and says: "The Lord's prayer occupies about a minute. Our Savior's prayer for his disciples, in which he seems to pour out his whole heart of love in their behalf, is about four and a half minutes long: Daniel's remarkable prayer, chapter ninth, three minutes long; Ezra's, chapter ninth, two minutes; Nehemiah's, chapter ninth, five and a half minutes; Solomon's at the dedication of the temple, five minutes; David's greater prayer of confession, Psa. fifty-one, three minutes; the apostle's prayer, on the important occasion of filling the vacancy occasioned by the defection of Judas, is about twenty seconds long. I think that in none of the Psalms is the form of praying—direct addresses to God—kept up for a longer time than five or six minutes."

The writer also says that he has heard a prayer, dedicatory of a very small meeting-house, more than seven times as long as that of King Solomon at the dedication of the Temple of Jerusalem.—Selected.

TRUST YOUR SINS TO JESUS.

A missionary was once at the bedside of a sick christian. He said to her, "Are you at peace, my sister?" And she answered, "Oh, sir, I am so troubled I cannot sleep or rest. I have sinned so much that I feel afraid I shall never be saved." "Why," said the missionary, "what do you dwell on your sins for? I never think of mine." "Why, Mr. ——," she exclaimed in amazement, "what do you mean?" "I cast my sins on Jesus long ago," he replied; "they are too heavy a weight for me; I let him take care of them now. Cannot you do the same?"

How apt we are to forget that Jesus bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and we need have no more care for them. Is not the command, "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice," just as imperative as the command to repent? Is it showing true faith in our Savior if we ask him to blot out our sins, and then weep over them, as if they were not blotted out?

Dear trembling christian, Jesus' blood "cleanseth us from all sin"; believe it, and rejoice.—Christian at Work.

Honoring Parents.—A beautiful trait of character and a lovely custom of the Spanish peasantry appear in their love for parents. They yield to them obedience, respect, veneration and love, after they are aged, and the children are men and women grown. The married children delight to have their parents to direct and govern them as in childhood, and these children even quarrel among themselves to get and keep possession of their aged parents. This trait of character is said to mark a slow country, where the past, the ancient, is held in honor, while progress has no such reverence for old age. Would to God that we had a little more Spain in young America, if it is Spanish to honor one's father and mother.

(SELECTED BY L. B. W.)

— Argue not with a man whom you know to be of an obstinate temper, for when he is once contradicted, his mind is barred up against all light and information. Arguments, though never so well grounded, do but provoke him and make him even afraid to be convinced of the truth.

— It was a good saying of Seneca, So live with men as if God saw you; so speak to God as if men heard you. Regulate your actions by this golden rule, then shall you acquit yourselves to God and man, and hereby comply with both, either out of fear or shame.

— It is good to know much and to live well; but if we cannot obtain both, it is better to desire piety than wisdom; for knowledge makes no man happy, nor doth blessedness consist in intellectuals. The only brave thing is a religious life.

— To endure present evils with patience, and wait for expected good with long suffering, is equally the part of the christian and the hero. Those evils would break a proud man's heart that would not break an humble christian's sleep.

— Jeer not others upon any occasion; if they be foolish, God has denied them understanding; if they be vicious, you ought to pity, not revile them; if deformed, God formed their bodies, and will you scorn his workmanship? Are you wiser than your Creator?

— If opinion has cried your name up, let modesty cry your heart down, lest you deceive it, or it deceive you. There is no less danger in a great name than in a bad one; and no less honor in deserving of praise than in the enduring of it.

— When I have an injury done me, I never set the beacon on fire, nor am I troubled. I consider who did it. If my kinsman, he did it ignorantly. If my friend, he did it against his will. If my enemy, it is no more than I expected.

— Pardon is a glorious kind of revenge. I think myself sufficiently revenged of my enemy if I pardon him. Cicero did more commend Cæsar for pardoning Metullus than for the great victory he obtained over his enemy.

— Let no condition surprise you, and then you cannot be afflicted in any. A noble spirit must not vary with his fortune. There is no condition so low but may have hope, none so high that is out of the reach of fears.

— Let all men avoid rash speaking. They that speak without care often remember their own words afterwards with sorrow. Those that expect peace and safety are to restrain their tongues with a bridle.

— It is much easier to think right without doing right than to do right without thinking right. Just thoughts may and often do fail of producing just deeds; but just deeds are sure to beget just thoughts.

— There is a time when thou mayest say nothing, and a time when thou mayest say something; but there will never be a time when thou shouldest say all things.

— Catch not too soon at an offence, nor give too easy way to anger; the one shows a weak judgment, the other a perverse nature.

— Have not to do with any man in his passion; for men are not like iron, to be wrought upon when they are hot.

— He that is naturally revengeful keeps his wounds open, which otherwise would close of themselves.

— An industrious and virtuous education of children is a better inheritance for them than a great estate.

—Adversity overcome is the highest glory, and willingly undergone the greatest virtue. Sufferings are but the trial of gallant spirits.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

A modern writer relates the following in regard to children:—"I know nothing more touching than the efforts of self-government of which little children are capable, when the best parts of their nature are growing vigorously under the light and warmth of parental love. How beautiful is the self-control of the little creature who stifles his sobs of pain because his mother's pitying eye is upon him in tender sorrow! or that of the babe who abstains from play and sits quietly on the floor, because somebody is ill. I have known a very young child slip over to the cold side of the bed on a winter's night, that a grown up sister might find a warm one. I have known a little girl submit spontaneously to hours of irksome restraint and disagreeable employment, merely because it was right. Such wills as these—so strong and yet humble, so patient and so dignified—were never impaired by fear, but flourished thus under the influence of love, with its sweet excitements and holy supports."

Things worth Knowing.—I know that my Redeemer liveth. Job. 19: 25.

I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. 2 Tim. 1: 12.

Ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins. 1 John 3: 5.

We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. Rom. 8: 28.

We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. 2 Cor. 5: 1.

We know that when He shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. 1 John 3: 2.

The Difference.—The young lady who rises early, rolls up her sleeves, and walks into the kitchen to get breakfast, or assist in doing so, and afterwards, with cheerfulness and sunny smiles, puts the house in order without the assistance of mother, is worth a thousand parlor beauties, who, from want of exercise, almost die of laziness. The former will make a good wife, and render home a paradise; the latter is a useless piece of furniture, and will, to the annoyance of the household, go whining to her grave.

My dear children, let us ponder poor Bennie's prayer; and if you are tempted to do wrong at any time, ask God to give you the good Spirit that will help you keep the good resolutions you have made.

DON'T FORGET TO PRAY.

Though I'm but a little child,
  Fond of pleasure and of play,
Sometimes very, very wild,
  Yet I'll not forget to pray.

Every morning, when my eyes
  Open on a new-born day,
I will cheerfully arise,
  And will not forget to pray.

Every night, before my head
  On my pillow soft I lay,
Kneeling by my little bed,
  I will not forget to pray.

I am growing, as I know,
  Older, bigger every day;
But, however old I grow,
  I must not forget to pray.

God is very kind to me,
  Cares for me by night and day;
So his little lamb I'll be,
  And will not forget to pray.

A TRUE STORY.

"Once upon a time," as stories were generally begun in my childhood days, there lived two little sisters in the town of T——t. They loved each other dearly, as sisters and brothers should always do. As they were playing one evening on the pavement before their father's door, the little one, whom we will call "Brown-eyes," threw a pebble, which, unfortunately, hit the elder sister, whom we will call "Blue-eyes." Several gentlemen standing near, seeing the accident, expected to hear a loud scream and an angry voice saying, "You ugly thing; I'll just tell mother! You did it a-purpose—I know you did—you mean, ugly thing," and so on, as angry children will talk. But these gentlemen heard nothing of the kind.

For a moment little Blue-eyes stood, ready to cry—for to be hit by a pebble hurts. As I said, Blue-eyes stood for a moment looking at poor, dismayed Brown-eyes, then she ran to her, threw her arms round her, and said, "Don't cry, little sister; I know you didn't mean to hit me. Kiss me, dear," and the sisters kissed and embraced each other fondly. The gentlemen who saw the little ones told their father of it, adding, "We never saw any thing like it before." Alas! and is sisterly and brotherly love and forbearance so rare a thing that the loving sisters' conduct should call forth a remark like that? Dear children, do be kind and loving to all, but especially to your sisters and brothers, whom God has given to you to love. Try to be like Jesus, who not only loves those who love him, but he loves his enemies. He died that his enemies might live.

THE DYING SON.

"Gone to ruin!" said a father to me one day while speaking of his son, who I had informed him was just dying, and that through the influence of intoxicating drink. "Gone to ruin, and that with drink!"

"Come and see him," I said.

The father went, and as he looked upon his dying boy, he asked him how he had been brought to this. The son replied that it was his father who was the cause of his ruin.

"How could this be?" you ask.

I will tell you. The father had been accustomed to have liquor on the dinner-table, and when friends called upon him he would give them some, and take some of it himself. He had also thought that his little son might take a little without any harm.

His child had been in the habit of taking the little drops that were left in the bottom of the glasses—especially when a good deal of sugar had been put into it; and by and by, when he became a lad, he sought some of it himself, and, the desire continuing, he had at last sought after it when he cared for nothing else.

Dear children, are not some of you in danger? Are you tempted to taste the drink that proved so terribly fatal to him because you see your fathers or your brothers doing so? Are there little drops left in the bottoms of glasses, and plenty of sugar with them? and are you tempted to taste them? Then think of this young man, and what he said to his father, and be warned.

MARY'S PRAYER.

Little Mary's mother had occasion to correct her the other night. Mary was angry, and when she said her prayers, instead of asking God to bless papa and mamma, as she was wont to do, she said: "God bless papa, and don't bless mamma."

Her mother took no notice, and Mary jumped into bed without her good-night kiss. By-and-by she began to breathe hard, and at length she whispered: "Mamma, are you going to live a great while?"

"I don't know," was the answer.

"Do you think you shall?"

"I cannot tell."

"Do many mothers die and leave their children?"

"A great many."

"Mamma," said Mary, with a trembling voice, "I am going to say another prayer;" and clasping her little hands, she cried: "God bless papa, and the dearest, best mamma any little girl ever had in the world."

That's the way, children. If you knew your mothers were going to die very shortly, you could not be half kind enough to them. But do you know that, be they long or short-lived, there lies before you, written so plainly that he who runs may read, "Honor thy father and thy mother"?

Remember, that every wrong committed against loving parents will, when they shall have passed from earth, bite like a serpent and sting like an adder.—Well-Spring.

DOWN, TEMPER.

A boy I know owns a big dog named Hero. He is very fond of his dog, and romps a good deal. This makes the dog take liberties with him, such as putting his great paws upon his shoulders, pushing him down and rolling over him. Sometimes Hero wants to play when his young master wishes to study or work. Then the boy speaks in a tone of command, and says:

"Down, Hero, down, sir."

Poor Hero obeys, and slinks away with his drooping tail into the house. Now I know another who does not own a big dog like Hero, but he has a little, ugly, furious cur, which frowns and snarls, and bites, and its owner has no control over the cur at all. What do you think is the name of the cur?

Temper!

Now if this latter boy was wise, he would bring his cur under control. He would say "Down, Temper, down!" whenever it began to growl. He would bring it under discipline until it would obey him as Hero does the other boy. It is true, Temper has been master so long, it would cost some trouble at first to subdue it; but if the boy would pray hard, and then be resolute in saying, "Down," he would soon master it. God and a praying boy can conquer any temper that rages in a child's bosom.

"THE WORST OF IT."

"Do you want to buy any berries to-day?" said a poor little boy to me one afternoon.

I looked at the little fellow, and saw that he was poorly dressed. In his hand he held a large basket full of ripe raspberries.

I told him I should like some; and taking the basket from him, stepped into the house. He did not follow me.

"Why don't you come in and see if I measure your berries rightly?" said I, "How do you know but I may cheat you, and take more than I agreed for?"

The boy looked up at me and smiled. "I am not afraid," said he, "for you would get the worst of it, ma'am."

"Get the worst of it!" I said. "What do you mean?"

"Why, ma'am, I should only lose my berries, but you would be stealing. Don't you think that would be the worst for you?"

Let us think of this when we are tempted in any way to cheat another. How often do we hear persons pity any one who has had his property stolen from him. Yet, though a man lose all, and keeps honest, he is rich indeed compared with the man who had robbed him.—Winning Words.

A WORD FOR BOYS.

Truth is one of the rarest gems. Many a youth has been lost in society by allowing it to tarnish his character, and foolishly throwing it away. If this gem still shines in your bosom, suffer nothing to displace or diminish its lustre.

Profanity is a mark of low breeding. Show us the man that commands much respect; an oath never trembles on his tongue. Read the catalogue of crime. Inquire the character of those who depart from virtue. Without a single exception, you will find them to be profane. Think of this, and don't let a vile word disgrace you.

Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be those yours, my boys, and I shall fear not. You are watched by your elders. Men who are looking for clerks and apprentices have their eyes on you. If you are upright, steady and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the prospects of a useful life before you.—Peninsular Herald.

THE SECOND COMING.

"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him."—Rev. 1: 7.

He will come, aye, he will come,
Though scoffers say he tarries long;
He has promised, we believe him,
He'll come with his angelic throng.

He will come, aye, surely come;
Yea, the hour is drawing nigh;
Earth doth quake in divers places,
Signs and wonders in the sky.

The caverns of the mighty deep
Are upward heaving, billows roar;
Old earth trembles, saints rejoicing,
Hail his coming to restore.

Israel, then the sleeping saints,
Shall leave the darkness of the tomb,
Awake with joy to life eternal,
No more darkness, death, or gloom.

He will come, aye, come with clouds,
Every eye shall see him then;
Every knee shall bow before him,
For he comes to earth to reign.

He will come, but not to save,
The wicked he shall then destroy;
The just shall live with him in glory,
Mourning shall be changed to joy.

He will come; be ready then,
Let your lamps be burning bright,
Waiting, watching, praying for him,
Ever ready day and night.

He will lift you far above
Rending rock and scorching flame,
Take you with him, clothed in glory,
To the New Jerusalem.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

Luke 16: 19-31.

BY J. MC'CAMMON.

(Concluded.)

"There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table; moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the end of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they would repent. And he said unto him, if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

We will now proceed to make an application of what we have said to the case now before us. First, then, Lazarus died; but it is nowhere said he was buried. He died or departed from all his idol worship, for at the preaching of the apostles they eagerly embraced the hope of the gospel; and in the beautiful language of the parable, were carried by angels (messengers—Peter and Paul) to Abraham's bosom; "for if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise"; and a glorious inheritance in the New Jerusalem when Jesus comes to reign in his glorious kingdom. Second, the rich man died and was buried; how soon after, we think we will be able to show in the sequel. But before I proceed, permit me to make a quotation from the words of the Savior (Matt. 24: 15): "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand), then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains; let him that is on the house-top not come down to take anything out of his house; neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days; for then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."

In such a description, coming as it does from the blessed Jesus, let us pause a moment and think what will the reality be. I would here say that all those that believed on his name, whether Jew or Gentile, when they saw the Roman army surrounding the city, took warning; for Titus, for some purpose unknown to us, withdrew his army, some say three days; but I heard a learned divine—Elder Bastion—say it was but for three hours. Hence the haste, for the time was exceeding short; and as I have said, the Christians in and about Jerusalem fled, and not one was known to fall in that ever memorable siege.

But some one may ask, Where were these things written that those who read might understand? I will answer. Matthew wrote his gospel in the Hebrew language, eight years after the Crucifixion; so there were over twenty years for the knowledge to spread abroad. Now as the Jews, forgetting the sacredness of the law, did not hesitate to use that time (the feast of the passover) to have the Lord of glory slain; so neither did God keep back their enemies, when they came up to Jerusalem in the year A. D. 65 to celebrate the same. Josephus tells us that from a calculation made by the number of lambs that were slain, allowing thirteen to a lamb (the number of Christ and his apostles), not less than three millions of men, women and children, were crowded into that city at the time Titus surrounded it with his army.

Now it is said that if you can shut up snakes in a pen so they cannot get out, they will destroy one another; and history proves to us that this was true of the Jewish nation. For several factions, among themselves called zealots (I would call them robbers and murderers), took possession of the cloisters, or courts of the Temple; but being resisted by the people, they sent a secret message to the Idumeans, the descendants of Esau, who inhabited the country around the southern portion of the Dead Sea and Mount Seir. These people loved war, and came in great haste to assist in the defense of the city against the Romans. But coming in the night, and clothed in their armor, the high priest refused to open the gates unto them, by which they were greatly enraged, but received admittance by the aid of the seditious sawing off the bars of the gates.

Now commenced an indiscriminate slaughter of those in the city, and that for the purposes of robbery. On account of the great numbers shut up in Jerusalem, food soon disappeared, and ghastly famine soon followed; then it was that the innocent were murdered for the smallest morsel of food they were supposed to possess. But one incident will my limits permit me to give, and that in illustration of the words of the Savior—"Wo to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days."

A lady of noble birth, whose name was Mary, having come up to Jerusalem to worship, after all her food was gone, writhing under the awful effect of hunger, and maddened at the continuance of the famine till reason tottered on its throne, tore her infant from her bosom, and after she had slain it roasted and ate the one half of it, and kept the other half concealed. The seditious, attracted by the scent of food, went in and threatened to cut her throat if she did not produce it. She replied that she had saved a portion for them, and at the same time uncovered the remains of her son. At a sight so ghastly these men of blood stepped back; when she addressed them and said,

"This is my own son, and what I have done is my own doing. Come, eat of this food, for I have eaten of it myself. Do not pretend to be more delicate than a woman, or more compassionate than a mother; but if you pretend to be so scrupulous, and abominate this my sacrifice, leave the balance to me; as I have eaten the one half, I will eat the other also."

One more of the horrid cruelties through which this nation was made to pass, is related by Josephus in describing the treatment the prisoners received at the hand of the Romish soldiers. Now, says he, the number of the Jews that was taken each day by the Romans, was from five to six hundred. And owing to the hatred and contempt in which they were held, they were taken, and after tormenting them with all kinds of torture before they died, they then crucified them before the walls of the city. But yet was not their wrath appeased; for they nailed those they caught, one after one way, and another after another way, by the way of jest, till room was wanting to set the crosses, and crosses on which to place the victims.

How soon and yet how terrible was that denunciation they called down on their devoted heads, when they cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him"; "We have no king but Cæsar"; "His blood be upon us and on our children." Yet these were but the beginning of troubles. For Titus, having made a passage by removing some of the large stones of the tower of Antonia, gained an admittance by which the holy house itself was attacked; part of the cloisters, or courts, having already been burned by the seditious of their own nation; and though Cæsar used all the power of a Roman commander to save this house from destruction, yet all his efforts were fruitless.

A Roman soldier standing on the shoulders of two others threw a fiery brand into one of the golden windows of the Temple. Soon did the conflagration spread to every part of the holy house; when a scene of horror never before witnessed was brought to view. On this occasion one of their false prophets had announced to the people that if they should come to the Temple they should see the salvation that God was about to work in their deliverance; when about ten thousand, principally women and children, assembled in one of the cloisters of the Temple; or, as another writer has said, in the beautiful porch of the Temple called Solomon's Porch.

Had they only attended to the words of the Savior, when he said, "Many false prophets shall arise in my name, . . . but believe them not." But their eyes were darkened that they should not see, and their hearts were hardened that they should not obey, that sudden destruction might come upon them. And fearful and dreadful was the result; for as the flames of the devouring element were spreading in every direction, murder and plunder followed in the train. And of all those that sought a refuge in the holy house, not one was left to tell the sad story. Nor was there any commiseration of age or sex; nor any reverence paid to the wise or grave; but children and old men, priests and profane persons, were all slain in the same manner. And because the hill was high on which the holy house stood, and the works of the Temple were very great, one would have thought that the whole city was on fire.

Nor can the imagination of man paint anything more terrible than the noise that arose; for amid the crackling elements of the flames, the shrieks and groans of the dying, came the victorious shouts of the Roman legions, and the sad clamor of the seditious as they were surrounded with fire and sword. Yet loud and still louder were the shrieks and moans of the famishing multitude as they beheld their holy house in flames; as still more terribly their united shrieks went up, the hills and the mountains around Jerusalem returned the sad echo. And yet was the misery itself more terrible than this disorder, for one would have thought that the very hill on which the Temple stood was red hot as full of fire, on every part of it. Yet was the blood in quantity larger than the fire, and those that were slain larger in numbers than those that slew them.

Meagre indeed are these extracts compared with the reality. Well did the Savior say, "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." In reference to these times, I will quote a paragraph from the prophecies of Daniel, to show how literally they received their fulfillment. Dan. 9: 26-27:—"And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week [seven years] he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease." As I have said, how literally was this fulfilled. Says Josephus, On the seventeenth of the month Tamus (which Wm. Thurman says in his "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened" was Sunday, July 15th, A. D. 70, or just three and one half years from the commencement of the war or the middle of Daniel's week), a moan went up from the city; for the daily sacrifice was made to cease; for there was no priest to offer up an oblation to God. And I doubt whether they had a lamb for a sacrifice.

Now we will say, and that without fear of successful contradiction, that the rich man was dead; and not only dead, but buried. And should we proceed still further we would say that in hell (or hades) he was lifting up his eyes, being in torments. But, alas! there is no Lazarus to dip the end of his finger in water to cool his tongue. But some will say this is war, and you have failed to prove your position. Then one extract more, for my limits are already exhausted.

Of all those that perished in the siege, the number was one million, one hundred thousand, besides nine hundred and ninety-eight thousand sold into captivity, bond-men and bond-women, among all nations. Add these two together, and you have but a fraction less than two millions.

How now stands the case, my brother? But the end is not yet. For the last seventeen hundred years have they been scattered among all nations, yet finding no resting-place for the sole of their foot; a hissing and a by-word, persecuted from country to country, from city to city, slain by thousands and by hundreds of thousands.

Now I would say that the rich man was not only dead and buried, but his five brethren are sold into bondage. Neither is that impassable gulf yet removed; for that opprobrious epithet—he is a Jew, that has always kept the two nations apart, is not yet taken away.

How beautiful in this place is the word of the prophet Hosea, 3: 4,—"For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim." If my limits would permit I might describe some of the sacerdotal dresses; but there is one less understood by some of my young friends, that I will notice, that is, the ephod.

Josephus, in describing this garment, says it was woven of several colors about the depth of a cubit, with gold intermixed, and embroidered. It was made in two parts, one of which hung down the back, the other over the breast, leaving a space open about a span each way, which was filled up by a piece four square, woven of the same materials as the ephod, and united to it with golden wings at the corners, and was called the breast-plate. The ephod was united on the shoulder with a golden button or clasp, in which was fastened a sardonyx stone, on which was engraved the names of six of the tribes of the children of Israel; the names of the six eldest on his right shoulder, as also the names of the twelve on the breast-plate; so that when the high priest appeared before the Lord in the holy place, he bore the names of the children of Israel before the Lord on his breast and on his shoulders.

Now can be seen how the Israelites lost their nationality, or, in the language of the parable of the rich man, were both dead and buried.

But there is still a bright side to this dark picture. For in the next verse of this same chapter of the prophet Hosea he says, "Afterwards shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their King; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.

I need hardly say here that David their king refers to the Messiah. This is fully set forth in the announcement made by the angel Gabriel to Mary (Luke 1: 32), "And he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

How beautifully agree the words of the prophet Jeremiah with those of Hosea (Jer. 50: 4-5); "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, and the children of Judah together, going and weeping; they shall go, and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask their way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten." Now have we a faint glance of Christ's glorious kingdom to be set up in the latter day. And as Daniel has beautifully expressed it, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; and all dominions shall serve and obey him." "Then shall the law go forth out of Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

That we may all meet on the banks of deliverance, and together walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, is my prayer, for Christ's sake.

THE GOLDEN SHORE.

We are out on the deep,
And we dare not sleep,
For the night is drear and dark;
And the billows roar
As we near the shore,
And toss our feeble bark.
Chorus.—Then we'll watch and we'll pray
Till the dawn of the day;
Our voyage will then be o'er;
And we'll shout and sing
Praise to our King,
Upon the golden shore.

The Pilot's voice
Makes our hearts rejoice,
For he tells us land is near;
Though the "white-caps" foam,
We will soon be home,
With the friends we love so dear.

Now the willow waves
Over the pilgrims' graves,
But their sleep will soon be o'er;
And they'll rise and join
In songs divine,
Upon the golden shore.

Our trials here—
They seem severe,
But soon they'll all be o'er;
And we shall rest
With all the blest,
Upon the golden shore.

For the World's Crisis.

THE GATHERING OF THE NATIONS.—No. 1.

Nation.—A body of people inhabiting the same country or united under the same sovereign or government. Nation, as its etymology imports, originally denoted a family, or race of men descended from a common progenitor, like tribe.—Webster.

This agrees with the Bible. "By these were the isles [sea-coasts] of the Gentiles divided in their lands; every one after his tongue [speech or language] after their families in their nations."—Gen. 10: 5, 20, 31-32. "These are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations; and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood."

The word nation is found in its singular and plural forms, connections, specifications and combinations, in three hundred and sixty-six passages of Scripture (perhaps more); and in every one of these, without exception, the word or its context refers to those who are alive upon the earth in a natural state; and not in a single instance, that I have yet been able to find or can call to memory, is it ever used for or applied to those who are dead in a literal sense, except as it refers to them as they had been, in some state, character, condition, or act, prior to their having died. Joshua 23: 3 affords an example: "And ye have seen all the Lord your God hath done unto all these nations"; while Deut. 31: 3 tells us what was (or to be) done by the Lord. "He will destroy these nations from before thee."

Tribes, peoples, kindreds, and tongues, are spoken of as having been or as about to be "cut off" from being a nation, as in Ps. 83: 4; Jer. 48: 2; Deut. 12: 29; 19: 1; Isa. 10: 7. Of being "plucked up," "pulled down," "destroyed," as in Jer. 18: 7; 12: 17; 46: 28; Zech. 12: 9. Of being "broken in pieces," as in Jer. 51: 20. Of being "turned into hell" (sheol—the grave or pit), as in Ps. 9: 17; and of being "consumed," as in Dan. 2: 44. But nowhere in the Bible can we read of the "the pale" or of "the sheeted nations of the dead"; for when dead, they have ceased from being, either as a nation or nations; and it was to this specific purpose that the enemies of God's ancient people proposed to "cut off" Israel, that they might not be a nation, and no more be remembered. Ps. 83: 4.

Since writing the foregoing, my attention has been called to the subjoined quotation from a work entitled "Christocracy," by Drs. Demarest and Gordon, which I had not perused previously, and am well pleased to find the position taken sustained by such learned authority. These authors say,

"The phrase 'the nations,' is never used to designate the departed; nor is it ever employed to describe men as raised from the grave; but it always denotes men on earth, or the living population of our world, under some form of government. Take the following texts as specimens of this truth: 'By these were the nations divided.'—Gen. 10: 32. 'Thou shalt be a father of many nations.'—Gen. 17: 4. 'He shall judge between the nations.'—Isa. 2: 4. 'They shall be wanderers among the nations.'—Hos. 9: 17. 'For all these things do the nations of the world seek after'—the nations belonging to our world. Luke 12: 30. 'Upon the earth' there shall be 'distress of nations with perplexity.'—Luke 21: 25. 'To him will I give authority over the nations.'—Rev. 2: 26. 'The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.'—Rev. 22: 2."

Therefore when our Lord said (Matt. 23: 32) that "before him shall be gathered all nations," he was not speaking of "the dead," but of "the living;" for Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 1) says, "Christ Jesus will judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom."—Revised N. T., also Diaglott Translation. This is manifestly a correct translation, as will appear from connecting passages and correlative events. The idea contained in the apostle's declaration, fully written out in our language, to my apprehension would read thus: "He shall judge the living and the dead, and (he shall do this) by his appearing and (by) his kingdom."

The first connecting passage that we will notice is Gen. 49: 10;—"The sceptre shall not pass from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." The Septuagint reads—"He whose it is, he to whom it belongs," i. e., the sceptre; like the diadem or crown in Ezek. 21: 27.

Justin Martyr affirmed that shellu was rendered in their original and best version, as it now stands in the Alexandrian manuscript; viz., "He for whom it [the sceptre] is reserved." According to this reading, then, the sense is this: "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a governor from between his feet, until He shall have come whose right the sceptre is, and until the nations shall obey him," i. e., have been governed by him. A prediction which Mede says our Savior himself applied and explained in those words—"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14.

The first correlative event to be noticed is that of swaying the sceptre. The sceptre had departed from Judah when He came eighteen hundred and more years ago; but he did not then either "gather the people unto himself" or "govern the nations;" for although he came unto his own, his own received him not, but to as many as did receive him, he gave power to become the sons of God; and then, on being rejected, he made himself a sin-offering, and "a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers."—Rom. 15: 8. And some thirty-five or forty years after, the city and sanctuary of that people to whom he came were cast down and destroyed, and themselves scattered, "carried away captive" among all nations, and the place of his throne remains "trodden down" unto this day. "And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not. And this spake he not of himself; but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation; and not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad." Jno. 11: 49-52.

Consequently "the gathering" and "the governing" (or reigning) by him to whom the scepter belongs both by law of descent, and also by that of primogeniture, must be still future, or the prophecy prove a failure.

But Paul also says, he must reign, i. e., rule as king, or "sway the scepter." But "all power was given unto him" when he was "raised from the dead." Matt. 28: 18. True, but Paul declares that "now, not yet, are all things put under him." Heb. 2: 8.

JESUS OUR FRIEND.

How manifold are the blessings which are bestowed upon us day by day, and yet how apt are we to overlook many of these in times of worldly prosperity, when everything seems to glide along smoothly, and the toils and cares of this life cause us to neglect giving the thanks and praise which are justly due to Him who is the author of all good and perfect gifts.

Truly Jesus is our most faithful friend, and although apparently we seem to be forgetful of his goodness when we are rejoicing in the bounties of his hand, and fail to acknowledge him as much as we ought, yet, nevertheless, when we are in trouble and affliction, we find him to be a friend that will never leave nor forsake us. And when, at times, all earthly friends seemingly have forsaken us, and we are left as it were alone in the world, how quickly do we fly to Jesus, our never failing refuge our kind and forgiving Savior.

Then do we find the true and solid comfort in the words of the poet:

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear;
What a privilege to carry
Everything to God in prayer."

Then do we fully realize that it is a great privilege to carry everything to God in prayer, and the promise, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it" (John 14: 14), becomes many times more precious to us than ever before. Then do we long to see that friend, and then can we pray from a heart full of love, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Then we have no desire to delay the coming of our Lord to this sin-cursed earth, to gather out his faithful ones, and give us that "rest" which he hath promised unto "all those that look for and love his appearing."

Then with renewed activity do we resolve again to do more for the good of others, and to endeavor to bring them into the fold of the Shepherd, that they too with us may enjoy the blessings of eternal life in his kingdom. Then do we resolve not to be idlers in our Master's vineyard, but are willing to devote our time and whatsoever talent God has given us, to his honor and glory.

Then do we in a moment, realize the shortness of time, and, after a backward glance over our past history, feeling the little good comparatively that we have done in all our life-time, we find that we have no time to spare in warning sinners of their danger, and in pointing them to the Lamb of God. Then we are not ashamed to confess Jesus before men, but gladly tell them of this everlasting Friend, the one altogether lovely, and one who has gone to prepare a place for us; and that soon he will come again and receive us unto himself.

And what solid comfort, what full enjoyment, what real consolation, do we derive from the words of our Savior, who has promised such a great reward if we are only faithful unto the end. For he hath said, "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me; because I live, ye shall live also."—John. 14: 18, 19.

How truly comforting are these words, and what a blessing it is to know that however much we may be tried and tempted in this life, we have the promise that our everlasting Friend, who "was in all points tempted like as we are," will soon come again to give us eternal life, and then all shall be made forever happy in the kingdom of our Lord and Master.

"Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongues of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. . . . . . And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—Is. 35: 5, 6, 10.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

The Final Destiny of the Wicked.

NUMBER SIX.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

12. The Judgment. What is it? And when is it?

What is the meaning of the word judgment? The word judgment, as used in this case, is from the Greek term krisis. Its definition is given by Greenfield thus:—"Distinction, separation, judgment, etc. This shows the order of the judgment which awaits this world—righteous or wicked.

1. The Son of God will first make a distinction between the two families—"the children of God," and "the children of the devil"; whether they be found at that time in a dead or in a living state.

2. He will then "separate" them one from another, as set forth in Matt. 25: 31-34. "And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." And here let us not overlook the fact that the "dead" need not be made "alive" in order for this "distinction" and "separation." Christ will not make dead men alive in order to judge them; for he is to judge "the quick and the dead" at the same time. He does not first raise "the dead" in order to judge them; but he judges them as in their dead state; and after this each will rise to their appointed lot. He will not change "the quick" in order to judge them. But he will judge the living while they are alive, and the dead while they are dead.

Many have been deceived here by the poet who says, "Awake, ye dead, and come to judgment." But the Bible teaches us that Christ will judge "the quick" (living) and "the dead" (2 Tim. 4: 1); and that "the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the book." Rev. 20: 12. Not made alive and then judged; but the dead are judged while they are dead.

The day of judgment must find people living upon the earth, who are spoken of as "the quick." Such, therefore, must either be judged in the flesh, while still living in their natural life, or they must pass through some miraculous change equivalent to the resurrection; and if the latter, then they would lose the distinctive character of "the quick." This will not do; for then what becomes of the judgment of "the quick," as distinguished from the judgment of "the dead"? In this case, there can be no such judgment. Hence, the distinction made by the Scriptures between the judgment of "the quick" and the judgment of "the dead," is thus turned into a distinction without a difference, signifying nothing at all in particular. But if there is any meaning in words, then "quick" does not mean "dead," and "dead" does not mean "quick"; and therefore the judgment of the one cannot be the judgment of the other. If the natural life of "the quick" ends before they are judged, then there can be no more a judgment of the quick than of the dead; and hence one part of the Scriptures utterly fails.

There are glorious truths in the Scriptures which still lie hidden under the most common expressions in them; which, if they were properly searched out, would relieve us of a vast amount of doubtfulness or uncertainty, and save men a great deal of trouble in their attempts to explain the word of God. Christ need not inquire into each one's character; but he will know them all at a glance, whether dead or alive, just as a shepherd would know his "sheep" from the "goats." No inquiry is made by the shepherd in order to distinguish between sheep and goats.

Now in order for a clear understanding of this whole question respecting the great day of judgment, we must consider three distinct points.

I. There must be the trial.

II. There must be the judicial judgment.

III. Then there must be the executive judgment, especially in regard to the wicked.

I. When does man's trial take place? That man's trial takes place in this life during his probation, is plain from the fact that men are to be "judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Rev. 20: 12. The trial of each is going on in this life, and a record of all is being made "in the books." The "books" here spoken of are not blank books, to be filled up after they are opened at the time of the judgment; but the "dead" are judged out of those things which "were written" in the books at the time they are "opened." This proves that the trial of men is going on in this state of probation. And "the books" will contain the record of the lives of each.

The word "probation," in such common use among us, is a word which expresses man's trial in this life. Its definition may be given thus: "The act of proving, trial, examination," etc. We are, therefore, now on trial—all of us—during this life of probation. How solemn the thought! Will God "bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil"? Is every one of us, each hour and minute of life, testifying before the court of heaven either for or against ourselves? Every word we utter, every temper of mind, every act of our lives, all go to make up the testimony either for or against ourselves! This being so, what an important life we are now living! In the language of another—"Always in court—always on trial—always giving evidence by which the Judge is to decide our doom"!

II. When the trial, or probation of this world, is over, then "the books" will be "opened"; and from the things which "were written" in the book will men be judged, both "the quick and the dead." When these "books" are "opened," then the judicial judgment will take place; and all, both "the quick and the dead," will have their reward assigned them "according to their works," as will then be found "written in the books."

III. But the executive judgment upon the wicked will not take place until hades delivers up its dead; and then they will be "cast into the lake of fire," in which will be their second death. "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life [at the time of their judicial judgment], was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 15. The whole process of the trial and judgment by the Son of God, may be illustrated in the following manner: If a man is arrested for murder, (1.) he has his trial before a jury. (2.) The judge then pronounces his judicial judgment, which is to be remanded to prison for six months (more or less.) (3.) Then at the appointed time he is "brought forth" from the "prison" to be hanged by the neck until he is dead. This will be his executive judgment.

And so of this world. (1.) They are having here their trial. (2.) When Christ comes to judge the world, then will the judicial judgment take place. (3.) After the one thousand years, mentioned in Rev. 20, are ended, then will come the executive judgment upon the wicked. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." Rev. 20: 6.

CHRIST KNOWN.

"Christ known," says a good writer, "is Christ loved; and Christ well known is Christ much loved." The words have the form of simple truisms, but the truths contained are highly suggestive. The reason why the great mass of mankind do not love Christ at all, is because they do not know him at all. And the reason why vast multitudes of his professed followers love him so little, is because they know him so imperfectly.

It is not only the heathen world that does not know Christ. Thousands who daily pronounce his name, even in acts of worship, scarcely know him at all. The words spoken to a disciple, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet thou hast not known me?" might be spoken to thousands of disciples now. It is true they journey with the company of the saints, and claim the name and character of disciples of Jesus; they even converse with the Master himself; but of his true nature and offices, and of their relation to him as sharers of his kingdom, they have but the most imperfect conceptions. Though for years they have borne this name, yet the words of rebuke to Philip would be altogether fitting to them.

To know Christ it is necessary that his acquaintance be sought. Christ is easy of access to those who desire to be acquainted with him. The devoted Mary sitting at his feet, the woman at Samaria's well, or she who washed his feet with her tears; the blind, or deaf, or dumb, or he that would know what good thing he must do to be saved, may each approach him with equal freedom. Peter always found the way to Jesus very near. But while it is easy to approach Christ, yet he will reveal himself only to those who seek him. And those who love his company most, who walk the nearest by his side, and linger longest in his presence, will know him best.

If Christ were better known, how greatly different would the average walk of christians be from what it now is. How often would the erring and backsliding cleave to Christ if they but knew him. Peter, in the hour of his Master's humiliation, declared that he knew not the man—an affirmation containing more truth than Peter was aware of. How many are there who, when the cause of Christ is in low repute with men, are ready to do as Peter did, looking as little as did the apostles for the glorious manifestation of power and triumph soon to follow. If Jesus were known, how would our daily conversation and conduct be changed. Could we be conscious of the nature of that presence that is ever about us, how we should hesitate to do that which makes up much of the sum of life.

And how infinitely would our enjoyments in the christian life be increased, if we better knew our Lord. Only he who knows Christ has true joy. He believes in him fully because he knows him, and in the confidence of a perfect faith he finds the fullness of joy. A partial faith awakens but imperfect joy. But a full faith, founded on a knowledge of Christ, becomes a source of unfailing joy. He who knows Christ rejoices even "in tribulation also;" for he understands, and he alone can understand, how all things work together for good to them that love the Lord.

— Justice and generosity, rightly blended, constitute a dignified character; but, certainly so far as a person is more just than generous, or more generous than just, that character is defective.

WORK.

"Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, I will give you."—MATT. 20: 4.

The christian religion is an active one,—one of work. One important feature in the life of Jesus and of his apostles was their earnest labor for the salvation of men. No effort was spared that would tend to lead men to be true christians. They were ready to sacrifice ease, comfort, and even life for the sake of leading men away from the road to destruction. Paul endured great privations, afflictions, imprisonment, hunger, thirst, cold, perils of various descriptions, whippings, beatings with rods, stoning, and martyrdom; all because of his efforts made to save people. Millions of martyrs sacrificed their lives for the same object. They would talk about Jesus, and the way to be saved. How foolish they were to suffer so much in order to lead men to Christ, if all are to be saved without faith and works. Jesus, the apostles and martyrs, all showed most positively by their deeds and words, that they believed no such doctrine. Satan is very anxious to persuade men to believe that all will be saved, and thus stop all efforts to save men. He and his followers are very hostile towards a working christianity. If possible, he will surely stir up prejudice against all the faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, in order to prevent their success; while he will let the drones alone, and give them the honors of the world, so that he may the more easily keep them still. He has but little objection to a quiet religion, that will conform to the world, and never press itself upon the attention of any one. And, in order to accomplish this result, he has caused it to be unfashionable to introduce the subject of religion into a promiscuous company, or in a parlor visit among friends, who have met for a social interview. He has succeeded in causing people to think it is a mark of rudeness to press the subject of religion upon any one; and in this way is stopping nearly all active efforts to save men, and thus the unconverted are left to conclude that professed christians do not think them in much danger of being lost; for if they did, they would say something to them on the subject.

Now what shall be done, in view of these facts? Shall we fall in with the wishes of Satan, keep still, and let our friends and neighbors go to perdition without an effort to save them? Will Jesus say, "Well done" to such? What is wanting now is positive, untiring effort on the part of every follower of Jesus, to persuade men and women to be christians. Never mind what the enemy may say about your being too forward, or setting up yourself above others; or desiring to show himself; keep at work, night and day, as did Paul, "warning every man, and teaching every man." If we could only get the lay members in every church to feel their responsibility, and be conscious of what they are capable of doing in the vineyard of the Lord, when they are willing to consecrate all to him; and persuade them to use their talent to the glory of God, then we should see a rejoicing, loving church, ready for the coming of Jesus, and ardently loving his appearing; and many of their friends and neighbors, who are now in the way to destruction, would be persuaded to take the path to eternal life and glory. Dear reader, will you go to work for Jesus? Do not let the day pass without asking some one to become a disciple of Jesus. The cross may seem heavy, but the blessing that will follow will be correspondingly great. As soon as we begin to make efforts to save others, we begin to rise ourselves; and our peace, love and joy will be "multiplied." During the past few months we have seen many very marked examples of the blessed results arising from personal efforts. Those who had lived for years without any bright evidence of their acceptance in the sight of the Lord; persons who were sure they could not do any thing towards leading others to Christ, for want of ability to speak and pray in public, or even to assist any one by private conversation; when such began to work they were at once made very happy in Christ, and were instruments in leading their friends to the Redeemer. Jesus gives great pay for a little work. He only asks us to do what we can.

If christians were to speak of what he has done for them, they would not know where to stop. Let each reader inquire, Have I done any thing for Jesus? Do not let this question pass without a decided, honest answer. Have I done what I could? If not, shall I begin now? Say yes, by the help of the Lord, I will do my whole duty. Let us all do more for our dear Lord, whom we hope soon to see in all his glory. If we can be the instrument of leading one soul to Christ, it will pay for all our labor during our whole life. Let us do our best.

CANADA.

The truth has taken deep root in Montreal, and many members of other churches are believers in the doctrine we preach; but do not confess it openly for fear of the people. It is much as it was with the Jews in the days of Jesus. They rejected him and his teachings because he was unpopular; and he rejected them because they rejected him. One great reason why there are so few christians is because they are unwilling to give up their reputation for Jesus' sake. This is one of Satan's strong holds upon the human mind; and he knows how to take the advantage of it, and turn it to his account. We cannot be free in Christ till we consecrate all to him, and are willing to do all to his glory. Then we feel perfect peace and full assurance of our acceptance.

At the close of our second meeting in Montreal, we concluded to take the cars for Richmond, about half way from Montreal to Quebec. During the day the storm kept all trains from leaving the city, and we were informed that none would leave; but at 11.30 P.M., the cars started, and we got along very well, being only about three hours late on our arrival at R. We had a pleasant meeting that evening, at Melbourne, where Jesus has a few friends who are loving his appearing. The great snow prevented a large gathering; but the occasion was profitable. The next day we went on to Danville, and commenced a series of meetings. We found Bro. Porter as earnest as ever in the defense of the faith once delivered to the saints. He is an ardent lover of the pure Bible doctrine; especially that portion of it that relates to the coming of Jesus, the resurrection of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and the new earth as the inheritance of the saints. He is ever ready to give a reason for his hope to all who seek information on the subject. His is a choice home for christian pilgrims.

During the past autumn and the present winter Bro. Wm. Jackson, the Methodist minister in the place, has been giving a series of nine discourses against our views of the Scripture teaching on the nature of man, and his condition between death and the resurrection; and the final destiny of the wicked. He has reviewed our works, and various other writers, and waked up considerable thought on the subject. Previous to our arrival, Bro. Porter had taken occasion to publish in the Richmond Guardian and the Danville Union, that we would review Bro. Jackson; or give our views on the same subject. The following is what he inserted in the Guardian:—

"To the Editor of the Richmond Guardian:

Will you kindly allow me a brief space in your columns for the following notice?

Elder M. Grant, of Boston, Editor of the World's Crisis, intends to visit Danville, and spend the two first Sabbaths in January and intervening week, during which time a course of lectures will be delivered, proving the entire mortality of man, and that no part of him has a conscious existence between death and the resurrection. And, also, that the wicked will not live eternally, but that Malachi's burning day will leave them 'neither root nor branch.' And that infidel Spiritualism, with many other isms of a similar character, now sweeping over this continent, are the natural offspring of the opposite doctrines. He will also take up the three hells; the pagan hell, and the hell of modern orthodoxy, the receptacle of the immortal immaterial departed souls of the wicked versus the hell of the Bible; with many other important truths, which ought to be well known and understood, at this late hour, in the history of our planet.

The Elder will meet any clergymen, or number of clergymen, to discuss these disputed articles of doctrine, provided half of the time be allowed him. JOHN PORTER.

On seeing the foregoing notice in the Guardian, a minister in Melbourne took occasion to send a sharp remonstrance to the editor for inserting the notice of our meetings. This called out the following from the editor of the Richmond Guardian in the issue of January 9th:—

"MORE LIGHT WANTED.—When, a few weeks ago, we announced the prospective lectures by Elder Grant at Danville, and recommended our readers to go and hear him, we had no idea that they were committing an unpardonable sin, or that we were going out of our way as a public journalist. It seems, however, that we have cast a fire-brand into the orthodox camp—if we may judge by a letter sent to us—intended, we suppose, for publication. The writer does not give his name, and for that reason we cannot insert it, although we are sorely tempted to do so just to show of what poor material an orthodox christian may be composed. We don't say this in any scoffing or sneering tone, but we have to take 'Orthodox' at his own valuation, and having summed him up he comes out a product of blanks—all naughts. We will give him credit for holding 'fast that which is good,' but we fancy the first part of the apostle's injunction, 'prove all things,' has not been attempted by 'Orthodox,' for he seems to be one of those who would

'Make his doctrines orthodox
By apostolic blows and knocks.'

He is very irate, and in his ire he is abusive towards us for introducing through the columns of the Guardian a 'dangerous infidel like Grant.' Mr. Grant may be all this, and much more, and yet we say to our readers 'go and hear him.' Like objects seen in the dark, infidelity is far more terrifying the further off you view it; and it is only 'weak vessels' who need be afraid of its utterances. Orthodox denounces 'discussion upon sacred things.' This is mere babbling, and it seems to us that he stands sadly in need of a dose of Grant.

Now we have not a shadow of sympathy with Grant's doctrines, but we have some respect for the rights of free discussion. We are not living under the shadow of the Inquition; if we were, we should know where to put our finger upon an executioner; but we shall be glad to know what difference there is in the two eras, 'if discussion upon sacred things by irreverent quacks is to be openly reprobated, because duly accredited messengers of God labor with a never tiring faithfulness, day after day, without encouragement from those who are so ready to give ear to things new and novel.' Well now, this is utterly unworthy of 'orthodox,' whom we take to be an honest man—albeit he is not mentally a strong one."

We are now (Feb. 8th) engaged in fulfilling the appointment made by Bro. Porter. There is much interest to hear. We have large audiences, and some of the leading citizens are well covinced that we are advocating the truth. We hope to see happy results from our meetings.

The following is Bro. Jackson's programme, as published in the Danville Union:—

"A COURSE OF SERMONS ON THE SOUL. Its nature, destiny, and the importance of its salvation.

1. "The soul spiritual in its nature." Gen. 1: 26.
2. "The soul immortal in its duration."—Gen. 1: 26.
3. "The penalty attached to the transgression of the law which the soul is bound to obey." Gen. 2: 17.
4. "The importance of the soul's salvation, as seen by prophets, angels, and God." 1 Pet. 1: 10–12.
5. "The importance, etc., as estimated by the Redeemer." Mark 8: 36.
6. "The state of the soul between death and the resurrection." 1 Thess. 4: 13.
7. "The resurrection of the body and its reunion with the soul." 1 Cor. 15: 42.
8. "The soul before the great tribunal."—2 Cor. 5: 10.
9. "The soul in its eternal state." Isa. 57: 15.

It will be observed that only one of the texts says a word about the soul, and in that passage the original is better translated life.

After our arrival in Danville, we sent the following to Bro. Jackson:—

"Dear Bro. Jackson:—As I am intending to spend a few days in Danville, it would afford me pleasure to meet you for public discussion of those points of doctrine in our faith on which we unfortunately disagree. You have lately delivered a series of discourses on the soul of man, in which you have taken positions directly opposed to the views held by those belonging to the religious body with which I am connected. I am told you have made the subject of the immortality of the soul, and its resultant doctrines, your study. I, too, have bestowed some thought and investigation upon them. Let us meet, and, in a spirit of Christian charity, compare our views. Let the public have the benefit of our discussions. Truth is better than error. Let us seek to find the truth, and, having found it, joy to defend it.

Hoping to receive a favorable reply to my invitation, I subscribe myself

Your Bro. in Christ, MILES GRANT.

P. S.—If you decline discussion, I should be happy to have you attend our meetings, and propound objections, or ask questions, if so disposed. M. G."

The next day after sending an invitation to Bro. Jackson to discuss our points of difference in doctrine, we received the following:

"Danville, Feb. 9th, 1869.

Eld. M. Grant:—Dear Bro,—Your invitation to public discussion I most respectfully decline. The public can have the opportunity of comparing our views in another way, if you feel inclined to adopt it, as it is my intention to publish a series of tracts on the points in debate.

With respect to your meetings; allow me, my dear sir, to say that I have once arranged my circuit work so as to enable me to attend every service you were announced to hold, as well as broken an engagement of three months standing to enable me to do so. It is my purpose to hear you all I can (which will not be more than twice or thrice), but as to asking questions, etc., I do not wish to avail myself of anything of the kind. Hoping that we may meet in that kingdom in which we shall see eye to eye, I am yours affectionately,

WM. JACKSON.

P. S.—Any other notes sent by children, or in any other way than through the post-office, I cannot notice. W. J."

HELP THE NEEDY.—We are sorry to learn that Bro. B. P. Manning, Manchester, N. H., is in needy circumstances. He has been an invalid for some years, and unable to preach but little. His hope of eternal life is bright, but he needs some material aid. We learn he has never been more needy than now.

SLEEP.—The interesting series of articles on "Sleep," published in the Crisis, were from the pen of Dr. E. Hurd, Danville, P. Q., Canada. We have some encouragement to expect another interesting series of articles from him on what constitutes our "Personal Identity."

THE VOICE OF THE WEST.—Among our numerous exchanges, the Voice holds the first place in our esteem as a live, religious paper, filled with interesting matter. We never hesitate to speak in its praise. It deserves a wide circulation among the friends of Jesus.

GERMAN TRACTS.

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

"HISTORIC ECHOES."

I have read this work, by Bro. J. Couch, with much interest and recommend its perusal to others. But the interest would have been much greater if Bro. C., had told us where we could find all the statements which he says are to be found in history, etc.

There are so many histories and papers in these days, that it is quite difficult to turn readily and read some of these things as stated by Bro. Couch. If there was some way by which we could be directed to the particular history, vol., page, etc., and the date, or no. and vol. of the papers referred to, we then could read the work with much more interest and profit. Cannot this work be revised? or an article written for the Crisis and the Voice, to give us this desired information? This turning over so many histories and papers to find what our own eyes would like to see, is something like hunting for "a needle in a haymow." Now as Bro. C., knows just where the "needle" is, will he please tell us where we can find all the historic facts to which he refers?

We are not disposed to question the truthfulness of the matter; but when an opponent asks us for the authority we have for certain facts referred to, whether Biblical or historical, we always like to be able to give the book, chapter and verse.

I do not say these things to prejudice any one against "Historic Echoes;" but rather to increase an interest in the study of it. I say study, for it is a work that should be studied; as it treats upon a subject of vast importance to this generation.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

THE A. A. MISSION SOCIETY.

"BRO. G. T. ADAMS:—There was a colored man came here yesterday—gave his name as Titus, and said he was on his way to Richmond Va., under the auspices of the Mission. He wanted to preach, but we did not let him. He said you sent him here. * * * * After conversation with him, I mistrusted all was not just as it should be. He said the Mission did not pay his expenses, so he was obliged to preach on the way to get money. He said he was formerly a Methodist preacher." ***

In reply to the above, we would say that the Mission Board has sent out no such person; and further, when the Board send missionaries, teachers, etc., to their fields of labor, it furnishes them with the necessary means to go, and to procure something to live on after they get there. The Board each year makes full report of its doings—how every dollar is spent—so that all donors and friends may know just where their gifts have gone. Our report for 1868 is now published in a neat pamphlet, which we shall be pleased to forward free to any and all who will give us their names. Any who wish to aid the Society in its good work among the freedmen and elsewhere, will please forward to the Treasurer by mail, or send by the hand of some well known and responsible person; and all cash received will be acknowledged in the Crisis from week to week.

For the Board, GEO. T. ADAMS, Treas.

MEMPHIS.

We would say to the dear Brn. and Sisters, that by the mercies of the Lord, we have safely arrived at the mission in this city, and we find ourselves happily disappointed in regard to the state of things.

A greater work is being done than we had supposed, in educating and elevating the colored people; and from our own experience, we think that it is generally underrated by the brethren and sisters north. The school is large and very prosperous, numbering nearly two hundred scholars, and new ones constantly being added.

Then the church, consisting of more than one hundred members, is a bright and shining light to the region round about; and were it a white church, with the same zeal, in some Northern State, it would be considered as one the Gibraltars of Adventism, as it is now in truth. They love the the truths we love, and as quickly detect the inconsistencies of modern theology as many of their pale brethren at the North. The poor and the needy are being looked after, though we are constrained to say that this sphere of labor might be greatly enlarged, were the contributions more extensive.

And now what a field of labor presents itself on every hand, and what sheaves all ready to harvest are before us. "We speak that we do know." Can we sleep on the eve of the judgment? Oh that the friends of the cause would arouse themselves, and by earnest effort show that they believe "the Morning draweth nigh." What we do must be done quickly, and may the Lord sustain the right and his cause, in the midst of a perverse people, until "He shall come whose right it is" to rule and gather his children to himself.

PHIL. 3: 11.

"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

A Correspondent wishes to know what I think of Phil. 3: 11. "Does it teach that only the righteous dead will be raised?"

Ans. I see nothing in this text which conveys any such idea. Does "Correspondent" think it has an "inferential bearing in that direction"? Allow me to ask a question. Should a mere inference ever be taken against clear, positive testimony? Will not one plain "Thus saith the Lord," without trope or symbol, sweep down all inferences? I think so. And if language can make a subject conclusive, the resurrection of the wicked is clearly and fairly set forth in many places, both in the Old and New Testaments; and all this play of words in forming adjectives for LIFE sinks into insignificance before the words of Him who spake as never man spake; while in the presence of disciples and unbelieving Jews he plainly declared—"The hour [or time] is coming, in the which ALL that are in the graves shall hear his [i. e., Jesus Christ's] voice, and shall come forth."

Says one, I acknowledge that all will come forth; that is, he will bring the elements of which man is composed together, and make up the man as perfect as when laid in his coffin; but he will not have life. How can a dead body HEAR? Recollect, ALL that came forth HEARD.

Another argument used against the force of this scripture is, that the term "all" does not always mean every one; and Matt. 3: 5 is quoted to sustain this argument;—"Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Well, even in this place it meant the largest part. Thus according to this quotation it would make the greatest part who are in their graves to hear and come forth.

Well, Master, do you leave it here without designating characters?

No.

What are the characteristics of these "all" who are in their graves and hear and come forth?

Part of them have done good.

But, Master, some tell us that none who are in their graves will ever hear thy voice, only those who have done good.

That's a great mistake, for I say there is another class that will hear, and come forth unto the resurrection of damnation.

Who are they, Master?

Ans. Those who have done evil.

Then, Master, I understand you to say here that the time is coming when those who do evil shall come forth from their graves; that they shall hear, and stand up; because you say they shall have a resurrection; the same word you use relative to those who have done good, only one is to zoee, or life, and the other is to krisis, or damnation. Well, now, when a man can hear, I think he must have life! and if he can stand up, I think he has some strength, if he has not perfect health.

Well, Master, if this was all you had ever said or inspired holy men to write on the subject, I should believe evil doers who are in their graves will hear thy voice and have a resurrection. But when I know that holy men have been moved to write it out again and again just as plainly, only clothing their ideas with a little different language, so that we have line upon line, I cannot for a moment allow this noon-day light to be eclipsed at all by mere inference. And inference is all there is against the resurrection of evil doers.

If I had never examined more than this one declaration of the Lord, I have this confidence in his word, that he never declares two opposites true. And when he says evil doers shall hear his voice in their graves, he nowhere declares they never shall hear his voice in that place.

But I did not intend to have gone thus far ere I told what I understood by the apostle's teaching in Phil. 3: 11. The passage reads thus: "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." The Greek term here for resurrection is a peculiar one, and occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It is generally understood by those who have examined this subject that anastasis is the common Greek word for resurrection; but in this passage it is exanastasis, ex meaning out; and, as some of the best critics say, should be rendered out from among the dead; that is, to have part in the first resurrection, which he knew would be both blessed and holy. Rev. 20: 6. No marvel if he felt anxious to escape being left in the "pit" or grave to be visited after many days. Isa. 24: 22. He knew there was a glorious recompense at the resurrection of the just, therefore he would be honest if it cost him his all, and watchful against sowing to the flesh, lest in the great harvest he reap corruption, or a corruptible body, which would utterly perish in its own corruption. Gal. 6: 8.

I see no necessity for the apostle's saying anything about the resurrection of the wicked here; the subject did not call for it; but in his discourse before the Roman governor it was called for, and he plainly and unhesitatingly declared his faith, that wicked men would have a resurrection. Acts 24: 15. It is not always necessary to speak of the resurrection of the wicked when setting forth the glories of the first resurrection. Let the saints occasionally enjoy this feast without turning their thoughts towards the doom of the impenitent.

Again, it is claimed that there are good people who believe the wicked will never be raised. I freely admit it. I also think there are good people who believe the wicked will be tormented eternally, but that does not make the doctrine true! BEULAH MATHEWSON.

MONSTROUS!!
DEATH DEIFIED.

In a sermon of H. W. Beecher's, preached in Plymouth church, Brooklyn, reported, and going the rounds through the papers, is the following sentence, viz:—

"You sit by the side of persons, and you by the side of persons, whom it may be you hate and curse, misunderstanding them. By and by the great forming hand of Death and God (for what is the difference between the two names?) will take the persons that are to be united together, and form from them those magnificent decorations and disclosures of the upper world."

Can it be possible that people have "put darkness for light and light for darkness" so long, that they cannot see any difference between the names Death and God? And yet people sit and drink it down and think it is "beautiful." Their ears are turned away from the "truth," and are "turned unto fables."

It has all originated with the enemy, and grew out of what he told the woman: "Ye shall not surely die," after God had said, "Thou shalt surely die." Which can we believe? People have sung so much about death's being "the gate to endless joy," that they really think it is so. It is like a person's telling a lie. At first it almost chokes him, but he keeps telling it, until he finally makes himself think he is telling the truth.

Well, notwithstanding the above expressions, and that people look upon death as their best friend, and as the coming of Christ to waft them to realms of glory, the good old family Bible was stereotyped long before that notion came to be so prevalent, and that cannot be changed, obliterated, or blotted out, and still reads just as it used to. Instead of death's being a friend, the Bible represents him as a dreaded foe—an "enemy." "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil."—Heb. 2: 14. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Cor. 15: 26. What! is God to be destroyed? Certainly, if there is no difference between the two names.

How came death in the world? Because of sin. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. 5: 12. Death came by sin. God said, "Thou shalt surely die"; and because they disobeyed his command said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." If death is a friend, and "the gate to endless joy," then Adam's sin was a necessity, and resulted in the greatest possible blessing that could have been conferred upon the human family. If he had not sinned, there would have been no death; and if no death, then no gate to glory. This is the legitimate conclusion. O how different does the good old-fashioned Bible read. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by SIN." "The wages of sin is death." "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."

This is indeed a fast age. People are not content to go through the grave to their reward, as Christ did; and so the old-fashioned Bible doctrine of the resurrection of the DEAD is denied and ridiculed.

Although Christ said, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth" (John 5: 28), and Paul said, "If the dead rise not, ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (1 Cor. 15: 16–18), people can figure it all away, and put "light for darkness and darkness for light." It would seem much more honorable and just if those that do it would set the Bible one side entirely. No wonder there are infidels. No wonder people discard the Bible when they see so many tunes played on it by fingering, figuring, twisting and turning.

The worst infidelity of the present day is that manifested by the professed friends of Jesus. Nearly every plain Bible statement is made to mean something that it does not say. People read a passage of Scripture. I ask, Do you believe that? "Yes, but I do not believe it as you do." That is just the difference. One believes it, and the other puts a construction on it and believes the construction, instead of believing what the Bible says. How much more like "faith" it would be to believe it without any altering or tinkering.

It is high time that christians who still have confidence in the Bible bestir themselves, and see the wiles of the devil. It is high time that those who want to escape the "strong delusion" of Spiritualism, which is sweeping its millions to perdition, should believe what the Bible says on the nature and destiny of man, and, having confidence in that, lift it up as the "standard" raised against the enemy, as he has "come in like a flood."—Isa. 59: 19. There is no weapon to meet Spiritualism but the Bible. "The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything." Eccl. 9: 5. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."—Job. 14: 21. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. And if there is no resurrection of the dead, "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," instead of being in heaven with Christ, as the above theology teaches.

Let God be true, though it makes men and devils liars. What God has spoken he will perform. A. P. MOORE.

A LETTER TO FRIENDS.

Not having time to address the many friends separately who will wish to hear from us, I will direct a few lines to our family paper.

Now I shall not be able to tell you all about the South, for I have been here hardly long enough to learn so much, but can tell you a few things. We find the weather most of the time truly delightful. The nights are cool, but the frost has failed as yet to bring down the leaves from many of the trees, and they stand green and beautiful as they were in June. It seems a little odd to creep out of overcoats and furs so suddenly, and be sitting in a room without a fire, the windows up. But I will write no more now of climate or country, I have other things to say more important.

There is awful destitution here among the poor classes, both white and black. Half naked ones are coming daily to beg for clothes and bread, and how hard it seems to turn such empty away. Clothing we cannot furnish now for we are out. I wish you who can send well packed barrels of coats, pants, vests, shirts, and women's clothing too, with but the sacrifice of a little time, would do so. The Lord will reward you, I know. Mark plainly for Darlington, South Carolina, as express frieght on steamers via of Charlestown. Money would also come acceptable to pay expressage, which is some more than $2.00 from Boston. Think of these things, you who have enough to eat and wear. I have resolved with my wife to visit the cabins on the plantation near us, and talk, sing and pray with such as we can help.

We have arranged also for an evening school on a large plantation, where we can instruct those not able to leave their work in the day time. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that we may have heavenly wisdom and the spirit of the Lord to guide us in all things. My friends will also please write us. Address as above, directed Box 20.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PROGRESS OF DOCTRINE IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

*By Thomas Dehony Bernard, M. A., of Exeter College, and Rector of Walcot. From the Second London Edition.

By the last will and testament of the late Rev. John Bampton, Canon of Salisbury, he bequeathed property to the University of Oxford, and directed that upon the first Tuesday in Easter term, a lecturer be yearly appointed, by the heads of Colleges only, to preach eight Divinity lecture sermons the year following, at St. Mary's in Oxford, at a specified time. The book before us contains eight lectures delivered in accordance with that will, and have been republished from the second London edition, in this country.

The American editor, in his Prefatory Note, says of them: "They deserve unqualified commendation, for they are as nearly perfect, both in substance and form, as any human production can well be made. The views which they express are fresh and convincing, and the language in which they are presented is clear as crystal, revealing every thought and shade of thought with absolute distinctness. . . . There is constant progress from first to last, and the reader is made to see that every step in advance is safe, that he is moving steadily forward on solid ground. I have rarely perused a more attractive or instructive work, and I do not hesitate to pronounce it one of the best fruits of biblical study in modern times. No person can read it without having his interest in the New Testament, and his knowledge of that wonderful book greatly increased."—Alvah Hovey, Newton Theo. Institution.

The view taken by our author is this: that the doctrine of the New Testament, or, in other words, the divine teaching, or truth communicated by God through Jesus Christ, was not limited to the period of the incarnation, but is coincident in extent with the New Testament Scriptures. This fact he understands to be clearly proved by the words of Jesus to his disciples in his last memorable discourse with them just before he was crucified. He says, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now"; and immediately proceeds to speak of the spirit of truth, which is to be given then, and by which they shall be guided into all truth, and show them things to come.

Taking his stand-point here, he passes with perfect trust from the Divine Teacher to his chosen apostles, and receives into his heart their expansions of the divine word, and the deductions derived therefrom, as implicitly as though spoken by the Lord in person. It is the Spirit, and yet "the Lord is that Sprit"; it is as truly his voice speaking unto them from heaven through the Holy Ghost, as when uttered by himself in person. Had he not said of the Spirit of truth, "he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak?" "He shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you."

"That the apostle Paul recognized this as a verity, is evident from his testimony to the Corinthian church; that he spoke unto them the gospel in the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth. The apostolic period therefore "is not only a part of the history of the apprehension of truth by men; it is also a part of the history of the communication of truth by God. It is the first stage of the one, and the last stage of the other. In speaking therefore of progress of doctrine in the New Testament, I speak of a course of communication from God which reaches its completion within those limits, constituting a perfected scheme of divine teaching, open to new elucidations and deductions, but not to the addition of new materials."

He thus clearly defines his position, and makes it the basis of these eight discourses. Progress in doctrine, or divine teaching from the history of the God-man, as recorded by his four biographers, to the closing words of the Apocalyptic vision, and progress in the development of those divine teachings by the church to the end of time, causing her path to shine brighter and brighter till the perfect day.

And what he says of that perfect day, will meet with a glad response from hundreds who read it, so we transcribe it for their profit. I find it in his closing lecture, which is on the Apocalypse.

"After noting the instruction given on the cause and the history of the great consummation, I come now to that which is given on the constituent parts, viz., the coming of the Lord, and the attendant facts of victory, judgment, and restoration.

"The book is a doctrine of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 'Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him.' That is the first voice, and the key-note of the whole. The Epistles to the seven Churches (symbolic representatives of the whole church in its various conditions), all take their tone from this thought, and are the voice of a Lord who will 'come quickly.' The visions which follow draw to the same end, and the last voices of the book respond to the first, and attest its subject and its purpose. He which testifieth these things saith, 'Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus.' Whatever else the christian desires is bound up in this prospect. The deliverance of the creation from its present groans and travail, the redemption of our body, the perfection of man in a holy community, and the realization in outward things of the tendencies of the renewed nature, all these hopes wait on the one hope of 'his appearing.' Towards that hope our eyes have been steadily directed in the former apostolic writings; but it is here presented, not so much in relation to our personal life, as to the kingdom of God and to the word itself upon the whole. It appears here as the 'end of the world' towards which all things tend, and which the fuller manifestation of evil and the seeming victories of the enemy are themselves ordained to prepare. Differences and uncertainties of interpretation as to the details of this progressive history still leave us under the sense that it is a history of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. This assurance, enjoyed at all times, grows clearer in the days of trouble, rebuke and blasphemy, and the darkest times which the prophecy forebodes will be those in which its fullest uses will be found.

"The doctrine of the coming is in itself a doctrine of victory; and that character preeminently belongs to the apocalyptic teaching. . . . In the Apocalypse this spirit is still more distinctly felt; for there the virtual victory becomes a visible victory, both for the Lord and for his people. Every promise in the Epistles is addressed 'to him that overcometh,' and the last Epistle unites the victory of the servant with the victory of the Lord: 'To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne; even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne. . . . We are told of those who 'overcome by the blood of the Lord'; we hear their shout of victory, and see the palms in their hands; until in the last crisis the conquering armies of heaven sweep into sight, following the victor who has 'on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords.'

"But victory for one side is overthrow and condemnation for the other; so that we have here also a doctrine of judgment. 'The prince of this world is judged.' That saying might stand as a summary of a large part of the book. He is judged—judged as the prince of this world, and this world is involved in his judgment. The opening proclamation of the coming notifies also its effect on the world: 'Every eye shall see him,' etc. And these sounds continue. Things do not melt quietly into the peace of the kingdom of God. There is a crash of ruin, and a winepress of the wrath of Almighty God, and a lake that burns with fire and brimstone. And this judgment falls not only on principles and powers of evil, but on nations of men; and not only on nations, but on separate persons, even on 'every one who is not found written in the book of life.'

"The features of apocalyptic teaching which have now been noticed, may serve as instances of the whole character of the doctrine, which is combined with its predictions; and which, as a doctrine of consummation, is an evident advance in that particular on the doctrine of the Epistles. But it is when the prophecy carries us beyond the great crisis, that this advance is most clearly seen. The coming of the Lord is not the last thing which we know. After that event has closed the present age; after the victory has been won, and the judgment has dealt with things that are past, the final results appear, and the true life of man begins. The doctrine of the book is pre-eminently and ultimately one of restoration."

The author then quotes the text about the new heavens and earth, and descent of the New Jerusalem, and adds, "There is to be a City of God, 'The Holy City!' there is the realization of the true tendencies of man. 'New Jerusalem!' there is the fulfillment of the ancient promises of God. . . . Take from the Bible the final vision of the heavenly Jerusalem, and what will have been lost? Not merely a single passage, a sublime description, an important revelation; but a conclusion by which all that went before is interpreted and justified. . . . The great consummation is there, and we are instructed to observe that from the first the desires of men and the preparations of God have been alike directed towards it.

"The vision teaches us that the drama of the world must be finished, and its dispensation closed; that the Lord must have come, the dead have been raised, the judgment have sat, the heavens and the earth which are now have passed away, and the new creation have appeared, before the chosen people shall see the city of their habitation."

We did not intend to quote so largely, but we have no doubt the theme presented will interest and not weary you. This work so instructive is within the reach of nearly all, and as we think many will be glad to learn the price of the book, we take the liberty to state that it can be had postpaid by sending $1.50 to the publishers—Gould and Lincoln, Boston. "THE PLAN OF REDEMPTION."

I have read this work by I. C. Wellcome and C. Goud, and I am well pleased with the most of it. There are some points, however, which I do not fully endorse. Nevertheless, I can recommend it as a book well worth a careful perusal. It is an interesting and profitable book. T. M. PREBLE.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. L. Small.

BRO. GRANT:—I am living where I do not have the privilege of often hearing a preacher of like precious faith, and where wickedness abounds; but I am in my weak way endeavoring to let my light shine, and trying to hold forth the precious truths of God's word in my life, in word and deed. I am trying to bear the cross and come after my Master, and hope I shall be one of that company that shall say, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us."

If these lines should be read by any not having on the wedding garment, not fully ready, I beseech you to get clothed with Christ's righteousness. "To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart." Delays are exceedingly dangerous. Eternal life, an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that will not pass away, is at stake. O how can you hesitate? Come now to the blessed Savior, while mercy is offered, while pardon is granted. How much he did for your salvation and mine. How can you refuse the invitations of such a loving Being? How can you be cold and indifferent in his cause, when he suffered so much for you?

JOHN L. SMALL.

From Sr. C. Work.

DEAR SRS. IN THE LORD:—We love to hear from each other through our loved paper. If we cannot meet together on the Lord's day, it comforts our hearts to read the letters written. Although many write of suffering in one way and another, yet it is the way to be made clean and fit for the Master's use. I often think of Bro. and Sr. Chamberlain. Would like to meet them, but may we so live that we may meet where none of these afflictions can come.

What has been spoken about dress ought to lead us to look about us, dear Sisters, and examine ourselves before God, asking him to make it plain to us if our garments are spotted by the flesh. We must not think because we do not wear gold that we are clean. We must not have costly array. Many could save in this way and help the suffering. May the Lord teach us. He will if we are willing to learn. If our preaching brethren and sisters have rich clothing and trimmings we must not follow them futher than they follow Jesus; otherwise we may be lost. Let us try to do each other good.

Yours in the love of Jesus,
C. WORK.

From Bro. O. W. Kimball.

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps it would not be out of place to say a few words in regard to the cause of truth in this part of the vineyard. The Lord has been at work in Peru, some ten miles from here, under the faithful labors of Bro. J. T. Jordan, of Poland. Meetings have been continued since he left by Brn. Haggett, Abbott, and others. Some have started for the kingdom, and are willing to bear the scoffs and frowns incident to those who loved the whole truth of God. May the Lord bless the people at Peru, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ, ORRIN W. KIMBALL.

Canton, Me.

Obituaries.

THOMAS. Fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 9th. at Lafayette, R. I., my brother, Asel B. Thomas, aged twenty-five years and eleven months.

Some five years ago he gave his heart to Jesus, and in humble obedience to his command, was led into the liquid stream and buried beneath its yielding wave and raised in the likeness of his Savior's resurrection. Since then he has endeavored to maintain his profession with christian fidelity and faithfulness remembering that here he was but a pilgrim and stranger; that this world was not his rest, but his citizenship was in heaven, from whence he looked for the Savior.

About a month previous to his death he was attacked with hemorrhage at the lungs. He took his bed and never left it until he was dressed for the tomb. The blessed hope of the coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead cheered his heart when the scenes of earth were fading from his view.

The funeral was held in the meeting house at Lafayette. Bro. A. Damon delivered a comforting discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 14. A large circle of friends are left to mourn his loss.

J. W. THOMAS.

SMALL. Died in Jamestown, Minn., July 22d, 1868, of paralysis, Elder Jellerson Small, in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

He formerly resided in Maine, and labored and sacrificed for God and the salvation of his fellow man. I trust he now sleeps in Jesus. At first, he feared that his work had not been done, and wanted to get well so that he could work more in his Master's vineyard; but towards the last he became more patient and resigned, and we are comforted with the hope of seeing him in God's kingdom very soon. JOHN L. SMALL.

WOODMAN. Died in Alton, Feb. 9th, Hattie B. Woodman, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary P. Woodman, aged nine years, eleven months, twenty days.

Hattie had but few equals. She was an amiable little girl, and always industrious; even in her sickness, when well enough to sit up, her little hands were employed, and has left a memento of her diligence which her kind parents, brothers and sisters look at in sadness; but they weep not without hope, for Jesus has bought her with his own blood, and Hattie will live again when Jesus comes.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Jer. 31; 16–17. J. PINKHAM.

VARNEY. Died in Farmington, N. H., Nov. 21st, 1868, of a paralytic shock, Sr. Temperance, wife of Abram Varney, and mother of Eld. J. H. F. Varney, aged sixty-eight years.

She who gave her heart to the Lord while young, and loved to see the principle of honesty lived out and the christian graces of patience, meekness, etc. exemplified, will rise to share the glories of a pure world. Our Sr. leaves a husband and three children to mourn the loss of a good companion and mother. Sermon by the writer, from 1. Cor. 15: 19. J. G. SMITH.

ROGERS. Died in Belgrade, Me., Jan. 22d, 1869, Anna A., daughter of John O. and Caroline Rogers, aged twelve years and nine months.

Anna was a much loved child, with her sweet face ever beaming with intellect, gladness and love. She quickly won the affections of those who saw her. S. J. ROCKWOOD.

ROBBINS. Died in West Gloucester, R. I., Bro. I. S. Bobbins, aged sixty-nine years.

Brother R. suffered very much in his sickness, but he is at rest now; for he sleeps in Jesus. His last words were—"Tell my friends the sufferer is at rest." At his dying request we attended his funeral. D. V. COREY.

SHEPHERD. Died in Melvin Village, N. H., Feb. 5th, 1869, of scarlet fever and canker rash, Jennie Shepherd, only daughter of Bro. Chas. H. and Sr. Carrie F. Shepherd, aged six years and eleven months.

Death's ruthless hand plucked the bud as soon as it began to bloom. May God greatly bless our Bro. and Sr. S. and the mourning circle in this time of bereavement.

A discourse was preached by the writer from 2 Kings 4: 26. "It is well with the child."

A. W. SIBLEY.

Voice of the West, please copy.

GARLAND. Died in Farmington, N. H., Feb. 6th, 1869, of bone cancer, Sr. Lucinda Garland, aged fifty-six years.

Our sister at intervals during her life has been a child of great suffering, but she has borne all like a christian. The blessed hope has been a comfort to her, and she has gone down expecting to sleep but a little while. She leaves two daughters, and loved ones. May they be ready to meet her where suffering will never come.

Words of comfort, at the funeral, by the writer.

J. G. SMITH.

WHITTEN. Died in Clinton, Me, Feb. 3d, 1869, James Whitten, aged seventy-five years.

We have good reasons to believe that these many years, while he has been toiling for the good of his large and interesting family (the most of whom are firm believers in the Advent doctrine), he has laid up a treasure "where moth and rust doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal." On Friday before he died, he took the Bible to read in his family for the last time; after which, when too feeble to kneel, he committed himself and all to the care of a just God. "How precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." N. W. RANDALL.

WEYMOUTH. Died in Clinton, Me., Olive Shepherd, wife of Charles Weymouth, aged twenty-three years.

The subject of this notice several years ago gave her heart to the Lord, but in time became less interested. When the M. M. Tent was in Clinton in 1867, she attended the meetings and was much interested. Since then she has been very attentive, and has taken a part in religious exercises; consequently we mourn not without hope. May God sanctify this bereavement to the good of her companion. Sermon by Prof. Smith, of Colby University. N. W. RANDALL.

WENTWORTH. Died in Clinton, Me., Dec. 5th, 1868, Frankie, son of Chas. Wentworth, aged nine years.

Little Frankie was drowned while out skating. He was an unusually good boy.

N. W. RANDALL.

HOBBS. Died in Clinton, Me., Jan. 29th, D. Hobbs, aged fifty-one years.

The deceased in his last hours consecrated himself anew to the service of Christ, and passed away in the triumphs of faith. N. W. RANDALL.

HOLT. Died in Clinton, Me., Jan. 31st, 1869, Calvin Holt, aged forty-five years.

He leaves a companion and three children, who mourn, but not without hope. N. W. RANDALL.

Married.

At Sugar Hill, N. H., Jan. 26th, by Eld. N. Wheeler, Mr. W. W. WEAR and Miss E. A. BATCHELDOR.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

ATHENS, Feb. 9. The members of the new Cabinet now unanimously agree with the King in adhering to the resolutions of the Paris Conference.

PARIS, 11th. Twenty-eight Carlists, who were attempting to cross the frontier yesterday, were arrested by a body of the French Corps of Observation, and sent to Bayonne.

Ten thousand troops are to sail immediately for Cuba.

LONDON, 12. It is stated that the Persian army, with "Sehah" at its head, has gone to Bagdad. In the meantime Turkish troops are pressing forward to the Persian frontier.

MADRID, 12. The Constituent Cortes was formally opened yesterday, with great ceremony. The city was profusely decorated in honor of the event. Crowds of people were on the streets, flags were flying, and the day was regarded as a holiday. Serrano delivered a congratulatory address, on the assembling of the deputies.

MADRID, Feb. 12. In his speech at the opening of Cortes to-day Gen. Serrano said that the nations of Europe, in attaining a higher degree of civilization, threw off the traditional bands which fettered the public mind. Spain delayed for a long time following the example of her neighbors. She now calls her representatives to construct the new edifice. The revolution has achieved a bloodless victory.

At the opening of the Cortes the Marquis of Santa Cruz presided. A salute of twenty-one guns was fired. During Marshal Serrano's speech there were vivas for the Provisional Government, for Gen. Prim, for the Republic, and for monarchy. The confusion was great, but was quelled by Serrano's crying "Viva for the sovereignty of the Cortes."

GREECE ACCEPTS.—The King of Greece has triumphed over both cabinet and people in their opposition to the acceptance of the protocol agreed upon at Paris, and a cable dispatch to-day states that a messenger left Athens yesterday with a reply from the Greek Government which will be entirely satisfactory to the members of the Conference. The King has had quite a stormy time of it since the protocol was submitted to Greece for acceptance, and Athens has rarely had so much excitement as has been witnessed there within the last two weeks. The determination of the European powers to prevent an outbreak between Greece and Turkey has been very noticeable through the whole time that negotiations have been in progress, and the adjournment of the Conference has been postponed from time to time until Greece could be persuaded through her King that the best course for her to pursue was to agree with the terms and conditions laid down by the diplomatists at Paris. That agreement has at last been reached, and this action of the Greek Government dissipates, for the present, the war cloud which has been threatening to break upon Greece and Turkey for some weeks past.

☞ Paris letters say Santa Anna is at the head of an enterprise, the object of which is to place a European monarch on the Mexican throne. General Tobado, military director of the expedition, has received from the provisional government permission to carry out with him three hundred Spanish officers. The French, Austrian and English governments are reported as subscribing twenty million dollars for the success of Santa Anna.

☞ A new Jewish paper is to be started in New York, which will be liberal and progressive in its ideas. The editor says true Judaism demands no blind faith, no belief contradicted by reason, no forms and ceremonies not in harmony with the requirements of life, and it invites intelligent inquiry.

☞ A single artesian well supplies all the water used at Fon-du-lac, Wisconsin.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Feb. 9. The pardon of Dr. Mudd was prepared to-day, and has doubtless received the President's signature.

New York, Feb. 11. A Madrid letter says: The popular hatred against the priests is terrific, and there is no doubt that it will be intensified, if possible, by the attitude of the Pope toward the Liberal party. It was a mob of priests who assassinated the civil Governor of Burgos in the Cathedral, and the popular fury was so aroused by the act that the place had to be declared in a state of siege. A couple of weeks ago an indignation meeting was held in Madrid, and the populace, excited beyond measure by the conduct of the Pope and the priests, tore down and burnt the Papal arms, forced the Nuncio to fly, and went around shouting, "down with the Nuncio," and "Freedom of worship forever." They were only pacified by the appearance of an officer of the government, who declared that the powers of the Nuncio had been withdrawn.

St. Louis, Feb. 11. The Indians have again made their appearance on the south side of the Platte, near Fort McPherson. Two companies of troops were sent from Omaha last night in anticipation of serious disturbances, as the appearance of Indians in that neighborhood is in violation of the treaty, and indicates mischief.

HAVANA, Feb. 10. An attempt was made last night to fire the powder magazine of Fort Puna. A person divested of his clothing, and disguised with black paint, climbed the outer wall for that purpose, but was discovered by the sentry, who shot and wounded him. He is now a prisoner.

Havana journals in the Spanish interests are quarrelling among themselves on questions of policy, advocating widely distinct systems and measures.

The insurrectionists are spreading in the western quarter. Troops are leaving Havana to quiet outbreaks at Cienfuegos, Sancti Spiritus and probably Trinidad. These outbreaks are for Quesada, who is threatening Villa Clara after having been vainly followed by Spaniards from Nuevitas. Citizens of Villa Clara are forced to arm and aid the military. Quesada had seven regiments well armed and much money, but wanted artillery.

At the outbreak in the extreme west arms were captured nine leagues from the city.

Trouble had occurred in Matanzas between citizens and soldiers.

The island generally is undermined by the revolt. The government has only volunteer troops at hand.

San Francisco, Feb. 10. A heavy rain storm has prevailed for the last two days throughout the State, and railroad and telegraphic communication has been interrupted in all directions. Portions of the San Jose Valley Railroad have been swept away, and the track of the Central Pacific Railroad is covered with water from Sacramento river, which has overflown its banks. Bridges of the California Northern Railroad have been swept away by floods.

There have been severe snow storms in the mountains, and in some places snow has drifted to the depth of fifteen feet. Snow slides are reported along the line of the Central Pacific Railroad, near Emigrant Gap and at Cisco, destroying some of the snow sheds. Thus far railway trains have suffered detentions of only a few hours.

THE PARDON OF DR. MUDD.—The pardon of Dr. Mudd, one of the conspirators for the assassination of President Lincoln, sentenced to be confined at hard labor for life at Dry Tortugas, will arrive at that place about the middle of the week, and Dr. Mudd will be liberated.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 26th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec. of Conf.

Notice.

The Advent Christian Quarterly Conference of New York State, will be held at Springwater Valley, Livingston Co., N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, March 4th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Brethren and sisters, come to this feast. Come praying earnestly that sinners may be converted to God, and that much good may be done. Probation is almost over. O Lord, help us all to feel how much is depending upon us as christians.

D. COGSWELL.

Conference at Dover, Me.

There will be a conference held in Dover, Me., at Brans' Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 25th, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. In behalf of the Eastern Maine Conference the brethren here are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. It is a new place for such a meeting. Call on Brn. Bray and Royal. Arrangements will be made to care for visitors. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend, and lend all that aid the gospel requires as far as possible. Bro. Robert Hall, from N. B., is expected to be in attendance with us. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of men, and God shall have the glory. In behalf of the church,

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting or conference at West Deerfield, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Feb. 17th, at 7 o'clock, and continue through the week, and over Sunday. Brethren and sisters in that vicinity and adjoining towns are requested to come and labor for the salvation of the perishing. Faithful and able servants of God are expected to be present to preach the word. For the brethren,

ENOCH MORRILL.

Pine Swamp, Ct.

A protracted meeting will commence (D. V.), at Pine Swamp, Ct., Tuesday evening, Feb. 23d, and continue over the Sabbath. God was with us in the meeting which we held there in December, and we believe he will be in this. Come and enjoy the season with us.

Conference.

There will be a conference at South Hope, Me., to commence Friday, March 5th, at two o'clock P. M., and hold over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go to this meeting to labor for the Lord. Ministering brethren are invited.

JER. PARTRIDGE, President.
J. T. HEMENWAY, Clerk.

To the Afflicted.

For the accommodation of those writing me about the Russian instrument for extracting humors, I wish to say the instrument is a horn case, about one foot long, one inch in diameter, with thirty-six fine, highly electrified needles thrown slightly into the skin by the means of a spiral spring, but not to hurt or draw blood. They can be operated by any one after reading the seventy-fourth page of the medical book that accompanies it. The perforated spots are anointed with the oil that comes with it. There is a counterfeit, four inches long, with no spring. Beware of them. The genuine comes from Dr. Lindon, of Cleaveland, Ohio. I act as agent, knowing this to be the best thing in use for immediately extracting pain of all kinds when applied according to directions in the book. It is doing wonders, and no family will do without it when its worth is understood. It is safe, and any one can use it after a little study of the book.

The afflicted will soon be paid for getting one. You can help your poor neighbors who have the rheumatism, sore throat, eyes, or spinal complaint. I know what I am saying and doing. It is for the benefit of the afflicted. This notice is sufficient to set the outline of facts before you, and the book will give you all you need, to be a blessing to the afflicted. Price $10.50. Forwarded to any one within one hundred and fifty miles of me.

Chicopee Falls, Mass. HIRAM MUNGER.

About Letters.

As no one writes me that they have sent me money which I have not acknowledged, I conclude that only the one from Minn. has been lost; so brethren may not fear to send money as heretofore.

J. BLAIN.

Notice.

With the view of closing my labors with the church in Savoy, I would say, that churches wishing me to labor with them, can address me at Savoy, Mass., for the present. E. M'CULLOCK.

Portland, Me.

Meetings are held in Advent Hall, Cushman's Block, 353½ Congress St., three times on the Sabbath, and Tuesday and Friday evenings, at 7½ o'clock. EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.
2. AN EXPOSITION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.
3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrible, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.
4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show the mystery of the Four Great Wars, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 25 cts.
5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and he is going to do so now. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies. A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness. The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
8. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
9. THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.
10. RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.20.

THE SEED AND THE SOWERS.

Ever so little the seed may be,
Ever so little the hand,
But when it is sown it must grow, you see,
And develop its nature, seed, flower, or tree;
The sunshine, the air, and the dew are free
At its command.

If the seed be good, we rejoice in hope
Of the harvest it will yield:
We wait and watch for its springing up,
Admire its growth, and count on the crop
That will come from the little seeds we drop
In the great wide field.

But if we heedlessly scatter wide
Seeds we may happen to find,
We care not for culture, or what may betide,
We sow here and there on the highway side;
Whether they've lived, or whether they've died,
We never mind.

Yet every sower must one day reap
Fruit from the seed he has sown:
How carefully then it becomes us to keep
A watchful eye on the seed, and seek
To sow what is good, that we may not weep
To receive our own.

HOW DID JESUS BRING "IMMORTALITY TO LIGHT"?

Two parties are found among professed christians, who each advocate a favorite theory as the solution of this interesting question. One, that Jesus brought soul-"immortality" to light, and proved that man has an undying nature; the other, that he revealed the fact of immortality by the resurrection alone. We propose to examine the question, and try to discover the truth, judging from the language of the quotation in it.

The expression implies a revealing, or developing of that which has been hidden and unseen. It informs us of a wondrous evolution, by which, out of a dark uncertainty and obscurity, in the face it may be of positive error, is rolled into the clear light of truth man's immortality, and if so, then the manner of bestowing it and its nature. If Christ did that, he did not do it by the use of any uncertain means; his work or way of bringing it to light must settle the question, and the means he uses must be the only evidence in the case. Hence to him we appeal, and ask how he did it?

Years ago, long before Jesus' birth, the Egyptians asserted that man has inherent immortality; an indwelling nature, capable of surviving the expiring human "breath of life" and the dismemberment of the body, and living unaffected by apparent, so-called death; except as a prisoner is affected by liberation from prison, through endless duration. In statu quo, Socrates and Plato, and other philosophers ancient and modern, Jewish and Christian, have reiterated the theory, until with any amount of dogmatic assertion and casual matter-of-fact use of terms, one would suppose that philosophy had brought "immortality to light," and settled the question forever beyond successful refutation, and made it certain that man has inherent soul-immortality,—an undying nature. Certainly a large class seem to be satisfied with its conclusions and refer to Christ as having brought "immortality to light"; as though he had at least established it, or given his sanction to it.

Addison represents Cato as being thus satisfied when he makes him say, as to Plato's argument—"It must be so! Plato, thou reasonest well." And doubtless Mr. Addison only makes his Cato express his own satisfaction and convincement of the truth of the Platonic philosophy. If the postulate of these philosophers is true, then Jesus Christ, as they precede him by so long a time, could bring nothing "to light." He could simply follow in their wake, his services only being required as a developer, and to attest the truth of their dogmas, and say, "It is true, and thus and thus I prove it to you."

But did he do so? or did he, on the contrary, pursue a course entirely new and unlike anything ever used in this philosophical school to prove a position? Let us look at the heart of the notion—inherent immortality, brought to light by Jesus Christ, and see whether it be true or false. Jesus was not obliged to act in harmony with these old speculators, and travel in their old, worn ways; he had a right to act independently of them, and "bring immortality to light" in God's own way. What, then, from the nature of the case, would be his necessary work, were he to prove the philosophers' theories, or, in "a new and living way," reveal the truth?

Certain arguments are used by believers in the theory aforesaid, which if reliable should have been substantiated by Jesus, and their truthfulness and fitness to the truth proved. One tells us that "our dread of extinction is the soul's spontaneous assertion of its immortality"; and to this hundreds say "Amen." Dr Young tells us that there is no death; that

"What we reckon such is but the kindly frost
Which cracks the kernel and lets its prisoner free."

Another (a recent writer, and editor of a popular religious paper) states that while these may be strong proofs, "only when Christ had 'brought immortality to light' did the human heart find itself able to look into the grave with abiding confidence, and see in the gate of the grave the portal to a truer and completer life." So, while admitting the others as subordinate proofs, he clings principally to Christ as showing "the gate of death" to be "the portal of a truer and completer life"; and he evidently means that Christ has substantiated these theories. Has he done so? If so, then the manner in which he has professed to do it is strange, and we cannot account for it; we cannot understand his method of bringing "to light"; it is all darkness to us. If not so, then the theories, the (to us) warped notions of believers in the doctrine, are as unaccountable.

We should suppose that Christ must die, whatever he was to prove about the matter; for that a soul can live while the body lives is apparent, and none question it. The question to be solved is, whether "the gate of death" is "the portal to a truer and completer life"; whether it is "a kindly frost to break the shell and set its prisoner free"; whether, when a man is dead, he is alive; whether his body is only the house in which his soul lives. Hence the question gathers its interest about the grave. Hence if Jesus bring "to light" "immortality" (of the soul), he must prove or show how the soul can survive the death of the body. Hence he brings a gospel light to the grave, and lets its beams reveal the theory taught by heathen and professed christian philosophers as truth must die. But what then? We should look for some post mortem spirit manifestation by the Son of God of himself. Here is the point. If a spirit once in a body can exist out of it; if it can be seen or manifest itself in any way; if departing saints can see them, or mediums can see them; or any manifestation of them can be made (and this should be true, or Jesus at least should have had the power of doing it), then should Jesus have thus revealed himself, and so have "brought immortality [of the soul] to light."

Too much is at stake here, too much to be proved, for anything less than "infallible proofs." One side or the other must fail here, and as we are believers in the doctrine of no immortality except by the resurrection of the dead, the friends of this theory will be urged for such proofs as a positive evidence practical and personal by Jesus himself as they can produce, that "the gate of death is the portal to a truer and completer life." We challenge them to do so. The "gate" is the very entrance; so is the "portal"; by a metempsychosis, Jesus is believed to have made one, the other, or both, identical when he "brought immortality to light." Now if we were advocates of that doctrine, we should so long for "light" on this point; in this manner, to wit, we should desire to find some scriptural evidence that "Jesus showed himself alive after his passion" while yet his body lay in Joseph's tomb. Then we could rest on something like evidence, and feel that at the gate of the grave "light" was shining to reveal that "gate" as—by wonderful transformation.

But Jesus gave no such evidence; there is no line or word of proof of it in the Bible. Stubborn truth for those who would seek comfort from that source, or argue that Christ "brought to light" such "immortality" as they believe in. It is not strange that a large majority of those who are the strongest advocates of the theory look not to Jesus at all for evidence, but turn away from him and the Bible entirely, and build up their faith in the dogma, on the testimony of what professes to be "departed human spirits."

"Three days and three nights" was "the Son of man," by his own testimony, "in the heart of the earth," and he not "yet ascended to" his "Father." He was dead, and in the tomb, and the seal was unbroken for three days and nights; unbroken, until the mighty angel with authority from the King of heaven broke the seal of the king of the earth, and Jesus only then made his appearance by "a resurrection from the dead." Such a resurrection as left only the napkin and linen clothes where he had lain, and took him completely out of the dominion of death. A resurrection of Jesus from the dead was certainly a "strange," "unaccountable" way of bringing (soul) "immortality to light," as he could only do that while his body was dead. He did not do it then, and hence his resurrection (which was a re-living of his body) did not prove it. It was however a blessed good way of bringing an "immortality to light" not yet discovered by nor dreamed of until then, and even afterward thought "incredible," to wit, "immortality by a resurrection of the dead," and not before; hence the way or "gate" out of the grave is the portal to a truer, completer life, and not the gate into it. So if Jesus' method proves any thing, it proves that man has not immortality now, in any sense; that death does not open the way to it, and only deliverance from it does. He proves, by running directly athwart the track of those old theories, that they were only darkness, and light was needed; and it broke forth in its full glory and splendor when Jesus so strangely and gloriously came out of the tomb, and said, "All hail!" and proved that the only way to live after death is by a resurrection from the dead; and so "brought life and immortality to light." Hence Peter speaks of being "begotten again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead"; not by his going into the grave. And so Paul says that "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Mark, "died and rose again," not died and went to heaven; died, and so proved immortality, and made the gate of death a higher and completer life; but "died and rose again." And further, they which sleep! "will God bring with him"; i. e., in the same manner, the true sense of the original; for "with" him. So the resurrection is the "portal." Blessed be the name of the Lord. Amen.

ANECDOTES OF THE FIRST COMMANDMENT.

"I am the Lord thy God," etc.

"The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be forever."—Ps. 37: 18.

The pious Lutheran minister at Berlin, Paul Gerhard, was deposed from his office and banished the country in 1666 by the Elector Frederic William the Great, on account of the faithful discharge of his ministerial duties. Not knowing whither to go, he and his wife passed out of the city, and finally stopped at a tavern, oppressed with care and grief. Gerhard endeavored to comfort his partner by that text, Ps. 37; 5, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass." He then went into the garden adjoining the tavern, in order to commune with God concerning the cares that weighed him down. Seating himself in an arbor, and taking out his pocket-book, he composed that beautiful hymn, while his soul was filled with the peace of God and a holy confidence:

Commit thou every grievance
Into his faithful hands,
To his sure care and guidance
Who heaven and earth commands;
For He, the cloud's Director,
Whom winds and seas obey,
Will be thy kind protector,
And will prepare thy way.

Having finished the hymn, he presented it to his still deeply disconsolate wife. She had not yet finished its perusal, when two gentlemen entered the guest room, who forthwith commenced a conversation with Gerhard, informing him that Duke Christian of Merseburg had deputed them to invite a certain deposed minister of Berlin, named Gerhard, to call on him. Light and joy now beamed from the countenances of Gerhard and his wife, who were to be graciously rewarded for their trust in God! Gerhard traveled to Merseburg, received a pension from the Duke, and in 1669 was appointed Archdeacon at Luebben, in the province of Niederlausitz. The aforesaid hymn in after years fell into the hands of the Elector of Prussia, and made such an impression on his mind, that he asked his prime minister who was the author thereof. "The same Paul Gerhard," replied the minister, "whom your Excellency banished the country." The Elector felt alarmed and deeply bowed at the injustice he had done to Gerhard.

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Ps. 34: 7.

One day while Flattich, a pious minister of Wirtemberg, was sitting and meditating in his arm-chair, one of his foster children fell out of a second story window, right before him, down upon the pavement below. He calmly ordered his daughter to go down and pick up the child. On doing so, she found the child not only alive, but without having sustained the least injury. The noise occasioned thereby had called out a neighbor's wife, who reproached Flattich for his want of attention to his foster children, for she had seen him quietly reposing in his arm-chair when the boy fell out of the window. While she was thus scolding, her own child, which she had brought along, fell from a bench in the room and broke one of its arms. "Do you see, good woman," said Flattich, "if you imagine yourself to be the sole guardian of your child, then you must constantly carry it on your arm. I commend my children to God, and if they fall, they fall into the arms of an angel."

"The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."—Heb. 13: 6.

Fresenius, a pious minister at Frankfort-on-the-Main, one day found his mother, who was a widow, concerned about a dollar which she much needed at the time, but did not know whence to procure it. Not being himself able at that instant to furnish her with one, he said, "I likewise believe you must have the dollar; I accordingly turn this hour-glass, and assure you that if the dollar is really needed, it will positively lie here on the table before the hour-glass is run down. If it does not lie here, God will convince us, after this hour, that it was not as indispensable as we imagine." The hour-glass was scarcely run out one half when a messenger arrived, who had traversed an eight hours' walk, bringing a dollar which some one was owing to Fresenius. This dollar rejoiced mother and son more than if they had received a large capital, they considering it a great memorial coin of the divine help received.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10.

The daughter of a distinguished officer of the Emperor of Morrocco had a pious christian female slave. Her deep piety made such an impression on her heart that she requested her to instruct her in the christian religion. She soon found joy and peace in believing in Christ, which she openly confessed, though aware of what a cruel death awaited every apostate from Islamism. Her father and relatives labored in vain to undermine her faith. Neither good words nor bad, nor the representations of the terrible sufferings she would have to endure, could diminish her love to Christ, with whom all these trials tended to unite still closer. The Emperor, hearing of these facts, sent for her and asked her whether she was a christian? She answered in the affirmative, adding that by the help of God she intended to remain a christian all her life-time. Struck by her decided answer, the Sultan tried to frighten her by threatening her with death. "I do not dread death," she replied, "and will most cheerfully suffer it for my Lord Jesus' sake. The whole world could not devise a torture so dreadful as to be able to separate me from him!" Thereupon she was delivered over to the judge, who pronounced her worthy of death. The Sultan now made her great promises if she would recant, offering her as a husband the highest man in the realm next to himself. But in vain; she replied with firm assurance, "The whole world is much too poor to make me sell Christ, my only comfort and joy. I greatly prefer a happy death to an unhappy marriage. I am but too well aware that the Mohammedan faith is all false, and with my whole heart am I willing to lose my life out of love to Him who died for me!" Sentence of death was then pronounced upon her, and immediately carried out. Calmly she submitted her head to the axe of the executioner.—The Moravian.

"SEMERON."

Semeron, the word rendered "to-day," in Luke 23: 43, is also rendered "day," "a day," "this day" (Heb. 4th chap.); and in John 20: 19, it is rendered "same day."

Taking in consideration the request of the thief, the revealed location of paradise, the kingdom of God, etc., I am satisfied that "same day" would be a correct rendering in the passage under consideration. Then it would read thus:—"So be it; I say to thee [the] same day with me thou shalt be in paradise." This makes it all plain; the reply corresponding with the request.

PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

My Large Circuit.

"God moves in a mysterious way."

Three months ago I found myself isolated from all ecclesiastical bodies, with no plans except to follow Jesus fully, and no prospects except to grapple awhile with pinching poverty here, and then be transferred to a land of fadeless crowns and eternal sunshine. I had just paid the full price demanded for liberty of conscience, and was now waiting to hear the Master speak, and watching the movements of the fiery pillar.

Sectarianism had been so fully purged from my moral system, that I stood committed to enter any door where there was a chance to honor God and bless humanity. The Macedonian cry was soon wafted to my ears from different directions, and I stepped forth to redeem my pledge, by preaching Jesus to those who made the demand. New England reached out her hands and welcomed me to her wholesome hills and pleasant vales. I soon found that the blessed Lord had accepted the offering which I had laid at his feet, and was determined to give me an abundance of work. I had, for his dear sake, given up my right to be appointed by the Conference to any particular circuit or station, and lo! the Cabinet above spread out the whole land before me, and gave me a full commission to enter this great harvest field! Hallelujah! "The world is my parish."

Springfield, Mass.

At the solicitation of the brethren in Springfield, I made my appearance among them on the 10th of January. I spent four weeks in their midst very pleasantly and profitably. Many thanks for their cordiality and kindness. My heart was cheered to see a few start out in the race for eternal life, and to witness a real "revival" in the hearts of many in the church. The congregations were good, and the interest was steadily rising when I left. Ardent desires were kindled in many bosoms to know more of the power of Christ to save. I trust the tide of spirituality will continue to rise, until the whole church is gloriously baptized for her mission, and a multitude of sinners shall be savingly reached. I enjoyed liberty in preaching, and felt very much at home among the brethren.

There is some diversity in the views entertained by the Society in regard to the resurrection of the wicked; but I hope the entire membership will get so filled with the Holy Ghost, and so burdened for perishing men, that there will be little disposition to debate such points of doctrine. Time is short. The demands for labor are urgent. Let our earnest efforts and consecrated lives demonstrate to the world that the Adventist people really believe the great truths they have inscribed on their banners.

Springfield is a very beautiful young city of some thirty thousand inhabitants. It bears every mark of enterprise and thrift. The United States Armory, located here, adds much beauty and interest to the place. It is a magnificent institution, costing millions of dollars. During the war, 3,300 men were employed in the armory, and one thousand guns were manufactured every day. More than half a million of guns are now stored there, ready for use whenever the war-cry shall be raised.

A Hero's Grave.

In the beautiful cemetery of Springfield lies the dust of a fallen hero. Orange Scott, by the noble stand he took in behalf of the oppressed, has erected a monument to his memory more sacred and enduring than the marble which marks his burial. His great heart yearned over the millions of America's outraged children, and he threw his whole energies into the work of Christian philanthropy. To him, American slavery was the "sum of all villainies." Many a daring battle did he fight, to correct the pro-slavery sentiment and administration of the M. E. Church, of which he was an able minister for many years. By his convincing logic and his thrilling eloquence he has been known to keep a whole conference at bay for days together. He had not only a keen perception of truth, but also—what is too rare a commodity—a real moral heroism to stand squarely upon his honest convictions, however fiercely the storms might howl!

Finding, at length, that the spirit of oppression was determined to rule or ruin the church of his choice, he shook the dust from his garments and walked out. He was the leading spirit in the organization of the "American Wesleyan Connection," in 1843. All honor to such champions for God and humanity. Ten thousand such agitators are needed to-day, to wake up the slumbering masses to a sense of their high responsibilities. Chattel slavery, thank God, has been shattered to atoms by the iron hail of our Northern soldiery. Thus God has caused even the "wrath of man to praise him." O how widespread and terrible is the havoc which sin is still making! Let all the friends of Jesus rally to the work of snatching a few more sinners from the devil's grasp, before the door of mercy is forever closed!

SOMETHING OR NOTHING.

Mr. Editor;—We were told by our late disputant that, to be consistent, materialists must deny the existence of angels; and, in support of this singular conclusion, are informed that the great Dr. Priestley labored hard to prove that angels were nothing. Now just the opposite is true. Most materialists do, and very consistently too, believe every angel to be a tangible something. Dr. Priestley was a champion of the doctrines defended by us, only so far as relates to the materiality of man and the necessity of a resurrection. He was not an annihilationist, nor did he believe that the wicked will suffer eternally. He was a restorationist. In regard to the duration of punishment, annihilationists and immaterialists agree. They both properly conclude that it will be "everlasting." They differ only as to its nature. But in regard to angels, the case is reversed. Priestley and the immaterialists here agree. True, the latter say angels are immaterial beings, and Priestley contends they are only imaginary beings, but what is the difference between immateriality and nothing? A distinction is attempted, but both nevertheless agree that in substance an angel is nothing.

Immateriality—the quality of being immaterial, or not consisting of matter—is the very opposite of material existence. One means nothing. The other implies something. To speak of a living angel or a living soul as an immaterial substance, is a positive contradiction in terms. Substance signifies materiality, or something. Immateriality means nothing. There is no such thing in the universe as an immaterial substance. To speak of substance, as having none of the properties of substance, neither form, size, weight, color, mobility, locality, etc., is really to speak of nothing. To say an angel is without an organism, or parts, without height or thickness, without centre, or circumference, is to say an angel is nothing. Now, wherein does this view differ from the opinion of Priestley, who also believed angels are nothing? If an angel is made of nothing, and is nothing, then there is nothing to describe, nothing to talk about, and nothing to think of. The immaterialists and Priestley may as well agree, for there is nothing to disagree about, and all their speculation about nothing, amounts to nothing, then there certainly is nothing to call angel.

And then, if, as the Bible says, the wicked "shall be no more," they also shall become nothing. This is annihilation. The righteous shall live forever, shall always exist, and shall always be something. Then what is the difference between the annihilation of the wicked and immateriality? The difference is just nothing. Our opponent has all along been an annihilationist, but of the fact that he was, knew nothing. He has tried hard to write about nothing, to make us believe in nothing, and thinks almost nothing of us, because we believe the wicked shall come to nothing. As organized, tangible, sensitive, intelligent and responsible beings, the wicked shall "cease to be." Before God they amount to nothing, and in his mercy he will reduce them to nothing. So far then, we too are an immaterialist. But our opponent is an annihilationist in a much stronger sense. He believes all mankind shall come to nothing. God is nothing. Christ is nothing. The angels are nothing. It is said nothing is impossible, but that all these beings are nothing—we honestly believe nothing of it. Nothing so unreasonable was ever preached. There is nothing in it.

Annihilationists do not believe that matter will be reduced to nothing. Oh no! There is nothing more freely admitted than the essential property known as indestructibility. Then what do they believe? Well, Webster gives this meaning exactly. He thus defines annihilate:—"To destroy the form or peculiar distinctive properties of, so that the specific thing no longer exists; as, to annihilate a forest by cutting and carrying away the trees, though the timber may still exist; also, to destroy or eradicate, as a property or attribute of a thing."

Of annihilation he says: "The act of reducing to nothing, or non-existence; or the act of destroying the form or combination of parts under which a thing exists, so that the name can no longer be applied to it; as, the annihilation of a corporation."

Just in this sense the wicked come to nothing. After utterly perishing "as natural brute beasts," there will be nothing left of their organization, nothing of the distinctive properties or attributes by which they are known, nothing of their love, hate, envy, thought or memory, and hence nothing will be left to which the name of man, being, creature, soul or intelligence, can any longer be applied. They will be reduced to nothing, just as a forest, or corporation, or a beast, may come to nothing. They will be nothing after their "destruction," just as they were nothing before they were created. The "dust of the ground" out of which men, as well as trees and beasts, are formed, may exist forever, but endless existence of men or beasts does not depend on any present inherent attribute or quality. The Bible indeed reveals immortality, but man must nevertheless obtain the boon "by patient continuance in well-doing," through Jesus Christ, or he will surely come to nothing.

We were told that angels are "obviously represented in the Scriptures as immaterial." If this is obvious, why was it not made obvious to our readers by giving them at least one obvious proof? No! this is obviously an error. The corporeity of angels is obvious and unquestionable. In the first place, the meaning of the Greek and Hebrew words rendered angel, is simply messenger, and in no sense favors the doctrine of immateriality. They are applied to human beings, as well as to celestial beings, and even "to the winds, fire, pestilence, and every creature which God employs as his special agent, and to the agents of every creature."

In consequence of this general use of the words, some have concluded that there really are no such beings. But that there are, is most obviously represented in the Scriptures, and we are no less surprised than Immaterialist that any should maintain that there are not. But that Priestley and the immaterialists both err in concluding angels are nothing, is obvious alone from two very obvious facts:

First. Man was created only a little lower than the angels; and in consequence of the striking similarity of form, angels have often been mistaken and entertained unawares for men. Those who went to convey Lot from Sodom tarried all night, and even washed their feet.

Second. Angels are subject to hunger. The three who visited Abraham, as well as the two who saved Lot, all partook of nourishment. David, in referring to the manna, says, "Man did eat angels' food." Manna is evidently raised in some other world, and if it is "angels' food," it is fair to conclude that angels do eat it.

Now what stronger proof is needed that angels are organisms? How can they possibly be beings of great beauty and intelligence, and yet be unorganized nonentities? Might as well adopt the view of Priestley, for that is what immateriality amounts to. If angels have no forms to describe, and can neither be measured, nor weighed, nor touched, then they must indeed be nothing. If the wicked "shall be as though they never had been," how far will they be removed from a state of immateriality? Annihilation implies immateriality, disorganization, and nothing; but why will not Immaterialist admit that immateriality and disorganization will be the result of being "burned up"? What is the difference between nothing and nothing? We can imagine a vast difference between men, between men and angels, between angels and archangels, between the most exalted beings in the Universe and God, but this would be a comparison between something and something. Nothing is always nothing. It has no beginning, no end, no form, no attributes, and no properties. It is invisible, and it is indivisible. It is nowhere, and yet it is everywhere. It accomplishes nothing, is good for nothing, and will always be nothing but nothing.

Christ is something. Of his materiality we have positive proof. After his resurrection he said, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." He showed his wounds to prove that he was the same Jesus whom they had crucified, and continued to eat and drink. Immaterialists may cry "infidel" against those who believe Christ hath "flesh and bones," but they might as well attempt to prove that flesh and bones are nothing. Christ said he had.

Because "God is pneuma," some think he is also nothing. Pneuma never signifies immateriality, but it does sometimes mean being. God is a Being. In Heb. 1, we are told that Christ was the "express image of his person," and in Phil. 11, that he was "in the form of God." Christ was a person, and had a form, and as the representative and the "express image" of God, he could well say, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." But "Stephen [before he fell asleep, not after] saw Christ on the right hand of the Father." Moses was once permitted to see a part of God's form, but was not allowed to see his face.—Ex. 33: 23. In Gen. 9, we read: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." Yes, man, even man, bears the divine likeness. Not the immaterial man, or the man of nothing, for there is no such man, but the man with the blood in his veins. "God made man in his own image, after his own likeness." What did he make man of? He "made man out of the dust of the ground." Where is this Being, in whose likeness the dust-made man was formed? Is he everywhere? The pantheist may well say, "Yes, God is everywhere"—"no more in one place than another"—because he believes the universe is God, and that there is no God but the combined forces and laws of the universe. But to believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, one must believe that Christ is the "express image of his person." He is omnipresent—in power, in influence, and by his messengers and representatives. But personally he is in heaven, and Christ is there with him. He is invisible, because he is not before us, or when he is, because we are not permitted to see him. But Christ, Enoch, and Elias, doubtless do see God, and "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The difference between God and the beings made "in the image of God," we do not presume to discuss—but we confess we cannot believe that God is an Eternal Great Invisible Nothing, filling the whole universe, and yet that he is nowhere in particular!—Reader, can you?—Materialist.—Luminary.

FAITH.

Have we real faith in God? We all ask, but do we believe that when we ask we shall receive? If not, we sin, and our prayers are a sin in the sight of a living God. But if we believe when we ask, why do not sinners feel? I think it is high time that every one who has named the name of God, should look about, and see whether they have in possession the real faith or not. P. Young.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

QUIET FOR THE SICK.

To the sensitive ear of a sick person there is something terribly discordant in the rustling of a stiff dress or the creaking of a pair of ungainly shoes; yet how often is the sufferer compelled to lie and listen to the distressing sounds, with no power to remedy the matter, the will being too feeble to assert itself, and every delicate, unstrung nerve placed on the rack of endurance by the thoughtlessness of an individual. The rustling of a newspaper, held and adjusted by some careless watcher, is often likewise the cause of a sleepless night, and the most distressing nervous symptoms. The senses of a sick person are ever on the alert; the whisper which announces his condition to an inquiring friend, is more distinct than your loudest tone would be in health, for it is both heard and felt, and he can see, almost, with closed eyes the ominous shake of the head with which you reply to the query, "is he better?"

A creaking rocking-chair is another dreadful annoyance to a sick patient. Rock, rock, goes the drowsy nurse—creak, creak, answers the chair. Throb, throb, responds the pain in the sick man's head, keeping time to the doleful music, until he dozes away into a nightmare sleep, in which case he dreams the chair is rocking on his head.

The writer of this article was very sick, years ago, and can yet distinctly remember the different phases of character in the persons who kindly tendered their services as watchers. One lady who volunteered, rocked incessantly upon a board which was loose under the carpet, until I fell asleep and dreamed I was rushing through a railroad tunnel, amid the disturbing noise of the cars. When I awoke from my unrefreshing slumber, there was the perpetual, faint clatter of the board, as loud and confusing to my nervous, sensitive ear, as thunder could have been in health. Of course I was worse in the morning, when my well-meaning friend went home.

Another wore a stiff silk dress, that rustled so it alarmed me into a sort of delirium, in which I imagined I was crowding through a field of high, ripe corn, and the noise of the sheaves as I passed, nearly distracted me.

Perfect quiet is necessary in the room of a sick person. No clashing of dishes, or unnecessary moving of furniture; and do not take the time when the patient is asleep to put the room in order. Often the groan of pain that escapes the restless sleeper is the result of some disordered vision consequent on the dropping of a spoon or shutting of a door. A charmed atmosphere of perfect silence and pure air, and an invisible watcher, whose very breathing should be hushed, is necessary to one whose life may hang upon a few hours of dreamless rest. I had intended, in this article alluding to the presence of visitors, but must reserve that for another paper.—Sorosis.

COLDS—HOW TO PREVENT THEM.

One of the leading predisposing causes is eating too much and eating those kinds of food which tend to clog up and burden the system. Any thing which weakens the body or depresses the vital powers, acts as a predisposing cause. For instance, the use of alcoholic liquors is a powerful predisposing cause, although they are often taken under the mistaken idea that they tend to prevent colds. It is now a well ascertained fact that persons who do not use stimulants can endure cold better and longer, and are much less liable to colds—the same is true of all diseases—than those who do. The reason is plain. It is that the effect of stimulation is always exhaustion.

The principle exciting cause of colds is being shut up in overheated and badly ventilated rooms. Persons who are thus confined are much more subject to them than those who are much out of doors in all kinds of weather. The following fact will serve as an illustration: In the winter of 1861, a portion of a regiment in the Army of the Potomac built fire-places of turf, stone, and such other rough materials as they could find, rude heaters but capital ventilators; while another portion bought little sheet-iron stoves, which were capable of making the tent as hot as an oven. The result was that among the first class there was scarcely a case of severe cold or pneumonia during the winter, while the second class suffered severely.

Pure air, not too highly heated, is one of the first requisites for preventing colds. Each one must determine for himself or herself just how it is best to secure it in their own individual case.

The diet should be plain, nutritious, unstimulating and not clogging, and care should be taken not to eat more than the system can properly appropriate.

The body should be warmly clothed, especially the extremities, but not so as to overheat any part. Protect the feet from wet. Dress comfortably.

Dip the hands in cool or cold water every morning upon rising, or wet a towel or sponge, and rub quickly the whole surface of the body; after which wipe dry and rub briskly until you produce a healthy glow of the skin. In doing this, care must be taken not to become chilled. A good reaction should always be secured. In some cases it may be absolutely necessary to do it before a hot fire.

If the feet or other portions of the body become wet, the clothing should be removed as soon as possible, the parts thoroughly dried and rubbed till a bright glow appears.

If you have a cold and wish to get rid of it quickly, eat little or nothing, drink cold water freely but slowly and a little at a time, and induce a general perspiration, either by exercise, a wet sheet pack, the lamp bath or the Turkish bath, if accessible. Colds will make short calls under such treatment, and not be very liable to repeat them.—Herald of Health.

NECESSITY OF FRESH AIR.

We have no doubt that a large proportion of the delicate females, with which our cities especially are filled, owe their ill-health to a neglect of exercise and fresh air. Take the daughter of a family in good circumstances. From her infancy she is guarded as if the least breath of air would injure her, never going out without being wrapped up to the chin, and often being sent to school even in a carriage. Her natural instinct to exercise is restrained as a vulgarity; she is called a tom-boy, a romp, and a dozen other contemptuous names; and thus, at last, she is drilled into a mere social machine, finally losing even the spirits to wish to take active exercise. Her days are spent in learning enormous lessons, or in practising crotchet work or embroidery, varied with an occasional children's party, where she is allowed whatever she pleases, and to dance herself into a fever. When she leaves school her existence becomes even more monotonous. Perhaps, if it is winter, and the family keeps no carriage, she is weeks without being out of the house; and in the house she does nothing but dawdle over a novel, stitch a bit of fancy work, or sit over the register of the furnace. If her father keeps a carriage, she may ride out occasionally; but she is always furred to the throat; and so things are no better. In a word, she is a hot-house plant, forced, like it, to a premature development; and like it doomed, in consequence, to a premature and unnatural decay.

Surely, if there is a reform in social life needed, in one particular more than in another, it is required in the education of our daughters, and in the life we allow them to lead afterward. They are dying, by hundreds, for want of fresh air; and yet we take almost no note of the fact. When the English prisoners perished in the Black Hole in Calcutta, from the foul atmosphere they were compelled to breathe, the whole civilized world cried out with indignation at the perpetrators of the deed; and though nearly a century has since elapsed, the story is still never told without exciting horror. But we permit our daughters, and to a certain extent our wives also, to die by slow degrees, equally for want of pure air. In fact, where the Black Hole of Calcutta stifled its hundreds, the close rooms inhabited by American females slay their thousands.—Health Reformer.

OVERWORK AND UNDERWORK.

The majority of mankind need no caution against overwork. Where work kills one, the want of work kills ten, the fires of passion consume twenty, sinful indulgence destroys fifty. In cases where work seems to undermine health, it is not so often that the labor is too much, as the faulty way in which it is done, the spirit in which it is performed. Labor to be permanently endurable, must be healthy; that is, it must be adapted to the mental and physical capacities of the worker, and especially if brain labor, it must be pleasing. It must not be allowed to intrench upon sleep, to interfere with the regular and deliberate taking of food, nor prevent a proper amount of recreation and exercise.—Scientific American.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

A German forrester, eighty-two years of age, wishing as he states, to divulge an important secret before he dies, has published in a German journal a recipe which he has used for fifty years for hydrophobia, and which, he claims, has saved several men and a great number of animals from a horrible death by hydrophobia. The bite must be bathed, as soon as possible with warm vinegar and water, and when this has dried, a few drops of muriatic acid poured upon the wound will destroy the poison of the saliva, and relieve the patient from all present or future danger.

OUR FUTURE "TO BE."

A wonderful land is that unseen shore,
Which the mists of eternity hide;
And we long on the wings of morning to soar,
And by faith view the promised landscape o'er,
And list to the ebb of its tide.

But the years of our lives they come and go,
Drifting from us in noiseless chime;
The blossoms of summer and winter's snow
Float onward and away in Time's ebb and flow,
In a silent but musical rhyme.

The shadow of graves in the past we see,
And our vision is blinded by tears;
For our doubts veil from us the future "to be,"
And darkness and sadness is o'er mountain and lea
As we struggle through our pilgrim years.

Our treasures are borne 'neath death's cold tide,
And our hearts are empty and lone;
Bright smiling faces dark Erebus now hides,
Sweet voices are hushed evermore at our side,
And we yearn to follow them on.

Loved sister and brother the monster pal
Snatched from us with relentless hand;
And we strove in our anguish to rend the veil,
And scatter our doubts and let faith prevail,
Yet darkness hid the distant strand.

We linger and watch near the dark river's shore
For a signal for us to "come";
Or we listen to hear God's clarion roar,
That shall call us away to return nevermore,
To dwell with angels and His Son.

Though the face of the "monster" is dread to see,
And they call the dark river Death;
Yet we fear not to enter that future "to be,"
Nor to hear it sounding o'er mountain and lea,
That the graves of the dead are cleft.

O, the mists of doubt are all scattered by faith,
For it sees the dead live again;
From this world of sin, when the earth shall quake,
From the shadow of death, our dead shall wake,
Together with them we'll ascend.

THE TIME OF OUR LORD'S BIRTH.

According to Luke, Joseph, and Mary the mother of our Lord, went from Nazareth to Bethlehem to be enrolled; and while there Jesus was born, and forty-one days afterward they were in the temple at Jerusalem, and presented him there, in accordance with the law of Moses, as recorded in Lev. 12, to make an offering of "two turtle doves or two young pigeons"; and after they had accomplished this, they returned to their own city, Nazareth. Compare Luke 2: 22, 23, 39, and Lev. 12: 1–8.

So the flight into Egypt from Bethlehem, and the return on the death of Herod, must have all been accomplished inside of forty-one days after his birth, to harmonize Luke's account with that of Matthew. For Matthew's account reads thus: "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem . . . [not long after he was born], there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born."

Note. Were not these "the principal men" whom he gave orders to have slain as soon as his own death should take place, as recorded by Josephus,—Antiq., Book 17, chap. 6, sec. 5? But to continue, Matthew says:—"And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea; for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also. When they heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshiped him. And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts—gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and fled into Egypt; and was there until the death of Herod. . . . Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth and slew all the children which were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men."—Matt. 2: 1–15.

Now, since our Lord was born in the night, the wise men must have arrived at Jerusalem the same night, to have got there when he was born in Bethlehem. On the morning after, then, they would commence their inquiries about his birth, and arrive at Bethlehem the second night; by which time they would have removed from the stable to the house or inn, when the crowd would have left, in a measure, by that time; where the wise men could have found them, instead of in the stable, where they were found by the shepherds the first night.

So the flight into Egypt would have taken place either the second or third night after; but probably the second night, to escape the slaughter ordered by Herod, which took in all the male children under two years; proving that Herod did not know but that the child was just born, from any information to the contrary obtained from the wise men relative to the time when the star appeared. For the probability is, that the star appeared before he was born, and increased in lustre till the time came, and thus indicated to them that he was born. So there is nothing in this which can indicate that Matthew's account is inconsistent with his starting point,—that "when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him."

According to Josephus' War of the Jews, book ii. chap. 1, sec. 1–3, the Jewish passover was at hand on the eighth day after Herod's death, which passover Joseph and Mary must have attended; for Luke says they "went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover." This indicates that the return from Egypt was accomplished in a few days; so the distance traveled over in their flight into Egypt could not have been great; for it was not far to the borders of Egypt from Bethlehem. So if the death of Herod took place in a few days after the slaughter of the infants, the birth of Christ might have been in the last month of the Jewish year, as the Passover was kept on the fourteenth day of the first month. For the death of Herod, and the birth of Christ in Bethlehem, is certainly limited to the inside of forty-one days; for Luke says that "when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord. . . . And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth."—Luke: 2: 22–32. And according to this law (Lev. 12), this presentation was to be made at the expiration of forty-one days after the birth of a male. And that his birth took place nearer the first Jewish month than our Christmas, is clear from the fact recorded by Luke, that on the night of his birth "there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks by night."—Luke 2: 8.

Dr. Adam Clarke states that the early rains come on in Judea about the first of November, when the sheep are taken in and housed till into February. And so he could not have been born earlier than February, nor later than the first of their first month, to make all the evidence harmonize. For it will be remembered that Luke calls him twelve years old at the Passover, when he talked with the doctors in the temple; and afterward at his baptism, not many days before the Passover, he said he "began to be about thirty years of age." Compare Luke 2: 42; 3: 23; John 1: 29, 35; 2: 1, 12–13.

So if he was twelve years old at one Passover, he could not have begun to be about thirty years old at his baptism, not many days before another Passover, unless his birth was nearer the Passover than his baptism was. The birth of our Lord could not, therefore, have been till long after Christmas.

Wm. Hobbs.

SOUND DOCTRINE.

"But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine."—Titus 2: 1.

How is this injunction heeded at the present day? How many are there of the number that profess to be among God's faithful teachers, who are "bold to speak the word without fear"; and, like Paul, can say from the heart, "I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God"? Acts 20: 27.

How many are there who love the world more than they fear God, and endeavor to please the world more than to please him? Why do many turn away from the plain teachings of the word of God, substituting the doctrines of men, and simply proclaim that which is the most pleasing to the greatest number of people; rather than to preach the simple truth just as God has given it to us? Is it because they have a fear of being unpopular in the world, and think they can not do as much good by preaching a Bible doctrine because of its unpopularity with the greater part of the people? Are there any who think more good can be done by withholding the least part of the word of God, even if it is unpopular, than by preaching the whole gospel?

We read that the "word of God is quick and powerful"; let us abide in his word, having great "boldness of speech" toward all men, and not be "ashamed of the gospel of Christ." It is evident that the Scriptures contain nothing but what is proper to be made known unto every one; for "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." 2 Tim. 3: 16. Because the time has come when "men will not endure sound doctrine," we have no excuse for remaining silent on the most glorious truths of God's word.

Rather let us rejoice in the abundance of God's promises, and "delight in the law of God"; let us be "patient in tribulation," and improve all our time to the glory of God, seeking ever to proclaim all the truth of the gospel that is within our abilities; for the Lord will surely come, and then all that have "endured unto the end shall be saved."

We find the apostle's charge to Timothy was to "preach the word." 2 Tim. 4: 12. Are we to suppose that Timothy understood by this "charge" that he was to preach that part of the word only which would please the greatest number of people, and, if inquired of as to the other part, explain it in such a way as would please them the best? or to preach the whole truth, and leave the results with the Lord? Probably no one will deny that he expected to preach the word as it came from the Lord; yet how many at the present time are so fearful of displeasing mortal man, that they neglect to declare the whole counsel of God; and, for fear of persecution, they bear the responsibility of displeasing One who is to be the Judge of all men, and will "reward them according to their works," at the final day of reckoning.

A preacher who was once strong in the Advent doctrine, and loved to talk of the coming of the Lord, was lately heard to remark, "We do not wish to be known by the name of Adventists, for that would hurt our influence!" Can "our influence" have more power and effect on the hearts of men than the power of the word of God? Can we be ashamed of Christ and his words, and refrain from speaking of his soon coming for fear of what the world will say, and think it is well-pleasing in his sight, and that we shall receive his smiles and approbation at last when he shall come to gather out his faithful ones?

We should think not; for we read that "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with his holy angels." (Mark 8: 38.)

Then let us be faithful, and continue patient in well-doing, enduring the scoffs and frowns of the world, for soon the day is coming when all these things shall be done away. We have the promise given us, "the meek shall inherit the earth." Not this earth as it now is, for "we, according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter 3: 13.

Who does not want to be redeemed ones that are "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," there to remain until "God's indignation be overpast?" Then the scoffer and all that have "done wickedly" may call upon the Lord, but it will be in vain. Then the last prayer shall have been answered, and none but those who have on the wedding garment shall be permitted to enter into the "marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. 19: 9.

PASTORAL VISITING.

How little of this real work is done in our day. There are Ministers enough, if their time was properly employed, to reach every individual, old and young, rich and poor. Who can estimate the good that could be done? How few of so called ministers even put their fingers to this part of the work! But a small part of them is seen outside the pulpit in search of lost souls, for whom they must give an account. Sometimes their carriages are seen at the doors of the rich members of their church, but never at the poor cottages. How unlike Jesus who went about doing good to both soul and body, to the rich and poor, and who has commanded his servants to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and to go into the highways and hedges, and among the outcasts and bid them come in.

"The poor," said our Savior, "have the gospel preached to them." If the poor have the offer of salvation it must be carried to their own doors, for most of the popular churches have virtually shut them out from the public means of grace, by selling or renting slips to the rich and aristocratic. If the poor are reached at all, it must be by a few God-sent laborers who count not their lives dear unto them so that they might win some.

A minister who does not visit the people in person from house to house, talk and pray with them, cannot do much good in the pulpit. He may study and arrange his subjects the best he can, he may attract the people with his eloquence, but he cannot reach their hearts. Often he does not aim at this, he is looking for his reward here, in popular applause and great salaries. But not so with him who has his commission from God—one who feels a necessity is upon him, a divine impulse impelling him to go forth and lead his fellow-men to Christ. He cannot keep still if he would. The word of the Lord is as a fire shut up in his bones; he cannot wait till Sabbath day. He is out among his neighbors, among those that are never seen inside of a church. He cannot rest and feel himself clear of the blood of his fellow men, till he has done all he possibly can to snatch them from perdition. Under the light from God, he sees the masses rushing on in the broad road to death. His whole being is stirred and set in motion. He is out among the lost, seeking and urging all he can to come in and be sheltered in Christ from the gathering storm. He has no time to lose. He hears his Savior say: "Behold I come quickly, to give to every man according as his work shall be."

A minister with a single eye to God's glory, and in view of the judgment fires of the last day, will feel as Paul felt when he was in Athens. He said his spirit was stirred within him to see the whole city given up to idolatry; and what did he do? Did he do as most ministers do in these days, join with their idolatry and fellowship with the world? No; he raised his voice against them, both in the streets and in their markets, as well as in the synagogues of the Jews. Paul lost no time, let no opportunities go unimproved, shunned no cross, and counted not his life dear; lost none of his zeal for the cause of God till his work was done, and then gave to his son Timothy in the gospel a solemn charge to preach the word, "Be instant in season and out of season." That is, improve every opportunity we see and seek for more. He told him to "reprove, rebuke and exhort;" for the time would come when the church would not endure sound doctrine.

This time has come. But few will bear the truth; but few preachers dare stand straight for Bible holiness, the cross of Jesus; but few go out on real pastoral labor, going everywhere, the Lord working with them, as the apostles went, taking a soldier's fare. The Lord wants such men. The world needs such in these days, if ever it did. A minister that will go forth to work in this apostolic order, will feel the sacred fire burn in his own soul, and the blessed assurance that he is gathering stars to deck his own crown in the day of eternity. No matter if he gets repulsed in some places, he will go to others with mighty faith in Jesus of success somewhere. He is not to be intimidated by opposition, till his work is done and he is crowned as one of God's faithful servants, and hears it said, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Earnest Christian.

For the World's Crisis.

SITTING ON THE THRONE.

NUMBER TWO.

This implies the exercise of kingly prerogative in official capacity, which Christ will do when he receives "the throne of his father David, which the Lord God sware to give unto him,"—his own throne by right of descent after the flesh, as the "Son of man," the heir of David, or the throne of his glory. This he has not yet done, for he has not yet "come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him"; and he declares that it is then that he will do this. Otherwise, if he be now reigning in heaven, it necessarily follows that the spirits of his saints are entities, and as such are now with him in glory, or that they are resurrected and receive spiritual bodies as fast as they die, and are then translated; for whenever Christ shall reign, then and there those who have suffered with him shall also reign with him. 2 Tim. 2: 12.

But he also declares that they are to be "glorified together" (Rom. 8: 17), and their resurrection unquestionably precedes their glorification; and the former does not take place until the Lord himself descends from heaven (1 Thess. 4: 16); and both his descent and their resurrection transpire prior to his taking his seat upon the throne of his glory. For when he comes, all the saints will come with him (Zech. 14: 5), having been previously "caught up to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4: 17), from whence they "shall return, and come to Zion (Isa. 35: 10), with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; . . . they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." (This would seem to be the antitype of what was done in ancient times by the people under "the law," at the closing of the day of atonement, as recorded in the Talmud. When the high priest had completed all his official labors within the vail, on returning to the tabernacle of the congregation, where the worshipers were in expectant waiting for him, he would lift up his hands, and conferring the blessing upon them, declare how that God had accepted their repentance and their offerings, and had forgiven their sins. Then the people, en masse, accompanied the high priest to his house with songs of praises and shoutings of joy.) "They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away"; for "their sins shall be blotted out, when the times of refreshing [reviving, rebreathing, reliving] shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts 3: 19.

But to come back to Mount Zion, or Sion, the name of one of the mountains on which the city of Jerusalem was built, and on which the "citadel" of the Jebusites stood when David took possession of it and transferred his court thither from Hebron; whence it was called "the city of David," where the throne of David, the seat of the royal or kingly office, was situated; while Mount Moriah—called "the city of Jerusalem"—was the seat of the national worship.

These ancient and original distinctions should always be kept in view, in order to a clear apprehension of God's word; and it becomes necessary here to make reference to some geographical facts, in order to elucidate some things connected with "the saints coming to Zion."

We will first contemplate Jerusalem as one city. It is situated about twenty-five miles west of the Jordan, forty-two miles east of the Mediterranean Sea, one hundred and two miles south of Damascus, and one hundred and fifty miles north of the Elanitic, or eastern gulf (Sinus Aelanites) of the Red Sea. It was built on a group of four hills, viz., Sion, Acra, Moriah, and Bezetha. Approaching it from the south, by the old Roman road running from Akba, we come first to the hill of Sion; second to Acra, which was crescent shaped, to the right and east of which was situated the third hill—Moriah; and west of north from that was the fourth hill, Bezetha. The valley between Sion, Acra and Moriah was called by Josephus that of "the cheesemongers." Of these hills Acra was formerly higher than Moriah, but the Asmoneans (or Maccabees) cut Acra down and filled up the valley between it and Moriah, leaving that between Moriah and Sion in statu quo, as a dividing line between what was originally two cities; the one on Sion (the city of David) being termed "the upper city," and the other, on Acra (Jeru-Salem) the "lower city," from whence (I conjecture) was derived the expressions, "upper and lower Salem." It was this filling up of the valley between Acra and Moriah (on which the temple stood), and the grading of Acra, that joined these two together, and constituted Moriah an integral part of the "lower city," and gave to it the name of Jerusalem.

Across the valley from the base of Sion to the summit of Moriah, Solomon built a causeway, called the "ascent by which Solomon went up to the house of the Lord"; i. e., from Sion to Moriah; the summit of which was limestone rock.

Bezetha, or the "new city," was built afterwards, in addition, as the former city was extended northward, constituting a beautiful chain of types, in their successive development, of events that do and must transpire in building up that Jesusalem that is free, the mother of us all.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

THE FINAL DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

NUMBER SEVEN.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

13. Two resurrections.

Whenever the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked are mentioned together, the righteous are always named first; both as it respects order and time. And in connection with the resurrection, if the term life or damnation is named, the one unto life is always mentioned first: as in Dan. 12: 2,—"Some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Also in John 5: 29,—"They that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

Here are two samples as it respects order. The following respect the time: 1 Cor. 15: 23,—"Christ the first fruits, afterwards, they that are Christ's, at his coming." Again, in Rev. 20: 6,—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." This word "first" is from the Greek protos, which signifies order of time, as its primary meaning. How, then, can any one deny that there are to be two resurrections; one of the righteous, and the other of the wicked? This is most clearly taught in the New Testament.

In Luke 14: 14, the same is plainly taught, as in the passage just quoted from Rev. 20: 5, 6; as there would be no propriety in saying, "at the resurrection of the just," if the unjust are raised at the same time. If the righteous and the wicked are to be raised from the dead at the same time, then the idea would have been plainly stated if it had been simply said—at the resurrection. If there is to be but one resurrection, then all, both the righteous and the wicked, will be raised at one and the same time; which would be clearly expressed by the phrase—at the resurrection.

Again, in Luke 20: 35, 36, Christ says: "But they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead"; that is, from the dead ones, "they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." What resurrection? Answer. The first resurrection; for none come forth in this resurrection except those who are "worthy to obtain that world"; and consequently they are "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection": "neither can they die any more;" clearly implying that they who are not "worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection," or that resurrection; they can die, and will die again, because they are not the children of God, as they do not attain unto the resurrection—the first resurrection.

This agrees with John 5: 29, where the first resurrection is called "the resurrection of life," and the second is called "the resurrection of damnation." If there had been but one resurrection here taught, Christ would have said—unto the resurrection, they that have done good to life, and they that have done evil to damnation (or condemnation); all coming up in the same resurrection. But instead of this, he definitely names the two distinct resurrections by saying—"unto the resurrection of life"; and "unto the resurrection of damnation." If a part of those who could come forth in one and the same resurrection are to be damned, then it could not be called the resurrection of life. And if a part come forth to life, then it could not be called the resurrection of damnation. In this case it would be a mixed resurrection, and called simply the resurrection.

But Christ distinctly names two resurrections; the first unto life, and the second unto damnation. We should particularly notice the phrase—"unto the resurrection of life"; and "unto the resurrection of damnation." No one can ever come forth "unto the resurrection of damnation," if there is never to be any such thing. This would be impossible, for no one can ever come unto a thing which does not exist. But Christ here states explicitly who shall "come forth" unto the resurrection of damnation,—"They that have done evil." And such will be "hurt of the second death." Rev. 2: 11.

Again, in John 11: 24, where Martha, in speaking of her brother, says: "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." She knew that her brother would have his resurrection with the "just" at "the resurrection of life; or, what is called in Rev. 20: 6, "the first resurrection"—"at the last day." But why did she say "at the last day," if all are to have their resurrection at that time? The righteous only are to have their resurrection then. See also John 6: 39, 40, 44, 54. Two resurrections are plainly implied here; the first "at the last day," and the second afterwards, when "death and hell" (or hades) deliver "up the dead which were in them." Rev. 20: 13. This is in harmony with Heb. 11: 35, where the first resurrection is plainly stated to be "a better resurrection." But better than what? Why, the first resurrection will be far "better" than the second; for the first will be unto life, and the other unto damnation.

Again in Phil. 3: 11, Paul tells us how he labored that he "might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Or rather (Greek exanastasis—literally), "Out from among the dead"—or out from the dead ones. What did Paul mean when he said, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead"? If he knew that all were to be raised at one time, was he afraid that he should not be raised then? What sense can be attached to the apostle's words, if there are not to be two resurrections? If we take into consideration what Christ said in Luke 14: 14,—"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," in connection with Acts 24: 15,—"There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," then we can see why Paul was determined to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead" "at the last day."

This shows why the apostle was determined, "by any means," to attain "unto the resurrection of life"; for he well knew that if he did not attain unto this resurrection, he would have to "come forth" "unto the resurrection of damnation."

STEPHEN IS FOREVER PERISHED, IF THERE BE NO RESURRECTION.

Permit us further to examine the theological hypothesis of inherent immortality. Materialism has been charged with being so "repulsive and abhorrent to every right mind," that we feel called upon to vindicate the doctrine at every point assailed by our disputant. And we shall at least be able to devote ourself strictly to the subject, because we shall have no further occasion to expose misrepresentations, and to rebut personal allusions.

In the last assault upon materialism, there is an argument which, viewed in the light of popular theology, does not seem to teach the existence of the soul as a conscious being independently of the body. We refer to the Lord and Stephen commending their "spirits" unto the hand of God. But we must look through theological glasses to see it. If we would have it so, we must not examine the texts very critically. The moment we subject them to a fair scrutiny, and compare them with the contexts, the mythological creation of an immaterial soul dissolves into nothingness. Let us therefore examine the texts.

Stephen said, "Lord Jesus, receive my pneuma." Pneuma is the same in the Greek, as the word ruach (rendered breath, wind, air, etc.) is in Hebrew. The primary signification of these words is the air we breathe, but we have never claimed that this is their only meaning. We admit three other significations, viz: (2) a being, as angels: (3) an influence from a being: (4) a state of feeling, or mind: and we are not aware that the words occur in any passage, which may not properly be classed under one of these significations. Never are they connected with a term indicating that the "spirit" of man is deathless or immortal! The following are examples of each signification:

First. "The pneuma bloweth where it listeth, and thou heareth the sound thereof." Does this prove that the sighing wind, the air we breathe, is a conscious and an immortal soul? It is termed the "breath of life," because it is essential to life, and not an animal in the world can exist without it. "And he sighed deeply in his pneuma." And how else should he sigh? Sighing is a physical motion a peculiar kind of breathing. Webster says, "a deep single respiration," and the "expression of fatigue, exhaustion, grief, sorrow, or the like." The Syriac version reads—"He sighed with his breath." It is quite fair to conclude, that to consider this sighing as a proof of an immaterial soul, requires an extraordinary stretch of the imagination!

Second. In Heb. 1, angels are spoken of as "ministering pneuma sent forth to minister," etc. Again—"The angels that sinned" are "unclean pneuma." Here the word refers to beings, and not to immaterial souls within beings, or disembodied beings. Angels have never appeared except as tangible organisms: they have come eating and drinking, and were often mistaken for men. They, the angels, the beings, the individuals, are here called pneuma. "God is a pneuma." Again the word denotes a person, or being. That God is a person, is quite clear from Heb. 1: 3. But more of this hereafter.

Third. "The pneuma searcheth all things." "I cast out devils by the pneuma of God." These are examples of the searching influence, mind, power, or disposition, of the Supreme Being!

Fourth. "God has not given us the pneuma of fear." "Stand fast in one pneuma, with one mind." "The pneuma indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." "If any man have not the pneuma of Christ, he is none of his." These are among the many examples where the word denotes a state of feeling, or disposition of the being, or beings, spoken of, and not of immaterial beings within the beings. To say a being is meek and quiet, and in temper or feeling like Christ, is no proof whatever on the side of immateriality.

And now, what is the signification of pneuma in Stephen's exclamation, "Lord Jesus, receive my pneuma?" Does it mean his person? Can it mean his feelings or disposition of mind? or his influence? or was it his breath? Ridicule the idea as you may, we humbly believe it was his breath, if he meant anything that could leave his person. This is what he wished to have taken, if he wished anything to be removed, so that his extreme suffering might end by his falling into the sleep of death.

Job says, "The Spirit of God is in my nostrils." Would it not sound very absurd to say that the Supreme Being was in Job's nostrils? What then is meant? Job alludes to the breath of life! the vitalizing air which is in the nostrils of every living creature! Gen. 8: 17. If pneuma in Stephen's case meant anything that could be separated from his organization, it meant his breath, and nothing more, nothing less!

There is another very important fact to be considered. The word dexai, which is rendered receive, may also be rendered sustain or support. Booth, in his Lexicon of Primitive Greek words, gives this as one of its significations. The supplication of Stephen would according to this read, "Lord Jesus, sustain my pneuma," or "assist me to suffer." This harmonizes quite as well with the context. There is no need, however, of this rendering, to make sense and get at the truth.

If pneuma or spirit, here refers to Stephen's "soul"—soul in the theological sense—and not his breath, there is still no difficulty. The spirit, or whatever pneuma is claimed to be, is not necessrialy a deathless and separate entity, because commended to God, or because God is called upon to receive, or sustain it. David said, although not then about to die, "Into thine hand I commit my spirit!" It was not necessarily the bare spirit divested of the body that David and Stephen committed to the care of God because pneuma may be intended to signify the entire being. Paul said to the Thessolonians, "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of the Lord." There is no reason to conclude that Stephen did not thus wish to be commended.

If Stephen should never be resurrected, he is forever perished. Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are also perished." Now where is Stephen? He is dead! And if there is no resurrection, what then? He is forever perished! Nothing but a resurrection to eternal life, will ever save him from the power of eternal death!

The narrative shows too plainly that the faithful Stephen, the one who is to be resurrected, the one who is to become like Christ and live eternally, was not that which left his body. The following questions are all fatal to the interpretation of the immaterialists. Whom did the mob "hurry" out of the city? Stephen. Who did they "stone?" Stephen. Who "kneeled down?" Stephen. Who "cried with a loud voice?" Stephen. Who prayed that God would not lay this murder to their "charge"? Stephen. Who "fell asleep"? Stephen. Unto whose "death" did Saul consent?" Stephen's. Who was "carried" by devout men "to his burial?" Stephen. Over whom did these devout men make "great lamentations?" Stephen. Who is now "asleep" in Christ? Stephen. Who is returned unto dust? Stephen. Who is perished if there be no resurrection of the dead? Stephen. Who shall be raised when "the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible"? Stephen. Yes, Stephen, the real Stephen, the only Stephen, is now under the bonds of the death which through Adam all men die. The "spirit" was not Stephen, if it was that which left his body, any more than the ruach (pneuma) in Job's nostrils was Job himself, or God himself. The pronouns "he," "his," and "him," in the account of his martyrdom, all represent the same person, the one who was stoned to death, the one who shall live again, and not another Stephen.

In the case of Christ's death the immaterialists have no additional argument, except that after commending his pneuma into the hands of his Father, it is said he "gave up the ghost." Parkhurst, in his Greek and English Lexicon says, "And it may be worth remarking that the leading sense of the old English word ghost, is breath, and is from the same root with gust of wind; and that both these words are plain derivatives from a Hebrew word signifying to move with violence: whence also gust." And most evidently it is the true sense of the word in this instance. To give up the ghost, is nothing more than to resign the life.

There is not one clear proof in all the Bible that "souls" exist separate from the body as conscious, intelligent and responsible beings. Many passages have been cited in this controversy, but not one has been proved to oppose the doctrines of man's total mortality. Not one text will fairly sustain that interpretation. In fact, those advanced even prove that the "everlasting punishment" of the wicked will consist in their not being permitted to enter into "eternal life," as for instance Matt. 25: 46. We regret that Immaterialist will not undertake to reconcile the many plain texts by which materialism is sustained, with the horrible dogma of eternal torment and the mythological delusion of inherent immortality. He may term these "atheistic" sentiments, he may express his horror in such terms as "repulsive and abhorrent," and class us with "infidels," but such speech ill becomes one who fails to prove that they are not sound Bible doctrines.—Mmaterialist.—Luminary.

For the World's Crisis.

BE STEADFAST.

How can we be "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord"? We must have that hope that is an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. We must watch and pray earnestly and constantly; for if we neglect these duties we shall rapidly fall away.

Let us realize how short time is, and strive to stand firm on the Rock and hold fast to the hope set before us in the gospel. The fashions and follies of these last days must be forsaken, if we would escape the wrath to come upon a wicked world.

In the silent watches of the night these words were impressed upon my mind: "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free." May both writer and readers heed the exhortation.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DANVILLE.

Our meetings in Danville, P. Q. Canada, were seasons of special interest. The congregations were very large. The aisles were filled with chairs and other seats, which were crowded with an intelligent class of hearers, who appeared anxious to hear on the great truths of the Bible, which are now shining forth so brilliantly from the sacred book, that has been made to teach a system of fables, in consequence of the strange construction put upon it by modern theology. Men, who hold a first-class position in church and society, now see the truth that man is a mortal being, and must "seek for . . . immortality" "by patient continuance in well doing," if he secures it. They are satisfied that God will not torment the wicked eternally, but will destroy them, as he has declared in his word. They confess now that they could never harmonize the doctrine of eternal torment with the character of God, as revealed in the Bible. Notwithstanding the effort that had been made for a number of weeks, by one of the ministers in the place, to root out from the minds of the people the blessed truths we love so well, and which enable us to see the beautiful harmony of the Scriptures; it was evident that the doctrine of the entire mortality of man, the destruction of the wicked, and the saints' inheritance upon the earth renewed, has gone deeper into the hearts of the people than ever before.

During our observation for twenty-six years, we have noticed this remarkable fact: whenever the truths, for the belief of which we are called infidels, and shut out from the places of popular worship, are received by any individual, and confessed before the world, in connection with obedience to the practical duties of christianity; such persons have invariably loved God, the Bible, and their fellow men, better than they did before. It is a very common remark by such individuals, "I feel as though I was converted anew; my joy, peace and love are so much increased. My Bible is a new book to me, and more precious than ever."

On the other hand, we have never known a minister, or lay member, who was well informed in relation to these truths, to prosper in fighting against them. The more earnest their opposition, the faster they have declined in spiritual prosperity. Why is this? Has it come to pass in these last days that God blesses error, and those who sustain it; while he frowns upon the defenders of his word? Such a conclusion cannot be entertained for a moment. The arguments adduced by Spiritualists, and our opponents among popular theologians, to sustain the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, are almost precisely the same. Indeed, Spiritualism is but the ripe fruit of the doctrine that man is now immortal. It is well known that this is the foundation stone of the system; hence the spirits say: "The corner-stone of this new enterprise rests on the following eternal principles:"—

1. "Man is immortal." Educator, p. 133. "Human beings congratulate themselves that they alone are immortal."—Educator, p. 265.

The following resolution was adopted at a convention of Spiritualists, held in 1857, at Rockford, Ill.:—

Resolved, That Spiritualism, according to the modern acceptation of that term, embraces all those who believe in the IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL. . . . Beyond this common faith, there is no doctrine or creed necessarily incident to Spiritualism."

Thank the Lord, we are outside, with no desire to enter in.

We believe the time has come when a belief in the Pagan dogma of the immortality of the soul exposes one to special danger of being led into Spiritualism, which is a system most emphatically antichristian in all its doctrines and tendencies. The hour has arrived when every christian who sees the light on this subject, should stand up boldly in its defense, regardless of consequences. It is too late to try to save a good name or friends by upholding popular error. Let us be willing, like Jesus, to become of "no reputation" for the truth's sake. If we would please the Lord, it will not do to make the least compromise with the enemy and his fables for the sake of saving a good name, and an honorable position in the world. Jesus has instructed us to come out from the world and be separate.

During our meetings, the minister who was present had been endeavoring, before he came, to remove the foundation of our hope. In harmony with our wishes, he asked some questions, which led to a small discussion one evening. This added much interest to the occasion, and helped to make the truth shine brighter. Those who had been wavering are now confirmed in the belief that no man who has died can have any future life without a literal resurrection from the dead of the very same person that is put into the grave. The Bible points out no other way to obtain a future life, after we fall into the hands of death. If popular theology was true, that man has an "immortal soul," that continues to live; no one could ever see it, nor handle it; and, as admitted by Dr. Spicer, in his work on the soul of man, "it can neither see, hear, nor speak, without using the body." It could not be a very desirable existence, to be a deaf and dumb and blind soul. It cannot speak a word, because the organs of speech are all buried in the grave; it cannot see, because the eyes are cold in death; it cannot hear, because the organ for hearing is all in ruins. Hence it follows, if it were possible for these souls to have even a disembodied conscious existence, when they got together, they could not see one another, nor hear a word, nor utter a single sound. They must be strange companions to each other. Just imagine such a group of imaginary souls; no one sees any thing; no one hears anything, because no one can say any thing. Is such a state the heaven of departed, disembodied souls? No wonder, then, that those who hold such views "dread to enter there." We do not see how one could come any nearer to "annihilation" without being annihilated.

Thank God, for the hope of the literal resurrection of the dead—the very same loved ones we laid away in the embrace of death. They will come forth just as literally as did Jesus from Joseph's new tomb, and each will be able to say, as he did, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself, handle me and see." Then we can again embrace our real friends, instead of thinking of some imaginary ghost floating around in infinite space, without body or parts.

O Lord, open the eyes of the people to see the folly of such theology, and lead them to embrace the simple truth in thy word, that they may rejoice in the "blessed hope" of the gospel.

The interest in the meetings at Danville continued to increase to the close. We have not before seen the people so anxious to know the plain teachings of the Scripture. Quite a number came six or seven miles every night, and listened very attentively. The more they heard, the more interest they manifested. The ministers took occasion to preach against us; but the harder they fought, the more they misrepresented us, and the more bitterly they cried "infidel," the more anxious were the people to hear the reasons of our hope, and the stronger they became in the belief of what we preached; because the contrast was more apparent, after they had heard both sides. We had the best of reasons to believe that the opposing ministers did much towards convincing the people that what we preached was truth. When they examined the Bible they found the proof at hand, that what we had stated was true; and they gave up the doctrine of the natural immortality of man, and the horrid doctrine of eternal torment, which is so dishonoring to the Lord.

Our conference and prayer-meetings were excellent. The exhortations and prayers were short, prompt and fervent. They were truly precious seasons of refreshing. Several requested prayers and were blessed. Three were baptized, and went on their way rejoicing. We learned that others regretted that they did not go forward at the same time. The Lord is truly smiling on the inhabitants of Danville and vicinity. We hope to hear more good news from there soon to present to our readers. Our visits to D. have always been pleasant, but none more so than now.

Among other meetings, a union prayer meeting was appointed for Saturday evening, Feb. 20th, for all who truly love the Savior. We shall expect to hear of blessed results from their union meetings. We hope other churches will establish similar ones. Let us throw off all sectarian shackles, and unite with all who truly love Jesus. We are sure this would please him.

Monday, Feb. 15th, we bid a reluctant farewell to the noble souls in Danville, and went on to our next appointment at Melbourne, by private conveyance, in company with Bro. Barnard, as a heavy snow storm on the previous night had blocked up all the railroads. We found deep snow and very poor roads. We were over four hours in going twelve miles. We walked about two-thirds of the way. The noble horse wallowed through the drifts in a manner that greatly endeared him to us, and made us prize his services very highly. We were glad when we got to our journey's end.

THE UNCONSCIOUS DEAD.

To the Editor of the "World's Crisis":—

"If 'the dead know not any thing,' will you please explain John 5: 25? He tells us that the time is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear his voice [Son of man], and they that hear shall live."

Another passage now presents itself to my mind. I would like your explanation of Rev. 19: 10. Was the angel which John was talking with a spirit, who had once inhabited a human body? Z. WASHBURN."

It is certain that "the dead know not any thing," because the Bible says so in so many words. We see nothing in John 5: 25 to prove that the dead are conscious. The passage reads as follows: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." "The hour" was at hand when Lazarus was brought forth from the grave and made to live again. In the 28th and 29th verses, the Savior says: "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which ALL that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." From the foregoing, we learn that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

If we comprehend the special point in the question of our correspondent, it is this: how the dead hear, if they are not alive? We read in Rev. 20: 12, "I saw the dead, small and great stand before God; and the books were opened. . . . And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books." Does this mean that they stood before God, mere dead corpses; or that they were raised from the dead, and afterward stood before God to be judged? The latter is the true view, without any doubt. On a certain occasion the Savior said:—"Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see; . . . the lame walk, . . . the deaf hear," etc. What does he mean by those expressions? Can any one suppose him to teach that while they were lame they walked; and that they heard while they continued deaf? It would be foolish to assert any such thing. The obvious meaning is that he healed the lame, and then they could walk; he unstopped the ears of the deaf, and they could hear; so, after he had raised the dead, they could hear. It is absurd to suppose they could hear when dead.

We turn now to Rev. 19: 10, which reads as follows:—"And I fell at his [the angel's] feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not; I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; worship God." A similar passage occurs in Rev. 22: 8–9; "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book; worship God." At the beginning of the Revelation, we learn that Jesus "sent . . . his angel unto his servant John" to show him some important truths. This is the one referred to in chap. 19: 10, and 22: 8. The angels are called spirits (Heb. 1: 7, 14), but they are personal beings; not disembodied spirits of men, about which the Bible does not say one word. The angels existed before man's creation. We read:—Man was made "a little lower than the angels." Ps. 8: 4. Then it follows that the angels were created before man. The angels are real persons, though not made of dust like men. The angels resemble men in their external appearance, and have sometimes been called men, and mistaken for them. Hence the apostle says: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 2. Did they entertain disembodied human spirits, and not discern them from strangers? Let those believe such things who can. These angels had feet. Do men take their feet with them at death? or are they buried in the grave with the rest of the man? In conclusion we would say, the angel which John saw was not a human "spirit who had once inhabited a human body."

THE HEALTH REFORMER for February is at hand. As usual, it is filled with good things, that every body should read. One has very properly called it "The Life Preserver." It is a superior paper of its kind, and should be in every family. It is published monthly, at the low price of $1.00 per year. We recommend it to our readers, as worthy of their patronage. Address Health Institute, Battle Creek, Mich.

"THE HERALD OF HEALTH" is another excellent health monthly, published at Nos. 13 and 15 Laight street, New York, by Miller, Wood & Co. Price $2.00 per year.

BRO. L. REIMER wishes to say to his friends that he is about to move into the country. His P. O. address is 1006 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

GERMAN TRACTS.

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

SODOM-LIKE.

The days of Sodom are upon us. Its base crimes are becoming common in this generation. Licentiousness is one of the special crimes of the present day; and all sorts of means are employed to continue the soul-destroying sin without detection.

The following shows the state of things in the State of Maine, and there is evidence to believe the same is true of all States:—

"Mr. Warren Johnson, State Superintendent of Common Schools in Maine, reports to the Legislature that there is a decrease of 16,683 scholars between the ages of four and twenty-one from the census of 1858. The decrease in the past year has been 3,182; the decrease in 1866 was 4,141. Mr. Johnson very naturally considers this decrease alarming, and asks a number of questions, such as: 'Have we ceased to be a producing people?' 'Are the vital forces expended in brain labor and lost to physical reproduction?' and 'are the modern fashionable criminalities of infanticide and fœticide creeping into our State community?'

We should think they had crept in considerably when they have reduced the number of children between the ages of four and twenty-one by 16,683 in ten years, and for the last two years are reducing the children at the pace of 4,000 per annum.

Dr. Storer and other eminent physicians of Massachusetts boldly declare that fœticide is the common crime which limits the increase of children in that State almost wholly to the foreign population. It is not 'brain labor in Maine or any other New England State which prevents the production of families, but a general fashionable female repugnance to labor of another sort.'"

The following is a statement concerning the subject in New York City:—

"Twice as many deaths as births last year in New York."

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 28th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

MEMPHIS.

Extract from a letter received by the Treasurer of the A. A. Mission Society, written by Bro. L. F. Cole, dated Memphis, Feb. 17th, 1869:—

"We find things much better than we expected when we started from home; but how could we be expected to know anything about this mission, when all our sources of knowledge were effectually closed to us. We saw nothing in the Crisis to keep us posted in regard to the work here; and those of our acquaintances, who ought to have been posted, were as ignorant as we were. I am very sorry that the brethren in Maine are not better informed in regard to what is being done here. Others may be better acquainted, but I think the majority of the brethren and sisters of Maine have little or no thought about this mission; and all because they have not had a few facts laid before them from time to time. We thank the Lord that we have been led into this part of his vineyard, and the work is just such as suits us, and we love it and have given our hearts to it. Bro. Leslie's genial face has made its picture in our minds, and he is reckoned among those we love. How hard he has worked, and the fruit of his labors, the judgment day alone can reveal. His privations, trials, temptations, dangers and self-sacrifice, will weigh mightily in the scale when the Master comes.

"This work must be of the Lord, for he blesses in many ways, and gives abundant evidence that he is at work here. The field is open and large, but where are the laborers? the judgment just at hand, and many standing with 'rusted blades.' Can it be that any of God's servants will idle away these moments of probation? May the Lord help every one to awake from sloth and folly, to the importance of serving the Lord in scattering this last message to all nations. The labor is not alone with those who leave their homes and 'friends and idol hopes,' and start out like Abraham, not knowing whither they go. There is a great responsibility resting on those who are the Lord's stewards. May he quicken the cause, that it languish not."

The friends will please remember that the above Mission is supported by the A. A. Mission Society; and we would say that our funds are very low. We hope that the friends will do what they can to continue the work at Memphis, St. Louis, Florida, and other fields, where the Society has laborers.

PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

KEENE, N. H.

This is a large, thrifty, and rapidly growing village of six thousand inhabitants. It is situated on a beautiful plain, with rugged hill-tops rising up on every side. Mt. Monadnock towers up majestically about a dozen miles away. Various denominations are represented in Keene, but the tide of spiritual religion appears to run low in all of them. The fiftieth aniversary of Dr. Barstow's pastorate in the first Congregational church, was recently celebrated. I believe I am acquainted with some Christian societies who believe in having their pastors change their fields of labor rather oftener than once in fifty years.

The Advent society is quite small, numbering only about thirty. There are a few precious souls among them, who are struggling to maintain a scriptural type of piety. Others are trembling between hope and fear, desiring to eat the good of the land but hardly willing to pay the price. They evidently need a deeper plunge beneathe the purple flood—a richer baptism of holy fire. Nothing less will answer the purpose. There is one route to paradise for all to travel. There is no favoritism with God. He has marked out a narrow way, and all who expect to wear a glittering crown, must consent to deny themselves and take up the cross daily and follow Jesus.

PLAIN DEALING.

For many years I have been in deep sympathy with earnest Christianity. I have endeavored to bear a faithful testimony against the worldly-policy religion of this compromising age. My convictions are still the same, and my commission has not been revoked. Never was the church in greater danger of buying popularity at the expense of principle. Empty professions and powerless forms are substituted for the saving grace of God. Self-indulgence instead of self denial is the order of the day. So far from renouncing the world, with its vain pomp and glory, the masses of professors are eagerly counting its smiles and following its senseless fashions.

Those who profess to be living for fadeless crowns in glory, spend far more time in pomp and parade than in privacy and prayer. They flaunt out in all the frippery of fashion, and think more of the admiration of fools than they do of the approbation of our coming King. They will barter immortal treasures for the tinselry of vanity.

How terrible, too, is the pleasure-loving mania that is sweeping through the churches of the day. Mirth and morality are wedded. The church doors are freely opened to the devotees of frolic and fun. Gambling is brought to the aid of godliness. Merriment rules the hour. Grab-bags, sham post-offices, lottery cakes, fish-ponds, monkey-shows, and various other silly performances, are tolerated within the sacred precincts of God's consecrated temple, under the ruinous notion that the end sanctifies the means. Billiards and dancing parties are recommended by ministers of commanding influence. Novel-reading is encouraged by novel-writing clergymen. What prouder victories could Satan himself devise? In the name of my God I enter my solemn protest against this persistent effort to marry the church to the world. Let the friends of Jesus throw off the deadly incubus and go forth to burn and shine for God! Never was the demand more urgent for a plain, earnest, uncompromising army of living witnesses to be raised up.

O who will burst the shackles and be free? Who will be a faithful mouth-piece for the Lord Almighty? Who will prove the power of the all-atoning blood to save from sin? Who will plant his feet on God's great platform, and nobly battle for a radical religion that saves men now, and will save them forever? A. A. PHELPS.

IN MEMORIAM.

Our much esteemed and beloved brother, Dr. Alexander Decker, of Newark, N. J., fell asleep Feb. 3d, in the forty-seventh year of his age, to have part in the resurrection of the dead, of whom all who are partakers will die no more, but be equal to the angels, and children of God in the future world, because they are children of the resurrection.

The universal respect for the deceased entertained by the citizens of Newark, irrespective of their religious creed, and the deep sympathy they feel for his greatly afflicted family, was manifested by the very large assemblage who gathered at the funeral on Sunday, the 7th inst.; for the entire house was a perfect jam of people. Bro. E. Wolcott officiated in the reading of the Scriptures, and in a very appropriate prayer. A sermon was preached by the writer from the text, "The righteous hath hope in his death" (Prov. 14: 32;) after which very timely remarks were made by Bro. Wolcott. The funeral cortege was large, and the long line of coaches to the grave, filled with sympathizing friends, who employed them at their own charge, again evinced the high estimation in which our departed brother was held by his numerous acquaintances in Newark. A good delegation represented the churches in New York and New Haven.

The bereaved family is left, not only in the deepest affliction, but also in poverty, and any means from those who have this world's goods, forwarded to Mrs. A. Decker, No. 35 Bank St., Newark, N. J., will be thankfully received, and call down the blessing of that God, who has declared himself to be "the widow's God and a Father to the fatherless."

BRO. HOOK AT BOSTON THEATRE COMIQUE.

Having for some time felt impressed to make an effort in some central position of Boston, for the salvation of perishing men, I have engaged the Theatre in Central Court, 240 Washington St., for this purpose, believing the work to be of God, and trusting in him to foot the bills; and shall commence meetings there next Sunday, Feb. 28th, (D. V). Brethren and sisters, you that feel for the perishing, pray to God for his abundant blessing to attend this effort. It is not put forth to build up a separate party, but to work "with God" for the salvation of men.

LET YOUR WOMEN KEEP SILENT!

BRO. GRANT:—What did the apostle mean by this? Did he mean that women should not take an active part in speaking and praying in social meetings? No! we do not believe it. None will deny a woman the right to think, breathe and sing in such meetings.

In a certain church out West, the women prayed and spoke for Jesus until the deacons interfered. Then they promised to keep silent, provided the deacons and their allies would do all the singing. But, as might have been expected, these deacons were soon glad enough to let the sisters speak, pray and sing as they pleased.

But, says the objector, the apostle ordered that women should keep silent in the churches. 1 Cor. 14: 34. Yes, truly he did, in the Corinthian church. But did he order them to keep silent in any other church? And did he order that the women should keep silent in meetings of social worship in the Corinthian church? It appears by 1 Cor. 11: 13, that the women did "pray" in the church even at Corinth. The apostle, to be sure, did teach that women should not "usurp authority over the man" (1 Tim. 2: 12), either in the church or out of it. But we should consider that in the Corinthian church, both men and women were so contentious and full of faults, that they were rebuked for many things of which other churches were not guilty. And of course the apostle would not suffer "a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." 1 Tim. 2: 12.

But for intelligent men to say that a woman should not be allowed to speak or pray in meetings of social worship, after reading such passages as Rom. 16: 1–15, he might as well say that she should not sing in such meetings. And if all the sisterhood would do as the sisters did out West, we think there would be quite a reform brought round in the manner of conducting social meetings.

FROM WOLCOTTVILLE, CT.

BRO. GRANT:—Thinking perhaps a few lines by way of encouragement could do no harm, we feel like letting the brethren and sisters know how the Lord is at work in this place.

With the divine approval of our heavenly Father, we commenced a series of meetings in this place, Feb. 7th, and up to this date eighteen have arisen for prayers, and some of them have given us the assurance that they have found peace in believing. The little church has been greatly encouraged, and prejudice has been almost if not entirely removed; so much so, that all denominations (except Catholic) have come in and taken part with us in trying to save souls.

In our short experience, I have never seen the minds of a people so completely broken up, and so well prepared to receive the word, as they are here at the present time.

We as husbandmen are trying to sow the good seed, and live humble at the feet of Jesus, so that he may use us for his glory. Let us rejoice together, and hold on to the faith once delivered to the saints, and in a little while we shall sing the new song. Rev. 5: 9. We will give God all the glory.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHURCH LARGE ENOUGH FOR THE CHRISTIAN'S ENTIRE EFFORTS.

This title does not fully intimate what we intend to say, else we would stop here and let it stand as a sign, significant to the world and the church of the christian's sphere of labor; but something further is needed, and we will attempt to explain and illustrate our meaning.

Let it first be understood that by the term church we do not mean a sectarian few, but the body of Christ's people in their relation to Christ as their "head," and to each other as "members one of another." This relationship, with its facilities for labor, is sufficient for the full exercise of every "several ability," and every aggressive movement on the world of Christ-like effort to reach the fallen, depraved, and suffering wrecks of humanity. This statement seems true enough, and yet, strange as it may appear, is not apparent from the conduct of the masses of those who profess to be of the church. Hence for awhile we argue the question.

There is no work the christian can legitimately do that he cannot do as a member of the church. Were it otherwise, God's system of reforming and saving men would be insufficient; and if so, then there would be some reason in resorting to other means, and a question whether after all Christianity were not a failure.

It is certainly true that the glorious relationship between Christians and Christ and each other, by which concert of action and the strength of union are secured, with the unction of the Holy Spirit, is an arrangement far superior to any and all others to elevate fallen, sinful man to his true, Christlike character and life. There is no intimation in the Bible of its ineffectiveness, or of any auxiliaries, counterparts, or helps, to make it effectual. The church on the contrary stands as God's means and only means of first reaching through his Spirit, but having reached, of purifying, disciplining and preparing humanity for the glorious future promised to the good, and even of making men what they ought to be even here.

That this statement will not be generally received is evident. It does not frighten us, however, out of its strongly entrenched position. That men, even professed christians, resorted to other means to do the work, or a part of it, we know, and on this account expect opposition from those who will naturally defend themselves and bring out their strong (?) reasons. But waving for a moment a discussion of these reasons with which we are not unfamiliar, we simply say that if the church and its machinery are sufficient, then all other means are unnecessary, and those who are properly in the church have no necessity to resort to other schemes of reform aside from the christian's own sphere. In the name of God alone, they can set up their banner, and go forth to battle against the swarming evils and sinful practices existing in this ungodly world.

We are aware that the professed church is sadly degenerated from this position, and know that many men who, while not professing to be christians, are in advance of these degenerated apologies for the living church, and start out with some organization which has for its object the amelioration of the condition of the race; and they may do so if they choose, and accomplish what they can, although without God's authority; but the members of the body of Christ have no place there. It is true that many who belong to the churches, or associations of that ecclesiastical name, have gone into these organizations, and worked there with greater zest than in the professed church. They have been led there either because they found the church ineffectual, and misled by the idea that any way to accomplish the object must be right, or flattered by the inducements offered by such associations. Lodges or societies, either of protection even from deserved penalties or support in sickness and disabilities, and the trappings and formulas of ceremonies, grips, and passwords, have become to them their great "Diana of the Ephesians," more than the church is to them the Ark of God; and their spiritual life has ebbed out, their zeal for Christ has gone, their influence as christians become marred, their effectiveness in soul-saving destroyed; and they become mere dried mummies or walking automatons, in the place of what they were or would be in their "own place" in the church as living epistles imbued with the Holy Spirit. We speak what we know from our own experience in the past, and our knowledge of others.

Now if men could not be as thoroughly reformed by Christianity; if, as a christian, one could not reach as many and reach them as well, he might complain that the church was not large enough and its means ample enough to afford him facilities for his work; but while even the contrary is true, and he can have the armament of the gospel furnished from God's armory and the power of the Holy Spirit to help him, he is certainly better qualified for effectiveness in the church than elsewhere. All that is needed is to have the church right, or, in other words, to have a church; for the thing is right; and then let its members be as extensive as they please in their work, making the church their base of supplies, and its principles their only guide; and they will find no necessity for substituting human organizations for it, nor doing any half-way work by striving to reform men in one particular at the expense of another.

God never designed that a work of so-called moral reform should be undertaken by his servants. It may be better for this world than nothing, but beyond this it will not save; Christ only; "the grace of God that bringeth salvation," that teaches "us that denying ungodliness and worldly lust we should live soberly, and righteously and godly in this present world," are the only proper reformatory means. And why not? Are they not sufficient? If they are, nothing beside is to be resorted to. The christian labors, as such, for eternal interests. It is not his to "daub with untempered" or man-tempered "mortar." He must point to heaven, and lead the way. Hence when side issues are presented of partial reforms, or reforms of some particular element of character, he is "doing a great work, and cannot come down"; for Christianity embraces "not only one, but all of these," and "more than they all"; and however good the one thing may be, it is better in the galaxy of christian virtues than alone.

So while others are laboring to make men temperance men, he labors to make them that and more. The professed church may have failed to do its work in some one of these particulars, but the true church and not human organizations should be resorted to, and then strike heavy blows in Christ's name with the javelins of truth against the power of the Rum king, and rescue his votaries, and win them by loving entreaty, by the power of the Spirit, to Him who can make them not in this thing only but "every whit whole."

It is an undeniable fact that the so-called churches have failed to provide for their sick and poor, and Masonry and Odd Fellowship, for example, have undertaken to do it, and attracted attention by their work, declaring that

"The widow's and orphan's tears we dry,
All wants our ready hands supply,
As far as power is given."

And they have put the churches to the blush as to this matter, inasmuch as they have excelled them. But these charities have been faulty, as they have been exclusive; for the church doing her duty in this matter will supply all these wants, and although she may have a speciality of "good" for the household of faith, she will "do good to all men."

God never designed that the members of his church should go to any worldly organization for help in sickness, or poverty, or suffering, but that they should find it in his church, whose duty it is to supply all wants as they have ability. Hence for this the church is large enough. It is certainly a shame to the professed church that the Lord's poor have ever been obliged to seek for their support, or a part of it, at the town's poor-house, or of the charities of Masons or Odd Fellows, or any where aside from the church; and in the true church they will find ample means for the supply of their wants. So in all these respects there is ample room in the church.

THAT SERMON.

BRO. GRANT:—We are highly pleased with the report of Henry Dana Ward's sermon in the last Crisis by W. C. Stone. Not that it contained anything particularly new, but such faithful declarations of Bible truth, by one occupying the position of H. D. Ward, is encouragingly cheering. And I am thinking if this, and perhaps other of his sermons, were published, it would make a valuable accession to Bible literature. I doubt not the sale of them would compensate pecuniarily; but that is a small matter, compared with strengthening and comforting the household of faith.

REPORT OF FREE DISTRIBUTION OF PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

In January, 1868, I made a statement in our papers of works given out, and money received in 1867, and will now do the same for 1868. In the year I have sent out two thousand eight hundred of "Death not Life," costing $364; eight hundred of "Pauline Theology," costing about $52. I had fifty-four dollars' worth of my six tracts printed, half of which the A. C. P. Society took at cost, the other half (twenty-seven dollars' worth), I have sent out free with the pamphlets. To make the form right in adding my tract on "Forever and Everlasting," I had to print one of J. Foster's Letters with each copy—two thousand of which I have given out—worth $15. Postage and expressage $20, equal in all to $478.

To meet this expense I have sold of the above works: to A. C. P. Society, two hundred of "Death not Life,"—$27; "Voice of the West," two hundred—$27; and when traveling have sold some twenty-five dollars' worth, mostly at cost,—$79.

Since January, 1868, I have received in donations, and from some ministers who have had works to give, and sold a part of them, as follows: J. F. Busch, Philad., $5; S. Harper, N. York, $3.50; J. W. Whitmore, Mich., $1; E. R. Mullet, Mich., 50c.; Bro. Besseger, Detroit, $2.; Bro. Glover, Mass., $5; Eld. Pool, Linklaen, N. Y., $10; J. B. Jackson, Buffalo, $5; Eld. S. Davison, Ia., $2; Bro. and Sr. Newton, Mass., $5; Bro. Crest, Minn., $2; Lindly Murray, Rochester, N. Y., $2; Eld. Ingmire, N. Y., $1; Bro. Shepard, Wis., $2; Eld. Hitchcock, Wis., $6.50; Bro. Arnold, $1.50; E. Palmer, Ill., $1; H. H. Tooker, Mich., $1; Bro. Kinny, Buffalo, $1; J. D. W. Churchill, Cincinnati, O., $10; E. Lamarsh, Buffalo, $2.50; Dr. Naramore, N. Y., $5; J. H. Mills, Ia., $1.50; Eld. E. Evans, Tonawanda, N. Y., $35; Sr. E. M. Davis, Syracuse, $3; Eld. Elliot, Minn., $5; Eld. S. T. E. Gibson, Ia., $1; Eld. C. Cotton, N. Y., $5; Sr. Allen and son, N. Y., $5; Bro. at Troy, N. Y., $6; S. Smith, Baltimore, $1; S. Carlisle, Wilmington, Del., $2; and do. I. McClary, $3; Bro. Sutton, Pa., $2; L. Reimer, Philad., $5; Bro. Cleg, $1; P. Kemp, N. York, $3, and J. Kemp $2; R. Martin, New York, $2; Bro. Tenny, Ct., $1; Bro. Brewster, Stonington, Ct., $2, and Bro. Tanner, $2; H. F. Johnson, New York, $5; A. H. Steele, New Haven, Ct., $5; Bro. at Lotteryville, R. I., $6; Bro. at Westerly, R. I., $2; S. P. Clark, R. I., $2; Bro. White, New Bedford, Mass., $3; Bro. Irish, $4; Bro. at Lynn, Mass., $5; Bro. Hovey, Boston, $2; Bro. Armstrong, do. $1; do. Bro. Hopkins, $1; Bro. at Salem, Mass., $2; Bro. at campmeeting at Springfield (names not taken), $3; Bro. Kingsbury, Chelsea, Ms., $5; Bro. Watson, DeKalb, Ill., $20; Bro. Stocking, Ill., 5; three brethren at DeKalb campmeeting (names lost), $4; Eld. L. Davis, Ill., $3.50; Bro. McElwain, $3.50; M. Smith, Chicago, $15; Eld. Snyder do. $3; Sr. Mallory, Janesville, Wis., $10; Jay Francis, Chicago, $10; $2.80 in donations; to which add the $79 for those sold,—$359; which, taken from $478 the amount given out leaves $119.

What I received in the few places where I preached I have not put down, but called it pay for traveling expenses, and it only pays about half of them. I should have obtained much less help had I not traveled, and so such expense becomes necessary.

By my report for 1867, as published, it may be seen that I obtained about $30 less than the amount of works given out, so the result of two years' labor in giving out (mostly larger works than tracts is about this: "I have given and sold at cost 5,800 of "Death not Life," 1200 of "Pauline Theology," 8,000 tracts, and some other works, costing, with postage and expressage, $898; have received by donations and sales, $751, leaving me minus $147; and no compensation for my time, which has been mostly devoted to the cause. This statement will naturally lead brethren to inquire how I have obtained means to support myself and wife; and it may be consistent for me to tell, as I and most of our preachers are known to be poor. When my health allowed me to preach more, and sell an assortment of books, I was able to put two hundred dollars in the Saving's Bank for a sick day, or old age. This I have been obliged to use up in the past two years, and the rest of our living has come mostly from our children, who are not among the rich. Besides this, I am left one hundred and fifty dollars in debt for printing my works, and no means to pay.

Of course it is crossing to be thus circumstanced; but I am far from regretting the course I have taken, as my Master blesses me with faith in his Providence over me; "all will work for good" in his good time and way.

I have a present consolation in knowing that I have put into the hands of mostly new readers—printed matter in pamphlets—about sixty-seven thousand sermons. Should time last, these will be preaching when I am in my grave—a legacy which I had rather leave to my dying fellow mortals, than to leave farms or government bonds to my children, as some are striving to do who believe in the soon coming of Jesus. I have also peace in the consciousness of having done what I could, in the decrepitude of age, to advance God's truth, or as the woman whom Christ approved, "cast in all my living." But I have also one source of present grief, which is, that I shall likely be compelled to stop my plan of giving out larger works than tracts. Most brethren yet choose to give for tracts, the most they do for free distribution of our works; and of course have a right to their choice. Should any yet wish to aid me in my work, I shall be happy to go on and give out to the amount of what is sent in, or pledged to be given in the course of 1869.

I have reposed confidence in brethren in giving out works in advance of what was sent or paid in; and as liberality as well as numbers is increasing among us, I can but hope they will not long leave me burdened with a debt of $150. It is well for me that my printers are patient in waiting for their pay.

I am aware that I am not alone in making sacrifices to spread our glorious truths. Others of our preachers not only fail to lay up for age, or a sick day, but have to use up means they possess, and also be in debt. I would in kindness ask the hundreds of our brethren who are in some way yearly adding to their property, if these things ought so to be? Will it receive the approval of Him who has entrusted you with the one, five, and ten talents? Read 1 John 2: 28, and Rom. 6: 10. The Lord in mercy give us all wisdom to feel and act more and more as did Moses: "have respect unto the recompense of reward," to be given in the soon coming kingdom.

Buffalo, Feb. 17th, 1869. J. BLAIN.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—By the mercy of God, and through the kindness of friends, I have been blessed with the privilege of spending most of the winter in a climate whose temperature has been quite congenial, though at first I thought I could not stand its sudden changes; but caution has made it most agreable. There can be seen a variety of flowers vended on the streets nearly every day, and soon all the herbage of the forest will begin to mantle itself with its green foliage, and the air be filled with its pleasant odor. I feel I have much to do, and but little time to do it in. One, two, three, or ten years are nothing to be compared with eternity.

I would like to give a list of the names of the persons who have been the means of helping me to remain here till now. C. Green, M. D., Philadelphia, Pa., $2.50; Wm. Baker, $25; R. W. Macomber, $5.00; Mrs. M. M. Eastman, Landaff, N. H., $1.00; Mrs. S. B. W. Mulliken, Colebrook, N. H., $5.00; Mrs. G. B. Persons, Hockanum, Ct., $2.00; Bro. Zeabo, Fla., $1.00, and quite a number of tracts; some were accompanied with names and some were not. Charles M. Shepard sent four on "Adventism", and four others, which I found quite interesting. I sincerely thank the brothers and sisters for these many favors. They have made me quite comfortable. If there be any who have sent money to me and their names are not here, please acquaint me of the fact.

My health was never better. I invite all the readers of this paper to offer one prayer for this weak messenger boy. God help us all to pray.

Direct all letters to the care of Dr. I. I. Leslie, Box 634, Memphis, Tenn.

Yours in hope, J. B. WADSWORTH.
New Orleans, Feb. 10th, 1869

From Bro. J. Clifford.

BRO. GRANT:—I thought the brethren and sisters would be glad to hear from us, and what the Lord is doing out here in the South. There are five of us here with Sister Hastings' mission, besides her son. We are building a house here for a school, meeting-house and dwelling-house together. We live in Bro. Hastings' old tent while the house is being built, which we have pitched on the ground.

We go about five miles from here Sundays to hold our meetings. Fourteen came forward last Sunday for prayers, mostly whites. We also have meetings here in the big tent Sunday afternoons. Sister Hastings has purchased about an acre of land pleasantly situated, on which we are building the house. We are treated kindly by the people generally, though some of the ministers on whom Bro. Taylor called do not think much of us.

A school is being kept in the Colored Baptist house until we can get the new one ready. Many of the people around here are very destitute, and crowds of them visit Sister Hastings daily. Many of them are in rags, whose sufferings she relieves, both white and colored.

We feel it so blessed to be helping this poor people. It more than compensates for all the sacrifices we have made.

The weather is nearly as warm as summer. They are already working on the plantations, and getting ready to put in the seed.

JOHN CLIFFORD.
Society Hill, S. C. Feb. 14th 1869.

From Bro. A. F. Dugger.

DEAR BRN:—Praise the Lord for his rich condescension, and now as we are not in darkness let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, exhorting each other, to the time when we shall experience the realization of our glorious hope. Eternal beauty and unfailing glory is almost here. Soon it will roll over this sin-cursed earth, and cause it to bloom with more than its Eden beauty. A little way in the future, and we can see that shining host, with golden crowns, and harps of praise, with palms of victory in their hands, mingling their voices in praise to their everlasting King, to God who hath called them, and to Jesus who hath redeemed them.

A home with the ransomed host of God. Yes, there will be Abraham, the father of the faithful; Isaac, Jacob and Daniel, too, who placed their sacred trust in God. The saints of the Most High will be there from every age, and every clime; for it is written, "They shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God."

Brethren and sisters, though the contest be long and weary, and trials and temptations meet you on the way, be ye not discouraged, but go on your way with cheerful countenances, rejoicing as on your way you go, knowing your redemption draweth nigh. Thank the Lord for that victory that now shines on the golden crowns of life beyond the grave.

Knowing, as we do that the coming of Christ is near, even at the door, let us so live that when he comes to claim his own we can say in that day, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him; we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." We shall then have a right to the tree of life, and be permitted to enter in through the gates into the city; where God by one kind hand shall wipe away all tears from every weeping eye.

Reader, would you share the glories of this beautiful city? Then Christ by you must be chosen.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality,
Ogle Station. A. F. DUGGER.

From Sr. O. Brown.

BRO. GRANT:—I am striving by the grace of God to be pure in heart, and be an overcomer, that I may have a right to the tree of life that is in the paradise of God. "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels." "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out."

What promises there are for the children of God. Praise the Lord forever! The Lord is good, and his mercy endureth forever. I feel in my heart that I will live near the bleeding side of Christ, so that I can claim these promises as mine, and live where I can hold sweet communion with him from day to day; where I can share the light of his countenance and the assurance that I shall outride the storm, and have a home in God's everlasting kingdom.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us be faithful and have our lamps trimmed and burning, like unto those that wait for their Lord, that when he shall return from the wedding we may open to him immediately.

What a change! from mortality, darkness and woe
To the evergreen shores of bright Eden we go;
With our bright crowns immortal and harps of pure gold,
And the King in his beauty with joy we behold.

Sangerville, Me. OLIVA BROWN.

C. H. SWEET writes:—"The series of meetings in this place (Washington, Conn.,) have resulted in much good. A great amount of prejudice has been removed from the minds of the people, and five have made a start for the kingdom. Others are under conviction, and we expect some of them to make a move soon. Pray that the good work may go on."

For the World's Crisis.

A CORRECTION.—I see by the report of the Maine Min. Conf., my name is put in with several Brn. in a discussion on Church Order, showing that I left on that account, which was not the fact. It is well known to my Brn. that I was in favor of organizing the State Conference, but I never was for passing so many resolutions and publishing them. I withdrew from Conf. Friday morning, before any discussion was up, and left for home. My name should not have appeared with what was done or discussed after. I never deplored the results of organizations. I was opposed to the action of Conference in taking one hundred dollars from the mob, when the damage was admitted by some to be less than ten for cutting down eleven ropes. My prayer is for Bible order and practice.

Obituaries.

BURNS. Died in Montreal, P. Q., Dec. 6th, 1868, of heart disease, after a short illness of four weeks, Bro. John Burns, aged fifty-three years.

Bro. Burns embraced the blessed hope of the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ about five years since, at the time of Bro. Grant's second visit to Montreal, in the winter of 1865, which hope he continued to cherish to the last, assured he should sleep sweetly in Jesus till the resurrection of the just, and then put on immortality, as a gift of God through Jesus Christ. He leaves a beloved wife and family to mourn his loss. His funeral was attended by the writer, with many other friends. T. BUCKINGHAM.

ANDREWS. Died in Warner Gore, Nov. 10th, 1868, of typhoid fever, Abigail P., daughter of Bro. John M. and Sr. Minerva T. Andrews.

Though this afflicted family have been called to mourn, we feel that they mourn not as those who mourn without hope. The deceased professed faith in the atoning merits of Jesus' blood, and was baptized by the writer in May last. Though thus early cut down, we trust she sleeps in Jesus. Funeral services attended by the writer.

C. H. FLETCHER.

FLANDERS. Died, Dec. 3d, 1868, in Boston, Mass., a son of Henry and Catharine Flanders, aged twenty-three years, eight months and three days.

"When blooming youth are snatched away
By death's resistless hand,
Our hearts the mournful tribute pay,
Which pity must demand."

TIBBITTS. Died in Richmond, Me., July 31st, 1868, Sr. Anna Tibbitts, wife of Mr. Mark Tibbetts, aged eighty-four years, ten months and three days.

Sr. T. found favor with God in 1854, and joined the Second Advent Church, and lived a devoted life until her death. She now sleeps in Jesus, waiting for the trump of God to wake her to immortality and eternal life in the kingdom of his dear son. Funeral by S. K. Partridge.

H. S. MITCHELL.

TIBBITTS. Died in Richmond, Me., Feb. 2nd, 1869, Mr. Mark Tibbitts, aged eighty-five years, two months and six days.

Mr. T. lived an honest and peaceable life. May God's grace be with all of the mourning children, and bring them all into his kingdom. Funeral attended by the writer. Text, Acts 26: 8.

H. S. MITCHELL.

DEMOUTH. Died in Cushing, Me., Dec. 30th, 1868, George Demouth.

Mr. D. was a Bible reader, and believed that we had the truth, but made no profession of religion. By his request the writer attended the funeral. Text, Job 14: 14. H. S. MITCHELL.

PEACOCK. Died in Richmond, Me., Feb. 11th, 1869, Sister Sophia S. Peacock, wife of Aaron Peacock, aged twenty-eight years. H. D. REED.

NILES. Died in Richmond, Me., Feb. 17th, 1869, of consumption, Lydia A. Niles, aged twenty-four years. H. D. REED.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

MADRID, Feb. 18. Lopez de Ayala, Minister of the Colonies, has issued an important decree to take effect in the colonial possessions of Spain. It establishes a uniform system of legal jurisprudence, abolishes ecclesiastical courts and makes various modifications in the financial administration of the colonies.

PARIS, Feb. 18. The Conference of the great powers met to-day to receive a communication from Athens, of which M. Walewski was the bearer. The reply of the Greek government to the propositions of the Conference was satisfactory, and a resolution was adopted that Greece, having yielded, the great powers reserve to themselves the right to protect the lives, property and interests of the Christian inhabitants of Turkey. The Representatives of the Powers finally gave their signatures to the protocol, and the Conference dissolved.

LONDON, Feb. 19. The Times, in an article on the Alabama treaty, says: "The want of a definite basis of arbitration will reconcile England to the rejection of the convention by the United States. This point should be kept clearly in view in the event of offers for further negotiation. England now awaits proposals from America. We have done our best. We have gone to the very verge of National humiliation to secure the settlement of the questions at issue. We shall now wait for propositions from the new Administration under Gen. Grant. It is admitted that the claims are a fair subject for friendly arbitration."

LONDON, Feb. 22. Dispatches from Athens announce that the Greek Chambers have been dissolved, and elections for members of a new Legislature are to be held in May next.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 22. The decrees and orders recently issued by the Sublime Porte against the Greeks have been revoked, and Turkish ports have been thrown open again to Greek shipping.

LONDON, Feb. 22. Baron Lionel F. Rothschild (Liberal) has been elected to Parliament from London City, in place of Mr. Bell, Conservative.

DOMESTIC.

Montreal, Canada, Feb. 17. The Quebec Legislature adjourned yesterday for the want of a quorum, only twelve members being present. A snow storm stopped the trains and prevented the members from reaching the capital. The snow in the streets here is eight feet deep and some streets are almost impassable. The roof of the drill shed fell in this afternoon owing to the weight of snow. The trains from the east and the west are very much delayed. A statement is published showing that the fall of snow so far is about 118 inches, which exceeds by 38 inches the total fall in any year for twenty years past. Several extensive lumber merchants, in Ottawa district, have closed their operations for the winter, owing to the difficulty in getting provisions into the woods for the men.

Havana, Feb. 18, via Key West, Feb. 19. The insurgents hold Guanpa, a port south of Roman Cayes. They have fortified the town, and have batteries mounted with a brace of cannon and manned by Americans. The water in front of the position has a depth of eight feet, and the guns bear upon the narrow channel by which the town can only be approached from the sea. The government at Havana is equipping flotilla launches for an attack on Guanpa.

Transports arrived here yesterday with one thousand troops from Spain, and others arrived to-day with one thousand more. Orders have been issued requiring the citizens to deliver to the authorities all the private arms.

Passing Events.

☞ Among the rare manuscripts of the Marquis of Hastings, recently sold at auction in London, was a copy of the four Evangelists in the hand writing of Wyckliffe, the great reformer, which was purchased for the British Museum at a cost of a little over one thousand pounds sterling.

☞ As one result of the various engineering devices entered upon in London of later years for the purification of the river Thames, it is stated that during the past summer several kinds of fishes made their appearance at Blackfriar's bridge, after having been unknown there for many years.

☞ There is a cave under Lookout Mountain supposed to extend twenty miles underground. It has been partially explored and found to contain beautifully frescoed chambers, curious stalagmites, pebbly brooks, water falls and a murky lake of great extent.

☞ The fall of a meteor of intense brilliancy was observed from the summit of Peon Hill, Harvard, Saturday evening, the 13th, about 7.10 P. M. It fell from near the zenith, in the southern heavens, and was visible about four seconds. The hue of the nucleus was an intense fire green, and in its flight it left behind a gorgeous corruscating train.

☞ The celebrated cypress tree of Somma, Lombardy, Italy, is perhaps the oldest tree on record. It was known to be in existence in the time of Julius Cæsar, forty-two years before Christ, and is, therefore, more than 1900 years old. It is one hundred and six feet in height, and twenty feet in circumference at one foot from the ground.

☞ A severe shock of an earthquake occurred at Phillipsburg, St. Martin's, about noon on the 28th ult, which caused the suspension of business during the entire afternoon.

☞ The highest permanent human habitation on the surface of the globe is the Buddhist monastery of Haule in Thibet, at a height of 15,117 feet above the sea.

☞ New York distilleries have all dried up—not one in operation, it is said.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.

2. AN EXPOSITION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.

4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.

5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.

6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.

7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

8. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.

9. THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.

10. RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

MILLENNIAL HYMN.

Now, Christian, arise, in thy glory appear,
Thy garment of beauty put on;
For the time of the singing of birds now is near,
And the voice of the turtle already we hear,
Thy winter is over and gone.

Too long have the harps of the exiles been mute,
And sad on the willows have hung;
For they said in the land of the stranger pollute,
Where we sowed in despair reaped in anguish the fruit,
How can anthems of Zion be sung?

But the time long foretold by the prophets is near,
Rise, rise, for its dawning we see;
When the exiles redeemed shall in Zion appear,
And the hand of Jehovah shall wipe every tear,
And sighing and sorrow shall flee.

No more then forever thy sun shall go down,
The moon hide its brightness no more;
For God with the bliss of his presence will crown
That world on which darkness and sin ne'er shall frown,
No night e'er visit the shore.

King Jesus, thy saints are looking for thee,
To share thy salvation they'll come;
From the ends of the earth, from the isles of the sea,
All nations of people thy subjects shall be,
And no more in transgression shall roam.

O hail! thou blest season, thou era of Gold,
Thy beauties our bosoms inspire;
Thy glory will soon in its fullness unfold,
Thy saints the salvation of God shall behold,
And sin, death and sorrow expire.

THE WATCHMAN.

In the Eastern countries they divide the day and night into four equal parts. Watchmen are stationed on high towers, others patrol the streets of the city. Their duty is to proclaim with a loud cry the hours as they pass at night, so the people who depend upon them for protection of their lives and property may know that they are not sleeping at their post.

The responsibility of these watchmen is very great; for whatever outrages are committed, the watchman who is on duty at the time is responsible. In case of murder, his own blood is required; and hence those who are appointed to this duty are obliged to be very vigilant to prevent disorder. A knowledge of these customs of the east during the ages in which the Scriptures were written, affords an explanation of many circumstances mentioned in the Old and New Testaments.

The prophet Isaiah alludes to this in speaking of the watchman. He says, "The watchman shall lift up his voice, . . . never holding their peace day nor night, and keeping not silence."—Isa. 62. Again, in speaking of careless and unfaithful watchmen, he described them as "dumb dogs," "dreamers that love to slumber." Isa. 56.

They had watchmen in the Temple at Jerusalem, composed of Levites. Their watchword was the name of Jehovah. "Bless ye the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord, who stand in the night in the house of the Lord." "The Lord bless thee out of Zion." "The Lord that made heaven and earth."

The office of the watchman is by no means an easy one, as he is responsible for the safety both of the persons and property he is appointed to guard, and must meet without mercy the penalty affixed for the neglect of his duty.

So it is with the spiritual watchman. God has placed watchmen upon the walls of Zion, whose duty it is to proclaim aloud to the people the warnings and admonitions of the word of God. "O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel. Therefore thou shalt hear the word of the Lord at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto thee, O watchman, thou shalt surely die if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it, if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul."—Ezek. 33: 8, 9.

Fearful is the responsibility of the watchmen of the house of Israel. God holds them accountable for their charge. There is a "woe" pronounced against the "pastors" that destroy the sheep. Jer. 23. "Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture, saith Jehovah." In the New Testament watchmen, or pastors, are called servants. "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them their meat [a portion of truth] in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

The watches are brought to view in Mark 13. "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time [of my coming] is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants [watchmen], and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even [first watch], or at midnight [second watch], or at the cockcrowing [third watch], or in the morning" [fourth watch]. There are four watches brought to view by our Lord. I believe these four watches span the gospel dispensation. The evening was when our Lord went away. The morning is the time when he will return.

During the absence of the Master, it is the duty of the watchman to cry aloud and give the hour of night,—the watch, so the people may be informed of their whereabouts in this moral night. The people call to the watchman, "Watchman, what of the night?" They should be able as good servants and faithful watchmen of the Lord to give a ready and correct answer, announce the true hour. The world is asleep upon this all-important subject, and the watchmen, oh, how few are awake to their solemn duty, giving meat (a portion of God's truth) in due season. How few are receiving the word at his mouth, and warning the world of its coming doom.

The Lord is soon coming to set up his everlasting kingdom. The signs that were to precede his coming are nearly all in the past: we are seeing the last picture of earth's drama pass before us. O, these are solemn moments, fraught with eternal consequences. Soon the die will be cast. Soon the harvest will be past, the summer ended. Soon the present age will end, and the day of the Lord begin.

Who is there among all the watchmen that will clear his garments from the blood of souls? Soon the trumpet will sound, the judgment throne be set, and we all shall give an account of our stewardship. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find giving meat in due season. But woe to that evil servant! "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of; and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

— Pride is a sinner's torment, but humility is a saint's ornament.

DAY-BREAK!

In the golden sunshine, lightly flitting across the flower-garden, see yon butterfly! For a moment it rests upon a blooming rose, then up and away to the sweet-pea, and on from flower to flower, so unlike the busy bee or the laborious ant. Such was my life as a child. Earnest realities, even then, were all around me. Sin and death were everywhere, but I thought not of them. Eternity was before me, but I perceived it not. And God himself was there, but I knew it not. I hunted the golden bubble of pleasure, and wandered in the by-paths of sin and folly.

At length the Unseen Hand was gently laid on me. Sickness fell like a blight upon the little child. The world looked darker. My thoughtless heart was led to some reflection, but nothing more. Childhood passed away, and changed into boyhood; and then fever came upon me. The cheek was flushed, the pulse ran high, and I was laid upon a little bed in a clean attic chamber, with the blind drawn down, and stillness all around. And then, day after day, there sat by that bed an elder sister, whose tender hand smoothed the sick boy's pillow, and whose gentle voice spoke, amid the stillness, blessed words about the holy "Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

Through the vista of twenty eventful years I now look back on that quiet chamber, as the birth-place of my soul to a new eternal life; for there I experienced that blessed change of heart known as conversion to God. It was like the entrance of light into darkness! It was as if the shutters of my soul had been taken down, and pure daylight from heaven let into it! Then, for the first time, did the wonderful and glorious things which I had read in the Bible seem real to me. Had an angel appeared to me, as I lay on that bed, methinks he could not have shown before my eyes more brightly real than did the truths of salvation. It was as if the Lord, in whom I had seen no beauty or glory that I should desire him, had been transfigured before me, his face brighter than the sun, beaming with divine and healing rays of love and mercy, and his raiment, which I had despised, whiter than the light; and I seemed, in spirit, to meet his loving glances, and read my salvation in his looks. Then was "my mouth filled with laughter, and my tongue with singing." It was as if the heavens had been opened above me, and God looked down with a Father's love, and called me his child, and told me that my sins were all forgiven. I heard no voice. I saw nothing unusual with the outward eye; but I believed in Christ as I had never done before. I accepted him as my own precious Savior. I took his blessed words to myself, and I rejoiced. Now time and eternity seemed bright before me! I knew that I was saved—that old things had passed away, and all things become new. To those around me I soon confessed what great things the Lord had done for my soul; and when raised from the bed of sickness, I knelt down in secret to worship God with the feelings of a new creature, and read with joy and reverence his blessed word, and fed upon it as a lamb feeding in green pastures.

Dear reader, you have now read a short account of my conversion. This is the conversion to God which the Bible talks about. This is being "born again;" and without this new birth, no sinner can possibly be saved.

Thousands deceive themselves by thinking that an outward change of life is all they need. What every sinner needs is a heart renewed by the Spirit of God. We "must be born again." We were born sinful, because born of sinful parents. Now, in order to become holy, we must be "born of God." Sinners are like trees bearing poisonous fruit. Such trees will never bear good fruit till their very nature is changed. The thorn cannot bear grapes, or the thistle figs. They cannot do it, for it is contrary to their nature; and no pruning or cultivation will ever make them. So with us. Cutting off the branches of our bad habits does not change the nature of the root. Yea, though you cut the branches off a thousand times, the root will bear fresh ones like them over again. We need new hearts. No cultivation can change our natures. Religious training cannot cause the sinner to produce the fruits of righteousness. It cannot bring out of us what is not in us. A sinner can no more change his nature than an Ethiopian his skin, or a leopard his spots. But when God converts a sinner, it is by means of the truth. He leads that sinner to hear and to believe the truth which saves him. James the apostle says, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." James 1: 18. The apostle Peter describes the saved as "born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth, and abideth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." 1 Peter 1: 23, 25. These texts teach that men are born again by means of the truth. Their hearts are changed by the power of the gospel. See how the three thousand were converted on the day of Pentecost. They were great sinners. Many of them had doubtless taken part in the crucifixion of Christ. Peter, full of the Holy Ghost, preaches to them, that He whom they had crucified was the Messiah and the Savior. Pierced to the heart by the awful truth, they cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter then preaches forgiveness to them for all their sins, through that Savior's name. They believe, and straightway they are saved!

Look at the eunuch converted in his chariot while traveling in the desert. How changed! From being an ignorant sinner, who read the word of God without understanding it, he became an enlightened and rejoicing saint. And what changed him? Hearing and believing the truth. Philip "preached to him Jesus," and he believed with all his heart, and there and then was saved. So with Lydia. "The Lord opened her heart to attend to the things spoken by Paul," and she was converted. And so with the Philippian jailer. He was a cruel persecutor of the apostles—an ignorant idolater. At midnight God startles him from his sleep by an earthquake! He cries, "What shall I do to be saved?" Paul and Silas answer, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." They preach to him "the word of the Lord." They tell him of salvation full and free, through the Lamb of God slain for sinners, even the chief! He believes the blessed message, and becomes a new creature. He brings out the very men he had thrust into the innermost prison, washes their wounds, and sets meat before them. A lion once, he is now a lamb! the servant, the friend, the brother, of those whom he had persecuted! Thus, too, has God converted thousands—thousands of every age and of every clime.

And now, dear reader, I beseech you to answer to your own heart the solemn question, Are you born again? Oh! remember you must be either made a "new creature" in Christ Jesus, or cast into hell. Do you now understand the gospel? Do you understand why Jesus died? Son of God though he was, he was put to a shameful death—crucified between two felons on Calvary! And wherefore? For our sins.

"O groundless deep! O love beyond degree!
The offender dies to set the offender free!"

We sinned. Justice said that we must die. But lo! Jesus died instead! And now Justice says that we may live; yea, that if we believe in him as our Savior, in him we shall have everlasting life.—Ex.

MY EXPERIENCE.

It is little more than two years since I began to serve God with my might, mind and strength. Although I have been a professor for years, I never enjoyed so much of the love of God in my heart as I have for the past two years. I have not been in a fog as in former years; the mists of heathen tradition have all cleared away, and I can truly say the light of God's word shines brighter than noon-day.

During the past two years I have had many trials, and also many triumphs; not the least of my trials has been being called an Adventist. I have but one blood relative of like faith as myself. When those that are dear to me meet me with indifference, or pass me by with a coldness that can be felt as well as seen, those whose voices are heard in the prayer-meeting and the pulpit, those that can pray loud and long, reject me and look upon me with a sort of pity mingled with contempt, because I am an Adventist; this has been a hard trial for me; but through prayer and the grace of God assisting me I have triumphed. I feel that Jesus is nearer to me than father or mother, sister or brother, or everything in this world. I can now look upon all things connected with this life as dross, compared with the love I have for my dear Savior. O for the triumph that cometh from above, and the grace that will sustain us when every earthly friend fails.

I feel that if I should be called to sleep the sleep of death before Jesus comes, he is faithful who has promised. The morning will dawn, and what a glorious morning it will be for God's weary, waiting ones; what a blessed thought when we shall be where all is love, and joy and peace, and to know that when Christ shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

This blessed hope is free to all who have a mind to embrace it. We are all our own free agents, free to choose life or death. It seems strange to me many times that there are so many who will spend every dollar they are worth in paying their doctor and trying to prolong their lives a few short months, or years at best, when the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, and we can all have it without money and without price; if we will live in obedience to the commands of God, which are not hard. Jesus says, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

So long as the curse remaineth we must expect trials, the sinner as well the christian; but, unlike the sinner, the christian can look far beyond this life, when earth shall be restored to all its Eden beauty; when the glory of God will fill the earth as the waves fill the sea; when all trials and tears have passed forever away, and the memory of them perished. Is not eternal life worth seeking? Can we not deny ourselves a few short years for the sake of attaining eternal life, with all its attendant blessings? For one, I want to enjoy that rest that remaineth for the children of God, and he being my helper, I will be ready to meet the Savior with joy when he comes. My heart almost stands still with fear when I think, what if I should be among that number that will be thrust out of the kingdom. Father, grant that I may remove every doubt and fear from my heart, and help me to rely less on my own strength, and trust thee more. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!

APPLE-TREE EYE-SORES.

This is a disease peculiar to a certain phase of belief in the immediate return of our Lord from heaven. I have been a subject of it, and know how to sympathize with others who have it. It is caused by an idea that because the evidence is so clear that the Lord will come before fruit can be obtained from trees newly set, therefore it is a denial of our profession to set out trees. This has deterred some for twenty-five years from such and other improvements on land nearly waste, which might have been made productive of much fruit, which the owners now buy of others, or do without possessing.

All such neglect of improvement is truly honest, and is in accordance with their views of things. It may be much better than to become "overcharged;" but does an honest, sound christian faith, or scriptural doctrine, warrant such action, i. e., require it? I think not. I will tell my brethren how I became cured of it.

I became convinded that the "unrighteous mammon" (property of this world,) has its standard value by the world, and is of service to us all to use, sell, or exchange, while in the world, in sustaining the cause of humantiy, virtue, and of Christ. We are to "occupy until" Christ comes; and in doing so we can earn money as servants hired, as mechanics, inventors, manufacturers, traders, stock raisers, farmers, fruit growers, etc., etc. But we must do it to serve and glorify God.

Every dollar earned in each proper calling is of value in the service of Christ. If a farm is improved in one, two, or three years by a brother, so that it will produce $100 extra value, he is responsible to God for so much more of the Lord's money. If he improves his farm so that he can sell it for $500 more; this is property to be used for the Lord, not for himself. So with a garden or any other real property. We may want to sell, or be obliged to sell out at any time, or we may die and our executors sell or divide what we leave before the Lord comes, even this year. All we have improved is of value to the cause of God, unless we have put it out of the Lord's cause; some do this; God is their judge.

Four years ago I bought a house and lot. It had no fruit trees. I was timid about setting out any, lest it cause the weak to stagger; but I did set some trees and grape vines, not expecting to eat fruit of them, hoping the Lord would come first, and not knowing but I should be obliged to sell, or wish to sell, if he did not. Well, I have eaten fruit from the trees and vines. They will now sell for four times their cost. Last spring I set more on the same principle. I am conscious that the cause of God has all and much more than my income, but these trees have given sore eyes to some, I learn. Come to Christ with it and be healed.

I. C. WELLCOME.

CLOSET WORK.

Flee to the closet as your life, your safeguard, your hope, your joy. God is there, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, salvation. No one can discharge family duties acceptably, household ministrations and governmental relations—no one can resist the wiles of the devil manfully, sustain an equilibrium of calm, peaceful, humble resignation and joyfulness, without gaining wisdom and strength in the closet. Wives, do you believe this? Mothers, do you? Mark well, behold that mother, that daughter, coming from the closet, with a face shining with holiness, as did that of Moses when descending the Mount of God. What now? Panoplied? armed with helmet, sword, and shield? Her feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace? Satan is bruised under her feet. Satan finds no lodgment. All his fiery darts are hurled in vain. She is clothed with humility. The graces of the Spirit shine forth radiantly; love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. She goes forth from the closet armed.

Sisters, mothers, daughters, old and young, flee to the closet; have your regular stated seasons; adhere to them strictly, undeviatingly. Let no earthly care deprive you of these.—Home Truths.

MODERN THEOLOGY.

What is man? an animal, immortal,
Possessed of body, soul; these two combined
Make up a man compact and whole,
As Adam was, the father of mankind.

The body dust returns to dust again,
The body only can grim death control;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest, was not (So saith the poet) spoken of the soul.

The soul lives after death, if good, conveyed
To happy regions, safe, secure to dwell;
The guilty soul to realms of misery,
Where fires eternal dwell, in lowest hell.

Down, down it goes in anguish, there to groan
And gnash its immaterial teeth in pain;
The immaterial tongue is scorching hot,
And tortures rack its immaterial brain.

Across the gulf the happy, happy souls,
In Paradise, where all is love and joy,
With immaterial tongues sing, tune their harps,
With hymns of praise the joyful hours employ.

And when the trumpet sounds, the souls from hell,
From heaven fly, to bodies raised again,
Before the judgment seat of Christ arraigned,—
Sent to abodes of endless bliss or pain.

Cain sent to hell six thousand years ago,
In fire and flame the awful time has spent,
Is now brought forth before his righteous Judge,
Tried, guilty found, and back to hell is sent.

That this is "Jeddart justice" none can doubt,
Which hangs a man, and tries him when he's dead;
No wonder unbelief abounds, and men
Reject the Word when so interpreted.

— It is a great advantage to keep quiet, gracefully and naturally. Self control is the best evidence of a cultivated intellect and a clear conscience. It is a great pleasure to meet those who wisely listen and observe—who review what is said without prejudice, and with or without advice commit no errors. Nothing is so difficult to do, nothing so rarely done.

TRUE STRENGTH.—The secret of all diligence, energy, pleasure, success in duty, is a heart enlarged by the love of God. "For the love of Christ constraineth us." Oh! that golden chain of perfect freedom; that binding yoke of most sweet and willing bondage! See St. Paul, the bondsman of Christ, going out to his daily service of labor and perils, chanting his morning song, and saying, "Most gladly will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." "Strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," was St. Paul, but his strength was the strength of faith.—Bishop McIlvaine.

CHRIST EVERYWHERE.

Christ at the counting desk, as you meet that trembling debtor whom you are about to deliver over to the dogs of the law, to say to you, forgive seventy times seven.

Christ at the pen, to indite that article, to turn that brilliant sentiment to his glory.

Christ at the fireside, to give example to childhood of the walk and conversation that befits you.

Christ in the pulpit, instead of self, the sophistry of your own sermon, or the seductions of your own rhetoric.

Christ in the pew, to practice what you hear, and to take all to yourself.

Christ on Monday morning, giving light and love to your countenance, and causing your face to shine in gladness.

Christ at the bedside, to point the sufferer to him who suffered for all.

Christ at the mast head, to bear his life and teachings, when out of sight of men, and unto all climes and nations.

Christ in the dungeon, to justify, solace and save from crime, and restore to citizenship again.

Christ with the lost one, as she struggles with the demon of poverty and the wiles of her seducer.

Christ with the statesman, to bid him, in the fear of God, do all things, knowing all government is from him.

Christ at the cradle, to bend the pliant twig and give it purpose and beauty forever.

Christ everywhere. No matter where. Yea, Christ in the editor's chair, to warn every one to lay hold on eternal life.—The Church Union.

THE SLEEPLESS EYE.

Many are familiar with the story of a distinguished prisoner, the duty of whose guard it was to watch him every instant through a little aperture in his dungeon door. The guard was often changed, but there forever was that glittering eye. When he slept, or when he woke, it was always upon him. And after a time, he tells us, it became the most intolerable element of his imprisonment. It was no friendly eye, and that made the burden greater still. Many prisoners have escaped from bondage, even when massive walls and iron bars enclosed them. Many more have beguiled the weary hours in planning or speculating on the possibility of their doing the same. But here such a diversion of the thoughts was quite shut out. Not a moment could he escape the gaze of that sleepless eye. The slightest suspicious movement would be sufficient ground for causing the rigors of his confinement to be increased. O, to escape for one half hour from the presence of that watching eye! But months were lengthened into years, and still the watch went on.

But there was another eye, just as sleepless, continually on the prisoner, of which no doubt he thought but seldom. It saw far more than the soldier guard. It saw the real man, the heart life, hour by hour. The guard could only see the outer dress. The guard, and those whose power he represented, could do but little. They had power only to kill the body; but that all-seeing One had power "to cast both soul and body into hell."

We cannot think too often of this sleepless eye, which never for an instant is withdrawn from us. "Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways." It is a fearful thought to the wicked, but one of the most precious to those who love God. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

But oh, this eye "is strict to mark iniquity." We may cover our sins from our fellow men, but they cannot be hid from God. Yet, how precious the thought that we may come to the crimson fountain and wash them all away, so that we can be pleasing even to his searching eye. He will behold us without spot or blemish, because he looks upon us through his Son. Hasten to the fountain, while yet there is an opportunity given. How canst thou refuse

"To wash and be cleansed in his pardoning blood?"

SPEAK TO THE STRANGER IN YOUR CHURCH.—Dr. Reid writes thus in the Northwestern Advocate:—"Before we were born, the revered father of the writer came to this country. He was then a high-toned Churchman. He entered the great city, and was coldly shown to the stranger's pew under the gallery near the door. At once he felt that this was due to his plain apparel and humble appearance, and determined never again to expose himself to a like discourtesy. The following Sabbath he became a wanderer through the streets, and might have gone far from God. Accidentally—providentially, let us say—passing along John Street, he saw people entering a church there, and entered with them. He heard a plain, earnest sermon, and hearty singing and praying, and at the conclusion the person next to him shook his hand, and cordially invited him to come again. He was won, and did so; he became a regular attendant; a large family, then unborn, became mainly Methodists, and a son has for nearly twenty-five years been in the ministry. We shall save families and generations, who else might never be brought into a sanctuary, if we resume the sociality of early days. This social power was immense. It did not wait for parlors, or appointed occasions, but beamed out in all places, and at all times.

A LAY PREACHER.—Henry Farley, of London, whose labors have been greatly blessed in winning souls to Christ, is a butcher, and still follows his trade. An English paper says of him:—

"He is one of our modern mysteries. He is a living commentary upon those words: 'Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.' He has done what many would have considered a good day's work in the market and in his shop before breakfast, and here he was at noon as fresh and blooming as if he had recently left his bed. How he does his work, it may be worth his while some day to tell. He does not neglect his business, yet he preaches sometimes every day in the week, preaches twice on Sunday, and looks after the Sunday school, superintends his missionary work, and does something of pastoral visitation."

AN INCORRUPTIBLE CROWN.—A French officer, who was a prisoner upon his parole at Reading, met with a Bible; he read it, and was so impressed with its contents that he was convinced of the folly of skeptical principles, and of the truths of christianity, and resolved to become a Protestant. When his gay associates rallied him for taking so serious a turn, he said in his vindication: "I have done no more than my old school-fellow, Bernadotte, who has become a Lutheran."

"Yes, but he became so," said his associates, "to obtain a crown."

"My motive is the same; we only differ as to the place. The object of Bernadotte is to obtain a crown in Sweden; mine is to obtain a crown in heaven."

THE BEAUTIFUL MIRACLE.

"It seems so strange to me about Barbara Randall," said Rose Merwin, coming in one evening from school.

"What about Barbara?" asked Mrs. Merwin.

"She is really so different," replied Rose. "You know she united with the church last communion. I must say I did not expect it would do any one any good."

"Does it do any one any good, Rose?"

Rose looked up quickly. "I suppose so," she said; "and Barbara, I think is changed. I have watched her in school, and out. She used to get angry very easily; and I think she did not always tell the truth. Now she is very careful, too careful, in what she says; and if she gets angry, she keeps it to herself."

"I do not wish you to think, Rose, that uniting with the church changes any one. That act is only an outward profession of a change of heart. It is a great thing, indeed, to have a heart changed; and I, too, think Barbara is a true christian."

"It seems almost like a miracle to me," said Rose; "each new conversion, I mean. Isn't it a miracle, mother?"

"It is certainly as near it as anything we have now," said Mrs. Merwin, "and often reminds me of a very beautiful miracle which was once wrought."

"Tell me all about it," said Rose.

"There was once a golden box—"

"Solid gold?" interrupted Rose.

"All that you could see of it, outside and in. It was made of a fragrant kind of wood, but entirely covered with pure gold. The cover of the box was very beautiful. It had a rich border, and there were golden figures of angels upon it."

"Was it a large box?"

"Yes, about three feet long, and nearly two feet broad. In the box were two large stones with inscriptions upon them. Once there were twelve dry rods laid up before this box, all alike. The next morning one of these was found, not only green and budded, but also to have blossomed and borne fruit all in one night."

"O! it was Aaron's rod," said Rose; "and the golden box was the ark."

"Yes. What was upon the lid of the ark?"

"The mercy-seat."

Said Mrs. Merwin: "The budding, and blossoming, and bearing of this dry rod before the mercy-seat, remind me of the change in persons of which we have spoken. You see them dry, and apparently dead. They do not bear any fruit, and you might think they never would. Now bring them before the 'mercy-seat,' and what a change takes place! They spring into new life and beauty. Sweet blossoms of faith and hope appear, and rich fruits of love, patience, meekness, and gentleness are seen; no wonder it seems to us like a miracle. The rod was laid up before the mercy-seat, and kept as a constant reminder of God's power, as was the pot of manna."

"Were these in the ark with the tables of testimony?"

"You would think so, from what Paul says in Romans 9: 4. But I do not find any place in the Old Testament where it is said that the 'manna' and 'rod' were in the ark; and in two places it is said, 'There was nothing in the ark but the testimony.' Paul also tells us that it was a golden pot in which the manna was kept. He must have had a special revelation of this, as I do not think the Old Testament tells us what kind of pot it was. But this does not make any difference with regard to the miracle."

Rose looked very thoughtful. She was thinking whether she was yet a rod without any signs of this precious life, and a strong wish sprang up in her heart that she too might be changed, and gladden all about her by sweet blossoming and pleasant fruit.

Lamb of God, I look to thee;
Thou shalt my example be:
Thou art gentle, meek and mild;
Thou wast once a little child.

Fain I would be as thou art;
Give thee my obedient heart:
Thou art pitiful and kind;
Let me have thy loving mind.

A BOY ON TRIAL.

Before a court of justice a boy was once arraigned. He stood charged with Sabbath-breaking. The people of the neighborhood were pious and church-going, and the offence was great if true. Punishment at the whipping-post was the penalty for a boy of his size guilty of that crime. The day of trial came; and the boy was summoned to appear before the justice, and witnesses were called.

Many people, young and old stood around.

The first witness testified, "I saw and heard him shoot a gun on the Sabbath."

The second said, "It was done at the hour of worship;" and the people looked angrily at the boy.

The third witness said, "He shot among the people when they were coming out of the church;" and many said, "Away with him to the whipping-post!"

The fourth added, "He shot a pretty dog belonging to some orphan children."

Indignation filled every mind as they said, "He is guilty, he is guilty!"

But the fifth witness cried out, "Hold! the dog was mad!"

All was changed. The boy was justified, and rewarded rather than punished; and the people all loved and praised him.

Of course it is right to do good on the Sabbath day, and it was doing good to protect the lives of people by killing a mad dog, even on the Sabbath.

How often people form a wrong judgment when they decide before learning all the circumstances! We should ever remember that what is wrong under some circumstances, is right and praiseworthy, as in this case, under other circumstances.—Well-Spring.

"WONDERFULLER."

One day, a little blue-eyed friend of mine was playing merrily in the parlor, seeming to have no thoughts beyond her pleasures, when a gentleman and lady in the room began to talk about the Bible. The gentleman thought that a great many things in that book were not meant to be understood exactly as they were written. For instance, that the bunch of grapes which required the strength of two men to bring out of the "land flowing with milk and honey," was really an entire vine. The lady agreed with him. My little four year old friend dropped her toys, and going to the lady, put her hand upon her arm, and looking at her with pitying eyes, said,

"Aunty,"

"What, dear?" the lady answered.

"Do you know who made you?"

"Yes."

"Who?"

"God."

Then, summoning all her strength, in solemn tones the baby asked, "Do you think it was any wonderfuller for God to make that big bunch of grapes, than to make you?—Little Corporal.

A PRAYER.—The following prayer, almost synonymous both in sentiment and expression with our "Now I lay me," is universally taught to little children in Scotland:

This night when I lie down to sleep,
I gie my soul to Christ to keep;
I wake a' noo, I wake a' never,
I gie my soul to Christ forever.

RESTING BY-AND-BY.

"Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest."—Heb. 4: 11.

When faint and weary toiling,
The sweat-drops on my brow,
I long to rest from labor,
To drop the burden now,—
There comes a gentle chiding,
To quell each mourning sigh:
"Work while the day is shining,
There's resting by-and-by."

Chorus.—Resting by-and-by,
There's resting by-and-by;
We shall not always labor,
We shall not always cry;
The end is drawing nearer,
The end for which we sigh;
We'll lay our heavy burdens down,
There's resting by-and-by.

This life to toil is given,
And he improves it best
Who seeks by patient labor
To enter into rest;
Then, pilgrim, worn and weary,
Press on, the goal is nigh;
The prize is straight before thee,
There's resting by-and-by.

Nor ask, when overburdened,
You long for friendly aid,
"Why idle stands my brother,
No yoke upon him laid?"
The Master bids him tarry,
And dare you ask him why?
"Go labor in my vineyard,
There's resting by-and-by."

Wan reaper in the harvest,
Let this thy strength sustain,
Each sheaf that fills the garner,
Brings you eternal gain;
Then bear the cross with patience,
To fields of duty hie;
'Tis sweet to work for Jesus—
There's resting by-and-by.

"BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH."

It is with a sense of deep responsibility to the great Head of the Church that we again bring before you the subject of the Lord's second advent. Our desire is not only that you should be eminently holy, and therefore happy christians, but you should be also in the position of the Thessalonian church, "waiting for the Lord from heaven." In our last letter we suggested the possibility of our Lord's soon returning to gather "those who look for him" into the air; and then, after a little while, with them descending to this earth, to the destructiou of the Antichrist and his armies. We find no reason for altering these views, but a growing conviction that such solemn yet glorious events will speedily occur; hence arises the earnest desire to remind christians of these expected events, to the end that they may be found watching and waiting for their Lord; to warn the thoughtless of the approaching days of "the great tribulation," and point them to that almighty Redeemer who can and will deliver all who with simple trust look to him for salvation.

The objection to such considerations has been made that they are of an unpractical nature. Unpractical! The very reverse is the fact; they are eminently practical. No doctrine of Scripture could possibly have a greater tendency to keep us fervent in spirit, whilst diligent in business, anticipating the rest whilst occupying in the labor, than the great truth grasped by the understanding, and loved by the heart. Before I have finished the very work I have now in hand, my Lord may call me to meet him in the air. Oh, call not that divine doctrine unpractical which, when known and loved with the whole heart, does, under the divine guidance and sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, constrain us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which may most easily beset us;" to "keep the word of his patience," and to be "like unto men who are waiting for their Lord." (Luke 12: 36–40.) We sometimes meet with christians who object to the study of prophecy; they seem to regard it as forbidden fruit, as a part of Scripture which we have no right to search, forgetting the fact recorded in Dan. 11: 9, 10, that his words were sealed and closed up until the time of the end, but that at that time the wise should understand—clearly implying that his prophecy would in the last days be studied and understood. We find our Lord and his apostles quoting the prophets in reference to the coming future. Why, then, are christians not to do so? And in reference to one, and the last, of the prophetic books, "the revealing of Jesus Christ," which almost entirely refers to the future, there is pronounced a special commendation unto and upon all those who read, listen to, and keep the things which are written therein. (Rev. 1: 3.)

Rather than that you should be unprepared, we are willing to suffer reproach, be mocked and derided. Even as we write we pray that that you may search the Scriptures, note the signs of the times, and not be numbered among the careless unto whom our Lord will come as a thief cometh in the night, giving no warning. The language of our Lord (Matt. 24: 43) affirms that he has given his people warning; as also elsewhere it is written, "Lo, I have told you before;" and the apostle Paul likewise reminds the disciples at Thessalonica that they were not in darkness, that that day should not overtake them as a thief. Alas, how many professing godliness are in darkness as to this great truth, and prefer that darkness! They love their downy nests, their worldly possessions; the world is not yet embittered to them, and they seem to have no apprehension of the fact that the sudden transition from earth to glory will be the simple relinquishment of the shadow for the substance—an entrance upon a true rest, peace and joy, and the taking possession of real and permanent riches, since every redeemed one is an "heir of God, joint-heir with Jesus Christ."

The coming of the Lord Jesus is presented as a motive to heavenly-mindedness (Phil. 3: 20;) to christian consistency (Col. 3: 4, 5;) to fidelity in the Lord's service (1 Tim. 6: 14; 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2, 8;) to perseverance (Heb. 10: 37;) to patience (James 5: 7, 8;) to holy conversation and godliness (2 Peter 3: 10, 11;) to diligence and activity, and separation from all that is unholy (2 Peter 3: 11, 14;) to abiding in Christ (1 John 2; 28.) And as to its general practical effect the beloved disciple also says, "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure," (1 John 3: 2, 3.)

Are we not told to watch for it (Matt. 24: 43–51; Mark 13: 33–37;) to be looking for it (Phil. 3: 20; Titus 2: 13; Heb. 9: 28;) to pray for it (Matt. 6: 10;) to wait patiently for it (1 Cor. 1: 7; 2 Thess. 3–5;) to most earnestly desire it (Rom. 8: 23; 2 Cor. 5: 2; 2 Tim. 4: 8;) to be always ready for his coming. Luke 12: 35, 36, 40; 21: 34; Rom. 13: 11, 12; 1 Thess. 5: 6: Rev. 2: 25: 16: 45.)

But now the signs of the times, the commencement of the "perilous times" that "should come," warn us that the "crisis" to which the apostle alludes in Heb. 9: 27, that the terrible crisis, is at hand, and that the fearful woes announced to be poured forth on this sin-stricken world are upon the point of being fulfilled. If the momentous events, the fearful calamities alluded to in the Revelation, are impending, ought we not as christians joyfully to lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh? No waiting, watching, devoted disciple will the Lord permit to pass through that "tribulation the great." His especial promise is, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." . . .

We believe these last years are imminently There is a growing impression that great changes are at hand; every one feels that the times are critical; society everywhere is disturbed; symptoms of mysterious events meet us on every hand. The Jews are rapidly, yet quietly filling Jerusalem and its suburbs. The unclean spirits of Spritualism, infidelity, and Jesuitism are now actively leavening society at home and abroad. In the church of Christ worldliness abounds; there is much profession, but little spiritual life; few conversions. Read the lamentable complaint of the Congregational Union, in the paper read before them, and adopted by them at Hull, October, 1864: "Making haste to be rich in consequence of the idolatry of the social status is common; the great mass of our people are unwilling to give in proportion to their income; and last and saddest fact of all, conversions are lamentably few."

Scepticism prevails; thoughts on our Lord's coming ignored; that glorious approaching reign of Jesus is, as a doctrine, met with a bitterness of feeling most heart-saddening to contemplate. "Where is the promise of his coming?" is now heard on every hand; yea, even by men professing godliness, that grand scriptural truth, which so gladdened the churches of Philippi and Thessalonica, is attributed to emanate from Satan! Such are some of the scriptural signs of our having very nearly reached the utmost limit of "these last times," as the apostles Paul and Peter severally term them. How truly do the words of Paul characterize the growing wickedness of our times: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, . . . lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." (2 Tim. 3: 1, 2, 4.) . . .

Presumption some will charge us with for looking into these things. What! for taking heed unto prophecy, as we are commanded to do, and for doing which we are commended! (2 Pet 1: 19; Rev. 1: 3.) Presumption for daring to gaze upon the Jewish fig-tree, and, seeing it beginning to bud, exclaiming, "Lo, summer is nigh!" (Matt. 24: 32.) No, no, no; they are presumptuous who, with the word of God in their hands, condemn what they cannot gainsay, and will not investigate nor understand. Beloved in Christ Jesus, it is a glorious fact, "the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out" in your hearts "to meet him." Let us gladly anticipate the event; let us warn others of its near approach; willing rather to bear the taunts and scorn that may be heaped upon us for our steadfast expectation, than be accommodating ourselves to the propriety and decorum of the worldly wise—be suddenly aroused from our lethargy by the shout, He is come!—be found unwatching and suffer unspeakable loss. What will the world's gear and grandeur be to us then? or what the world's ridicule and contempt?

We would entreat the unconverted to consider these things ere it be too late. The promise yet holds good: "It shall come to pass that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Faith in a Savior's precious blood is demanded, and to salvation is essential. At once cast thy soul on Jesus; just as thou art, come to Jesus. Make no previous preparation; all such attempts are vain. Cast thyself with a broken, contrite heart to the feet of Jesus. Only believe; for "be it known unto you, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things," etc. (Acts 13: 38, 39.—Signs of Our Times.

For the World's Crisis.

OLIVES, JEHOSHAPHAT, HINNOM, GIHON, KIDRON.

NUMBER THREE.

Directly east from Mount Moriah and the temple was the middle summit of the Mount of Olives, from which our Lord ascended. The northern summit is the highest, named Galilee, and is one-fourth mile from Olivet. On the south summit Solomon built temples to his idols (the gods of the Ammonites and Moabites), on account of which it is called in 2 Kings 23: 13 "the mount of corruption." In the time of King Uzziah (about 777 or 800 B. C.), this mountain was so shattered by an earthquake, that the western side fell off, and rolling half a mile westward toward the east side of the opposite mountain (Ophel, a spur of Sion), blocked up the highways and covered the king's gardens. Between this mountain range of Olives on the east, and Sion, Acra, Moriah and Bezetha on the west, extended the narrow glen or valley of Jehoshaphat, running north and south, through which flowed the brook Kidron. Some denominate that portion to the south only as Jehoshaphat, and call that running between Moriah and Olivet "the vale Cedron"; but after comparing many authors together, we prefer as above given. In crossing from Olivet to Moriah, you must of necessity "pass through the valley," and also "over the river," in order to reach the "mount of God."

The valley of Hinnom lies to the south of the "city of David," or Sion, having its head near, if not in, the valley of Jehoshaphat, or vale Cedron, south-east of the city; and may have been formerly neither more nor less than a bifurcation of the latter. Running westward and curving northward, it terminates in, or unites with the valley of Gihon, on the west side of the city, a little below the point where the road from Jaffa enters Jerusalem; from which point Gihon curves to the left, and runs along south of the Jaffa road in the direction north of west. Speaking of modern Jerusalem, Mr. Buckingham says, while viewing it from Olivet: "This city occupies an irregular square, of about two miles and a half in circumference. Its shortest apparent side is that which faces the east, and in this is the supposed gate of the ancient temple, now closed up, and the small projecting stone on which Mohammed is to sit, when the world is to be assembled to judgment in the vale below."

"Coming to Zion."

We will now resume the consideration of the subject digressed from in No. 2, viz., "coming to Sion and sitting in the throne." The first inquiry is, naturally, What are they coming for? What are they going to do? The church is not left in darkness on these points, and the world need not be, for the "Scripture of truth" answers these questions, "the Scripture cannot be broken." Jude 14, 15, says, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." With this agrees Ps. 149: 9,—"To execute upon them the judgment written; this honor have all his saints"; also Ps. 110: 2,—. . . "rule thou in the midst of thine enemies"; 5th,—"The Lord at thy right hand (i. e. Jesus) shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath; he shall judge among the heathen (i. e. Gentiles); he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries." Joel 3: 9 says,—"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong; . . . let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen (Gentiles) round about." Zech. 14: 3 says,—"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." Fight against what nations? Rev. 19: 9 answers:—"And I saw the beast,"—the one of chap. 13, having seven heads and ten horns, that arose out of the sea; for chap. 17: 13 says of them, "These ten shall give their power and strength unto the beast (the one that arose out of the earth, chap. 13: 11, and 14); "these SHALL MAKE WAR WITH THE LAMB, and the Lamb shall overcome them,"—(but not until after THEY have made war on the saints and overcome them"; chap. 13: 7 (now past), "I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together (in answer to the proclamation, as made in Joel 3: 11) to make war against HIM that sat on the horse, and against his army; and the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet, that wrought miracles before him (i. e. before the beast), with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image (i. e. of the sea beast of chap. 13: 3, 14); these both were cast ALIVE (like Korah and his band—Num. 16) into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Now this "false prophet" is one and the same with the two-horned beast of chap. 13; as any one may see by comparing the portraits, as given in chap. 19: 20, and 13: 14, together. G. W. Stetson.

☞ A scoffer once scornfully asked, "What advantage has a religious man over any one like myself? Does not the sun shine on me as well as on him this fine day?" "Yes," replied his companion, a pious laborer; "but the religious man has two suns shining on him at once—one on his body, the other on his soul."

THE NAME "CHRISTIAN."

The first impression with the fathers of our connection was, that the object of a name was not so much to distinguish one from another, as to distinguish the real character of every one, in contradistinction from all the unbelieving world. Sectarian names would show the former, and the generical name Christian would show the latter. Therefore Christian is proper. They also went beyond this reasoning, and having referred everything to the Bible, they searched that for an appropriate name. There they found no such names given to the followers of Christ as Catholic, Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Methodist, Quaker, Shaker, Baptist, Tunker, Mennonite, Swedenborgian, Orthodox, Unitarian, Universalist; nor yet any other of the long list now given to the multiplied parties in Christendom. There they found they were called "disciples," "saints," "brethren," "believers," etc.; but each of these went to show some particular trait or relation; as, believers showed their faith; saints showed their holiness; disciples showed that they were Christ's scholars; but Christian embraced all these, and therefore was the most appropriate name.

It was seen, too, that thinking men so understood it, inasmuch as all are called Christians as a general name for all who follow Christ. It appeared evident to them that the apostolic church acknowledged this general name among themselves, and did not reject it when others called them by it. Whether it was first given by divine appointment, or whether it grew out of the nature of the case, both with themselves and their enemies, it is hardly worth while to inquire. Many even of the learned, however, have contended that the word "called," in the phrase "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch," when critically examined, and traced to its root, shows clearly that they were called Christians by divine appointment. But waiving all questions of this sort, the authority is clear, the name is proper when applied to every follower of Christ; and if so in reference to every one separately taken, then surely the whole taken collectively are Christians; thus our fathers reasoned, and thus we, their children, reason. Notwithstanding the original design was to use the name in common with all others—Christian, and for the same purpose that they do, yet the word soon began necessarily to be used also as a distinguishing name for the whole body of those who thus reject all names of human origin. This was unavoidable in the nature of things. Hence we now have "Christian connection," "Christian church," "Christian preachers," "Christian chapels," etc., etc. These are used with reference to us as a distinct, organized body of Christians. To avoid all these things, and lest we should grow up into a sect, many for a season opposed all organizations; but it was soon found that the remedy was worse than the disease, a thousand times; and hence church organizations and conference organizations are now becoming universal, and a distinct body is thus recognized, called the "Christian connection."

Many have endeavored to steal the name Christian from us, either by making it an adjective joined to some sectarian noun, as "Christian Baptist," "Christian Band," or something else of this sort; or else, by destroying the correct pronunciation of the word, some have nicknamed us by calling us a new sectarian name.

Others have changed the i in the last syllable into y, and thus they have made us Christyans. But all these adulterations, and modifications, and innovations, our whole connection spurn and reject. We are neither "Christian Baptists," nor a "Christian Band," nor "Christ-ians," nor "Christ-yans"; but as the rules of the language require, and as all others pronounce the word, so we are simply Christians.

We do not so call ourselves because we think ourselves exclusively entitled, nor because we are any more entitled to it than others; nor do we thereby deprive others either of the name or character. If they choose to appropriate to themselves other names in addition to this, we do not object; but we stop short, and call ourselves nothing more than they call themselves, before taking an unscriptural name. Are you Christians? So are we. Are you something else in addition? We are not.

OBEDIENCE.

Bro. Grant:—As my mind for a few days past has been dwelling upon the state of the professed church of Christ at the present time, I felt like writing a few lines for the "Crisis," a paper which I esteem next to my Bible. All who belong to Christ's church must obey Christ in all things. We are commanded to "fear God, and keep his commandments; . . . for God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Eccl. 12: 13–14. Christ says, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment; for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words shalt be condemned."—Matt. 12: 36–37. We are commanded to watch as well as pray; therefore we should see to it that our conversation is such as becometh the gospel of Christ.

How many at the present time, who profess to love Jesus and his appearing, are seeking worldly amusements, and joining in foolish talking and jesting, which is not becoming to a child of God. "Our conversation" should be "in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Our hearts must be cleansed from every thing that is not according to God's word. Jesus said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."

Can we say we love the Lord, and mingle with the world in its fashions and pride, which God forbids? In 1 John 2: 15–16, are these words: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." In these last days, when sin and iniquity abound, and the love of many waxes cold, how watchful and prayerful we ought to be, lest we also be drawn away by the wicked influences that surround us. The enemy of all righteousness is devising every means possible to draw people from the truth. How much unbelief we see at the present day; and why is it? I fear there are too many who say they love Jesus, who are walking after the carnal mind, which is enmity against God. "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." Now, if we have the love of God in our hearts, and are led by his Spirit, we shall mind the things of the Spirit, and we shall have peace within, which the world knows not of. We shall speak evil of no one; instead of envy and hatred, love and good will to all. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace," etc. If we are the temple of God, and his Spirit dwelleth in us, how careful we should be that we defile it not. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy."

May the Lord help us to examine our own hearts, and see if we are living according to his blessed word. We must forget those things which are behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before. We should try to walk in the light of God's countenance continually, so that in his name we can rejoice all the day.

May the good Lord help us to overcome all evil, and do his blessed will, that we may be saved in his kingdom. Brethren and sisters, pray for your unworthy sister, that she may be an overcomer through the blood of the Lamb, and the word of his testimony.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

THE FINAL DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

NUMBER EIGHT.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3: 8.

14. Positive proof that the wicked dead will live again.

1. We learn from Num. 24: 14–23, that old wicked Baalam will see the Son of God. In this text it is said, "He saw the visions of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open"; and then he adds, "I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh"; for "there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel,". . . and he shall "destroy the children of Sheth," etc. And then he cries out—"Alas, who shall live when God doeth this"!

2. Isaiah also speaks of the resurrection of the wicked, when he says: "The earth also shall disclose her blood (or bloods, marg.), and shall no more cover her slain" (Isa. 26: 21.) In the 19th verse it is said, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." So at this time, the earth casts out the dead, that is, the Lord's dead. But when the Lord shall come out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, then "the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." The Lord's dead men shall "live"—shall "arise." But of the wicked it is said: The earth also shall "disclose," that is, uncover, to lay open to view, her bloods, and shall no more "cover," that is, no more hide, or conceal in hades her slain. The wicked dead must be "visited" (Isa. 24: 22), after they have been shut up in the "prison" "many days." In Rev. 20: 5, we are told that "the rest of the dead"—that is, the wicked dead—"lived not again until the thousand years were finished." This one thousand years is the same as Isaiah's "many days," when they shall be "visited," or be found wanting; and then they will receive their executive judgment "in the lake of fire."

3. In Dan. 12: 2, it is declared of the wicked, that they "shall awake" "to shame and everlasting contempt."

4. The Son of God testifies, in John 5: 29, that "they that have done evil" shall come forth "unto the resurrection of damnation."

5. Paul testifies, in Acts 24: 15, "that there shall be a resurrection" of the "unjust." Again, in 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23, he says that all shall be "made alive," each "in his own order," just "as" they died in Adam, or through Adam. The saints live and die in the spirit of the Lord; and "so" they will be "made alive" (Rom. 8: 11) by the Spirit. But the wicked live and die without the Spirit of the Lord; and in this same "order" in which they lived and died here, in this same "order" will they be "made alive." They live and die without the love and Spirit of the Lord being in them; and they will thus be "made alive," without the love and Spirit of God being in them. O sinner, stop! stop and think before you further go! In Jesus, the Son of God, you can have life, yea, life eternal. Remember that, "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." But "if ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Rom. 8: 6, 13. "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because, strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. 7: 13, 14.

Objections Answered.

1. Some suppose that the wicked dead will not live again, because Christ is the only Life-Giver. It is true that Christ will not give eternal life to the wicked. But he can make the wicked alive, without giving them life eternal; the same as he "made alive" the ruler's daughter, the widow's son of Nain, and Lazarus of Bethany, without giving them eternal life at that time. There is quite a difference in the signification of the verb "made alive," as applied to the wicked, and the noun "life," as applied to the righteous. Therefore, if we do not discriminate between the verb and the noun in these cases, we must of necessity fall into a serious error. In John 3: 36, the phrase, "eternal life," is synonymous with life after death. A future life, as revealed in the Old and New Testaments, for the saints, is the same as eternal life. So in this passage where it is said that "he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life"; we have only to understand that such ones will not see "everlasting life"; the life which is promised to the believer, in the same verse. And from the very fact that we are to understand the phrase, "everlasting life," and life after death, to be synonymous terms, we are to understand that the wicked shall not see "everlasting life." But their being "made alive," at the time they are to receive the executive judgment due to their crimes, and thus be destroyed soul and body in gehenna fire, as their full reward, is just the opposite of the righteous, who will have "eternal life" as their full reward.

2. In John 6: 27, we are told that we should labor "for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto" us. Again, in verse 40, Christ says, "that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." This shows that those who do not believe in him, will not have everlasting life; neither will Christ raise them up at the last day; but they will be "made alive" when hades delivers up the ungodly, and then the "Son of God" will "destroy" them, soul and body, in the lake of fire, or in gehenna fire.

3. In Psa. 49: 12, 20, it is written that certain wicked men are "like the beasts that perish"; and in verse 14, it is said,—"Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." And so the righteous will have dominion over them, that is, over the wicked; for the righteous will rise in the first resurrection, at the last day; but the wicked will not be "visited" for "many days," or a "thousand years" afterwards. But why is this class of wicked men spoken of by the Psalmist as being "like the beasts that perish"? By reading verses 7, 8, and 15, of this Psalm, we find that "redemption" is the leading idea in David's mind while penning it. And so we read that, "they that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches; none of them can by any means redeem his brother," etc. But the Psalmist says in verse 15,—"God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." So we see that men who "trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches," thinking they can "redeem" themselves, or their brother, thereby; they are, in this life, "like the beasts that perish." As the Psalmist says, he is like the beasts that perish. Not shall be like; but is like the beasts now. That is, they make no more provision for their "redemption," or salvation, than a beast does; and hence, "like sheep they are laid in the grave"; having made no more provision for their "redemption" than a "sheep"! "They shall never see light" (verse 19.) What "light" shall they never see? In Psa. 56: 13, David says, "For thou hast delivered my soul from death." Hence, when he is thus delivered from death, he will "walk before God in the light of the living." But the men who live and die here like the beasts, and are laid in the grave like sheep, they never will, like David, walk before God in the "light" of the living. They will "never see" such a "light" as the Psalmist will, for they must be destroyed "both soul and body" in gehenna fire.

"CONSIDER ONE ANOTHER."

"Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works."—Heb. 10: 24.

No society is so dear as that of christians. The child of God loves the association of those who have received the spirit of adoption and are united by the same bonds of unity. True christians meet with different feelings than they receive from the world. They feel they have one interest, and that is centered in Christ, their living Head. They have but one great object, and that is to secure eternal life. And when united upon these principles they shine forth in the world as lights which glorify our heavenly Father.

Christian consideration is a very important duty presented by the apostle Paul. It seems to be the design of the apostle that the object for which we are to consider one another, is to do them good by "provoking unto love and good works." It conveys an idea of meditation on our part, in considering how we may increase their love, and promote greater usefulness of the church individually,—to increase the unity and strength of christians as a body. To accomplish what Paul has placed before us, requires many considerations on our part.

1. Trials are the common allotment of the saints, and are eminently worthy of consideration by every member of Christ's body. Often we find those who are laboring under trials so great that it seems they must fall. Satan surrounds them with all the combined powers of darkness; thorns fill their path, and feebleness their hearts. Ten thousand obstacles rise up to obstruct their pathway, and to deprive them of the immortal crown which awaits them at the end of their pilgrimage. Groaning "under the load," their burden often seems too heavy to bear; but still they keep pressing on. It is at this time, if ever, that the wearied and disheartened pilgrim needs the sympathy and consideration of those of like precious faith. Paul says, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law." Consider them. Make their case your own. Remove, if possible, the obstructions from their way. Take their burden upon your own shoulder; and by words of cheer and sympathy strengthen the feeble knees, and restore courage to the fainting heart. Such a course will glorify God. They will love you better, and God will seem nearer and dearer to you than ever before. Oh, that we might all learn the lesson of christian watchcare. Many are falling back—deserting the ranks for the lack of a helping hand, a word of cheer, when their trials and temptations are the severest, and they are fast drifting beyond the reach of mercy.

2. It is a christian duty to consider the saints in want. No christian consideration will cause love to well up in such a God-honoring degree from the poverty-stricken pilgrims, as to minister to their necessities. He that hath an abundance and seeth his brother lack shall not be held guiltless in the sight of God. "Harken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him."—James. 2: 5. And Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."—Matt. 25: 35–36. How heartily would we do any of these things unto Christ were he here; but by doing the same unto the least of his saints, he regards it as done unto himself. These are a few of the ways in which we are to consider one another. If any of us are at fault in this respect, let us remedy it immediately, that at last we may hear the heavenly and majestic voice of Jesus saying, "Well done."

3. Again, we are commanded to provoke unto good works. This has reference to a personal work, to which Christ doubtless referred when he said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5: 16. Thus by good works are we to lead men to glorify God. Says James, "If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, ye do well." To fulfill the royal law, our own works must be good. Therefore our good works must consist in obedience to God, and by keeping the law of God we shall provoke others to good works. We can not evade the divine test. "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." His commandments apply to our conduct in all circumstances of life. Oh that christians might come up to the divine standard as given by inspiration; then indeed could they be shining lights in the world, to the glory of God. Then would the power of the gospel be felt in society, in rebuking sin, and bringing sinners to Christ. Wm. H. Spencer.

LOSING THE LIGHT.

It is surprising to see how those once strong in the gospel faith and hope, have lost the light they once had, by neglecting or rejecting the increased light, or developments of light in these last days. Last evening I attended a meeting where there is some revival interest, and heard a minister preach, with whom I was formerly acquainted, and who was an able preacher. His text was in 1 Pet. 1: 3.—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." The rest of the passage was not read nor referred to at all. The cause of this "lively hope" or "hope of life," (Whiting) was not mentioned, nor the things hoped for. The speaker told us that the gospel hope was "blessed;" that it was "not the result of a theory;" that it was produced, "begotten in the heart by the Holy Spirit," and led us to look for heaven, for existence beyond this life. He said several very good things, but entirely overlooked the best thing the text taught.

He told us the gospel hope was unlike the dead or inactive hope of Universalists; unlike the gloomy hope of those who believed the soul slept after death to an inconceivable length of time, till the resurrection; but it was a "lively hope," looking to immediate happiness after death. That the soul was immortal from our birth and could not be acted upon by death as some thought. Our readers, I trust, enjoy a better hope than this; surely the gospel presents one.

SEMERON.

Mr. Editor:—I observe in your No. of the 17th that a correspondent informs your readers that "semeron," the word rendered "to-day," in Luke 23: 43, is also rendered "day," "a day," "this day" (Heb. 4th chap.); and in John 20: 19, it is rendered "same day." Allow me to correct the impression by stating, that the word semeron occurs only twice in the 4th Heb., both in the 7th verse, and is properly rendered to-day in both instances. It occurs nowhere else in that chapter. Also, in John 20: 19, it is rendered "same day," says your correspondent; and this is just as much a mistake. For there it does not occur at all.

Yours truly, George Heaton.

MY PILGRIM NOTES.

In our las: we parted with our readers after a tedious journey through snow-drifts from Danville to Melbourne, in Canada. There is a great body of snow in the Queen's dominions at present, but the weather has been mild during our stay. Not a single train of cars passed over the Grand Trunk R. R. yesterday (Feb. 15th.) The air in Canada is pure and bracing, and we find much better specimens of health here than in the States. Walking on snow-shoes is a very common thing. Ideeed, one is not fitted for a Canada winter without them. Ladies use them too. Snow-shoe races are frequent. We like Canada; but for a permanent home, we much prefer New England to any other portion of country we have ever seen. It is well that all do not prefer the same place.

Our meetings in Melbourne were seasons of refreshing. Some requested prayers, and the children of the Lord were quickened in his service. There are some true souls in M. and vicinity, and they feel like making a new effort to sustain the cause of the Lord.

We departed from there Wednesday evening, Feb. 17th, and on our way had a very interesting conversation with an editor, who is an intelligent man, and a close observer of the state of things in society. We found he had lost confidence in the popular theology and religion of the day. When we had presented the reasons of our hope, he was delighted with their simplicity, and thought if all denominations would take the Bible as it reads, then they would think alike on doctrinal points, instead of being divided into so many sects, as we now see them. This man is a type of a large class of thinking men, who are saddened at the low state of religious matters. They have been to the various churches; but, like Noah's dove, they can find no rest to their souls. They see so much worldliness, and so little vital godliness, that they have come to the conclusion that they are about as well off as the mass of professors. They do not feel safe; but they see nothing in which they can put confidence; consequently they turn away to doubt the reality of the christian religion, because its professors live so poorly. We are fully satisfied that unless the standard of religion is elevated above its present sinking condition, but few of the thinking men among the unconverted will be reached. They may go to the meetings, and help support them; but they have but small confidence in the managers.

What can be done? Shall those who see the perils of these last days hold their peace? Is it safe to do so? The praise of men may be secured for a little while, but how will it be in the judgment? Will they praise us then for being silent at the approach of danger? Will the Lord be pleased with those who refuse to sound the alarm, because it might make them unpopular? Who will advocate such a course?

BRYANT'S POND. We spent Thursday evening, Feb. 18th, at Bryant's Pond, and had a good meeting in the Baptist meeting-house, which was kindly offered us. A large audience was present, notwithstanding the bad traveling. The Lord has some living children in that place, who love the "blessed hope." Three rose for prayers.

A special interest is being awakened in a place called Pinhook, about two miles from Bryant's Pond. Several have been converted and others are seeking the Lord. Sr. Sanders is laboring three at present. The prospect is good. She was a preacher among the Methodists, but is now associated with those who are looking for the coming of Jesus to raise the dead. She resides in Norway, Me. The hour has come when every one who sees the truth should help spread it in some way. It will not pay to be an idler in the vineyard of the Lord. None but the laborers can hope for the reward promised. The reward is great—eternal life. Let us all secure it. It must be sought "by patient continuance in well-doing."

In consequence of deep snow, and accidents, we were unable to reach our appointment at Portland on Friday evening. Our rule is never to disappoint an audience, if it is in our power to be present. After doing the best we could, we only arrived as far as Mechanic Falls, where we received a hearty welcome from Bro. Jared Whitman, one of the faithful watchmen upon Zion's walls.

We learned there is considerable interest in that place on theological matters. Different ministers have been preaching against the views of other denominations; and we have taken our share of the opposition. This only prepares the way for the truth to shine the brighter when presented.

Saturday and Sabbath, Feb. 20th and 21st, we spent at Biddeford, Me., and had a very interesting time. The church have built a convenient meeting-house of good size, which was much crowded with a very attentive audience. Our conference meetings were good. The Biddeford church has enjoyed a high degree of prosperity under the faithful labors of our dear Bro. W. H. Mitchell, and others. We have rarely been where the people seem more anxious to hear about the blessed hope.

In all places where we have been, there seems to be more than a usual desire to hear the reasons of our hope. We are satisfied that the time has come to make an extra effort to spread the light, because the people have a desire to hear. Let us labor in a manner worthy of the noble cause in which we are engaged. We must be earnest, bold, yet meek; persevering, unyielding, but not dogmatic; ready at all times and in all places to give "a reason of the hope that is in" us, "with meekness and fear."

We arrived at home Monday, Feb. 22nd, after traveling three thousand one hundred and sixty-three miles, since Dec. 31st, 1868. We were gone fifty-three days, preached fifty-three sermons, and spent eight evenings in discussion. We feel as fresh as ever, and happy in the Lord. We found all well as usual at the office, and prospering in the Lord. Have we not much reason to give thanks and praise to the dear Savior for his strength and protecting care?

"O who's like my Savior?"

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-ONE NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN FEB.

Some of our brethren and sisters have responded nobly to the call for new subscribers, and we have entered on our list one hundred and sixty-one names during the month. Who will make a little effort to get one, two, or five persons to take the Crisis? A little effort may accomplish great good.

☞ INSTRUCTION.

Brethren sending appointments for the Crisis will please send on a separate slip from other business matters, and will write them after the following form, and save very much trouble:—

Boston, Mass., (Lowell St. Chapel), Sabbath, March 7th.

Densmore Hill, Vt., Sabbath, March 14th.

Concord, N. H., (Centre St.), Sabbath, March 14th.

Or, Concord, N. H., (Bethel), Sabbath, March 14th.

Write the town first, then the place in the town, then the time, and then it is ready for the compositor without altering or copying.

COMPLAINTS.

We frequently receive letters making complaints because we do not know the address of our old subscribers. Those who think we can remember the P. O. address of eight or nine thousand subscribers must have a high opinion of our memory. The following is a sample of the complaints:

"BRO. GRANT:—Dear Sir.—This will inform you that on the 23d of Nov. I sent you a letter containing two dollars and fifty cents, to pay for the Crisis another year. You have not given me credit for it, but in your paper of Dec. 9th you say in your address to correspondents, ——— sends $2.50 for Crisis, and request my address. This looks strange to me, as you have mailed my paper to my regular address these many years, and I have not altered my place of residence. Please explain."

WELL DONE.

BRO. GRANT:—A few weeks ago I took up the Crisis, and almost the first thing my eye rested upon was a piece written by C. Colegrove, urging all readers of the Crisis to get one or more new subscribers. The thought struck me that I might do something for our Lord and Master in that way; and by his help I have succeeded in getting four. Enclosed I send you the money and names.

FROM A NEW SUBSCRIBER OF THE Crisis.
Rochester.

This "new subscriber" has done nobly. Will not others copy his example? A little effort now would accomplish much good. The people are anxious to read the very things we are publishing; but they need some one to introduce the subject to them. Will you do it? Infidelity is setting in on every side, like a mighty flood; let us lift up a standard against the march of Satan.

DANSVILLE DISCUSSION.

We learn that the late discussion at Dansville, N. Y., has awakened much interest in the study of t.e Bible; and that the candid, thinking men who attended, are satisfied that our position is sustained by the Scriptures.

We clipped the following from the Syracuse Journal of Fpb. 12th:

"Mr. E. V. Wilson, of Chicago, has just closed a lengthy discussion with Elder Grant, at Dansville, N. Y., upon the following subject:—

Resolved, That the Bible—King James' version—sustains the teachings and phases of modern Spiritualism.

Elder Grant was made to admit on the stand, publicly, as follows:—'If I am compelled to confine myself to the Bible as authority, then I may as well close the discussion at once!'

The Elder believes the Bible, and can't disprove Spiritualism by the Bible. Tight place, Elder."

"To the Editor of the Syracuse Journal:—In the Journal of Feb. 12th, I find the following:—'Elder Grant was made to admit on the stand, publicly, as follows:—"If I am compelled to confine myself to the Bible as authority, then I may as well close the discussion at once."'

"Please allow me, sir, to make a correction. When I attempted to explain some passages of Scripture, by giving the meaning of the original terms, Mr. Wilson objected, and said I must confine myself to King James' version of the Bible. To which I replied, if we had nothing to do but read the Bible, we might as well close the discussion at once; meaning by my remark, that simply reading the Bible, without remarks upon its connection with other things involved in the subject of debate, would not be a proper discussion. But I did not admit for one moment then, nor do I now, that the Bible contains one word in favor of modern Spiritualism, and stand ready at any time to meet any respectable defender of Spiritualism, and endeavor to show that the Bible—'King James' version'—is utterly opposed to it in all its features."

NATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

A National S. S. Convention is appointed to meet at Newark, N. J., Wednesday April 28th, 1869. The following is an extract from the "call:"—

"It is intended that it shall be a mass convention, open alike to all who come, but every State Convention by its Executive Committee is invited to send a delegation not to exceed twice the representation of the State in both houses of Congress.

These delegates will probably hold a business session of representatives at some time during the sitting of the convention.

Should the convention prove exceedingly large, the citizens of Newark cannot be held responsible for the entertainment of guests beyond the limits of hospitality. Those who attend, therefore, cannot certainly count upon entertainment unless they have previously notified the local committee through Samuel W. Clark, of Newark, and received assurance that all the places for entertainment are not yet occupied. It is not expected, however, that the convention will be too large for entertainment, and it is particularly desired that the active promoters of this work in all sections of the nation shall exert themselves to be present."

MEETINGS IN THE THEATRE.—We hear a good report from Bro. John G. Hook's meeting yesterday, Feb. 28th, in the Theatre Comique, Boston. He is to be there again next Sabbath, March 7th. Pray for him.

BEST FILTERS.—Those who wish for a good filter, will do well to get the one manufactured by Kedzie and Bunnel, 9 Exchange St., Rochester, N. Y. No one should use hard water, if they wish to feel well. It makes a deposite in the system, that often produces very sad results. We use at home none but filtered rain water. But if not filtered, we should use it instead of hard water. It is one of the best remedies for the gravel, which is a disease caused by the use of hard water.

THE BEE-KEEPER'S JOURNAL AND AGRICULTURAL REPOSITORY.—We have received the first two numbers of the "Bee-keeper's Journal and Agricultural Repository," and are delighted with the ability, taste and skill displayed in its execution, and the matter contained in its columns. It is published monthly, at Nevada, Ohio, by H. A. King & Co, and edited by Bro. King and Ellen S. Tupper. It is a curiosity to see the Editor handle his bees. He is truly a King among them. Those who keep bees, and are interested in agricultural matters, we think will get their money's worth, if they take the "Bee-Keeper's Journal." Price $1.00 a year in advance.

APPLES OF GOLD.—Bro. D. F. Newton, of New York, is about to issue a new volume, entitled "Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver." Bro. Newton never publishes dry matter. There is marrow and fatness in his writings, because he has it in his heart. The work will contain between 400 and 500 pages, illustrated with more than one hundred engravings. Price in cloth $1.50; gilt, $200. Postage 20cts. Address D. F. Newton, 303 West 20th St., New York.

A VALUABLE BOOK.—J. C. Jackson, physician-in-chief at "Our Home on the Hill-side," has just issued a valuable work, entitled "How to treat the Sick without Medicine." This is just what every family needs. It is an octavo volume of 537 pp., containing a likeness of Dr. Jackson, and another of "Our Home on the Hill-side." Price of the book by mail $3.25. Address Austin, Jackson & Co., Dansville, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN, published by Bro. H. L. Hastings, at No. 19 Lindall St., Boston, is an eight-page monthly religious and family paper, containing incidents, records of providences, sketches, music, poetry, true stories, pictures, reading for young and old, saint and sinner. No sectarianism, controversy, politics, puffs, pills, or patent medicines. 60 cts. a year; ten copies for $5.00. For Sunday Schools, ten copies, $4.00. Address H. L. Hastings, Scriptural Tract Repository, 19 Lindall St., Boston, Mass.

BRO. THO. H. JONES, the colored preacher, wishes to say that his P. O. address is New Bedford, Mass. He has been laboring some in Maine during the winter. Many will recollect seeing him at our last National Campmeeting, at Springfield.

A RARE PICTURE.

The only true likeness of our Savior, taken from one cut in an Emerald by command of Tiberius Cæsar, and which was given from the Treasury of Constantinople, by the Emperor of the Turks, to Pope Innocent VIII., for the redemption of his brother then a captive to the Christians.

The following extract, in proof of the authenticity of the above portrait, is translated from the Latin contemporary Historians of the period:—

"News to the Senate of Rome, concerning Jesus Christ, in the days of Tiberius Cæsar the Emperor, as governors of sundry provinces under the Senate and people of Rome, used to advertise the Senate of such news as chanced in diverse countries.

Publius Lentules, being at that time president in Judea, wrote an epistle to the Senate and people of Rome, the words whereof were these:—

'There appeared in these our days a man of great virtue, named Jesus Christ, who is yet living amongst us, and of the Gentiles is accepted for a Prophet of truth; but his own disciples called him the Son of God. He raiseth the dead, and cureth all manner of diseases. A man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with a very reverend countenance, such as the beholders may both love and fear; his hair of the color of filbert, full ripe, and plain almost down to his ears; but from the ears downward somewhat curled, and more orient of color, waving on his shoulders. In the midst of his head goeth a seam or partition of his hair, after the manner of the Nazarites; his forehead very plain and smooth; his face without spot or wrinkle, beatified with a comely red; his nose and mouth so formed as nothing can be reprehended; his beard somewhat thick, agreeable in color to the hair of his head, not of any great length, in the midst of an innocent and mature look; his eyes grey, clear and quick. In reproving he is terrible; in admonishing, courteous and fair-spoken; pleasant in speech, mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered that any have seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep. In proportion of body, well-shaped and straight; his hands and arms right, and delectable to behold; in speaking very temperate, modest and wise. A man of singular beauty surpassing the children of men.'"

Whether this be indeed, as stated, and generally believed a true picture of our Savior or not, it is really valuable from the fact that it is a fac simile of a very ancient engraving. If any wish this photograph—album size—they can obtain it it by sending to Sr. M. D. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me. Price 25cts.

There is remaining unpaid on the subscription papers of 1867 and 1868, more than two hundred dollars, which subscriptions, if paid, would make up in full the present deficit, and leave us free from debt. Will not those, whose subscriptions remain unpaid, forward the same to the Treasurer as soon as possible, and thus enable the Committee to go forward, the Lord willing, with arrangements for the present year, without any encumbrance in the shape of back debts resting upon them?

Brethren and sisters, we have great reason to be thankful to our heavenly Father, in that we have a camp-ground so pleasant and well arranged, supplied with good water, commodious buildings, easy, comfortable seats, and with the various conveniences for cooking: with a large supply of crockery, and the necessary articles to carry forward so large a meeting. The Committee are grateful for the prompt manner in which you have responded to their calls, and for the cordial and ready support you have always yielded them: and also to the Boston and Albany, Conn. River, and the Hartford and New Haven R. R. Companies for their gift of eight hundred dollars, and for favors to the Committee which have been promptly granted.

At a meeting of the brethren and sisters, held at the preachers' stand, Bro. H. H. Dickenson, from the Committee appointed by the A. C. Association to nominate a Campmeeting Committee for the ensuing year, offered the following resolution, which was passed unanimously:—

"Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be, and they are, hereby tendered to the Campmeeting Committee for the able and efficient manner in which they have performed their duties for the past year, and their action meets our hearty approval."

Bro. Dickenson submitted the following names for the Committee for the present year:—

S. G. MATHEWSON,
GEO. T. ADAMS,
HIRAM MUNGER,
J. HEMENWAY,
R. E. LADD,
D. MATHEWSON,
W. B. DODGE.

Which report was accepted and adopted unanimously.

GEO. T. ADAMS,

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE CAUSE OF GOD.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Permit me to say to you that the A. A. Missionary Society is greatly in need of funds at the present time, to meet its pressing wants; not to pay "salaried officers," for let me tell you, as a member of the "Board" from the organization of the Society to the present time, so far as receiving any compensation for services rendered, I have not; but on the contrary, have paid out of my own pocket my expenses in attending the meetings of the Board, besides other incidental expenses as Secratary; and this is not all, as my fellow members can bear me witness. This is done cheerfully as unto the Lord, whose I am, and whom I serve. All the funds of the Society sent in from time to time are duely credited from week to week, so that all may know how much is received, and used in the mission cause, and any one may know by applying to the Treasurer how every cent is appropriated, for he keeps a strict account, and all appropriations are by the direction of the Board.

And now, brethren, if you have confidence in us, as your "servants for Jesus' sake," who expect to give an account of our stewardship with you at his coming, act so as to please your Master and ours, and you will hear from his lips in the day of his coming, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

We might say many things in reference to the various fields and openings for missionary work; but will simply say the field is large, the calls are many and urgent; the time is short, the judgment is near, and millions are perishing whose wants must soon be met, or it will be too late.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM, Sec. of the Board.

A barrel of clothing and many good things from Carver, Ms., sent by old and tried friends. Savilla Case, Canton, Ct., $2.00.

And thus the Lord gives when we give. When we open our hands, he opens his. As freely as we receive, so freely we give. It is more blessed here to give than to receive. He that giveth to these poor, lends to the Lord.

Time, money, mind, health, strength and life, are all given here; and in return we get clothing, shelter, food, peace, joy, and souls for Christ. Enough, enough, we cry; no more we desire. All is for Christ here; labor unremitting, persecution unceasing; but God's smile and blessing continually. We envy not the rich, we scorn not the poor. We visit the sick and perishing in cellar, garret, and cabin. We turn away from none who need our help; nor despise any who seek our care and protection. To the poorest of the poor we preach the gospel free, and teach the most debased and ignorant all that they can learn. The Bible is our watch-word, and we exhort all to come and learn what it teaches and obey its precepts. We are crying everywhere, the judgment! prepare to meet your God!

The winter here, thus far, has been very favorable for the poor and destitute; nor has there been so much sickness as there would have been had the weather been cold and wet like that of last winter. I have always dreaded here the coming on of winter. This people are so wholly unprepared for it, that when it does come, if at all severe, they suffer and perish in spite of all that we can do for them. It is hard to witness the sufferings of the brute world, and see them die for want of shelter and care; but it is harder to see human beings suffer and perish for lack of these things. How many sad scenes have we witnessed here, caused by poverty alone. Much of the sickness here comes through the lack of the necessaries of life; and many die for want of proper shelter, food and clothing.

God has indeed been merciful in giving us so dry and mild a winter. None of our flock have died, though some have been very sick. Bro. Wilkins is the only one we have been called to follow to the grave since the death of Sr. Northrup, with the exception of one of our Sabbath School scholars, who died last fall.

Never did I have greater cause for gratitude to God than during the past few months. His blessing has indeed been bestowed in every way upon us here. The greatest blessing has been that of the Holy Spirit, convicting this people of the truth of the gospel which we preach, and bringing sinners to repentance. Blessed indeed is it to labor when we can see daily the fruits of our toil. And then, God has been good in preserving my dear family far away, and supplying them with the comforts and necessaries of life. Also in raising up friends to the mission and sending through them so much that was needed, and without which we should not have been able to have prosecuted our work here. Praise his holy name for all, and thanks to those who have obeyed the divine injunction to "give, hoping for nothing." I. I. LESLIE.

THEATRE COMIQUE SUNDAY EVENING.

The attendance was very good, the body of the Theatre being well filled, with a few in the gallery. The proceedings were opened with the hymn,—

"Nearer, my God, to thee," followed by prayer. The text preached from was Luke 2: 34, "Behold this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign (or miracle) which shall be spoken against."

The speaker dwelt some time on the faith of Simeon, his belief in the fulfillment of God's promise, and his eventually seeing the fulfillment of that promise; spoke of Christ as a miracle,—his miraculous birth and boyhood; his pure and blameless life. He was a miracle because he was God and man,—God his Father, Mary his mother. Spoke of Simeon's prophecy—he was set for the fall and rising of many. That prophecy was fulfilled. The Jews rejected him. They expected him to come as a mighty king, to restore the kingdom to Israel. He came poor, meek, and lowly, born in a stable. The pride of the Jews would not suffer them to acknowledge him. He was, however, acknowledged by God. John knew him when he said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Jesus taught the gospel of the kingdom; called the poor, illiterate fishermen to join with him in the great work. They left their avocations and joined themselves unto him; preached only to Israel. The proud, aristocratic Jews repudiated him. "He came to his own, and his own received him not." He condemned their covetousness, their hypocrisy, their pride and egotism; associated with publicans and sinners; made friends of the poor, the despised, and the outcast. His great truths cut them to the heart. He exposed their vices, and unveiled their deceit. The Jews did not like truth any more than the people of the present day like it; so they took counsel together that they might kill him.

Christ was unpopular amongst the rich, as every vindicator of truth is. Christ is not popular to-day. Some say he was a very good medium, but we have better now; others, that he was an impostor; some, an illegitimate child; some, a very good man, the embodiment of moral perfection. "What saith the Scripture?" He was "the Son of God," "the Prince of peace." Angels heralded him at his birth; the shepherds of Bethlehem heard the song which proclaimed his divinity. They crucified him, saying, "His blood be on us and on our children." He rose again on the third day, another proof of his divinity; triumphed over death. He bade Mary inform his disciples, and Peter. Peter had denied him. Peter might think himself cast off, lost: Jesus proclaimed his forgiveness in those words, "and Peter"; encouragement for backsliders. He is willing to forgive all; none may fear. The same gospel is preached to-day that was preached then. He "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Jesus ascends to his Father; "a cloud received him from their sight"; another proof of his divinity.

He sent the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, to cheer the hearts of his people, to enable them to bear up against all trials and temptations. On the day of Pentecost, Peter spoke to the Jews of their having crucified the Lord of glory. Three thousand were converted, and subsequently five thousand more were added to the church. Thus was Simeon's prophecy literally fulfilled—He "is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel." He was a miracle as shown by his death and resurrection. A miracle, because he had the power to forgive sin. That power is the same. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Come, backslider; come, cold-hearted professor; come, sinner; come all, and find peace through him who was crucified.

For the World's Crisis.

A WELCOME MESSENGER.

For the past six or eight years, the Crisis has been a welcome messenger to myself and family; and as it gives me pleasure to read the letters in it from friends that I have been acquainted with in days that are past, I thought they might like to read a short letter from myself. It is a blessed thought that if we are faithful to God a little while, we shall meet where friends will part no more; and those that sleep in Jesus will come forth to join that happy throng. What a happy meeting that will be. We enjoy the society of friends here. We meet and part with them, perhaps never to meet again in this world; but if faithful to God, we shall meet, to part no more while endless ages roll.

I often look back to the many precious seasons that I have enjoyed with the friends in the North Canton Conn., and wish that I could meet them again; but if I should not meet them any more on this sin-cursed earth, I hope to in the new earth. We have no preaching here about the blessed hope, and but very little of any kind. We have prayer-meetings. A few Methodists and a few who are looking for the coming of Jesus, join together. The Lord is at work in the hearts of the people. Oh, that the Lord would send some one this way to preach the gospel to this people. C. P. FAIRCHILD.

Fish Creek, Wis.

BRO. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN writes:—"We are having some of the best meetings ever held among our people here in Webster. Pray for us. We want, and need, and must have victory in the name of the Lord. And to him alone be all the glory. Amen."

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

I wish to acknowledge the following receipts since publishing the notice in the Crisis of the loss of my horse; with my sincere thanks to my heavenly Father, as also to those who have showed such substantial sympathy. Methinks I can hear Jesus say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

A STRANGE THING.

I have a check for ten dollars, sent to me from Cooperstown, for one of the Prussian instruments, without telling where to send it. How can people be so careless? I can't send the instrument, nor write to the brother or friend. The envelope don't tell, the man don't tell, and I can't tell; and must keep the money, as I have disposed of the check for cash. If any of the readers of the Crisis know anything about it, please inform me.

ADMONITION.

A good Methodist Bro. in the city of A was presented with one of I. K. Lombard's poems, published by Bro. I. C. Wellcome. He obtained a lot, and has been busy in presenting them to his minister, class-leaders, and members. Now is the time to distribute them. Send to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Maine.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I have received a few packages of tracts since yours came to hand; some by express, and some through the post-office. The brethren will please send all small packages through the P. O. I received by express one lb. and twelve ounces of tracts; the charges on them being $1.50. By the P. O., it would not have been half so much. They charge the same for all packages weighing less than five lbs. But, it is cheaper to send large packages by express.

I have been much confined to my room for several days. I have a dreadful cold and cough, but pass the time in reading my Bible and the many good tracts the brethren and sisters have sent me. I have received $6.00, besides what Bro. Baker sent me. May God bless the donors. Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Roll on, sweet moments, roll on, and bring the happy time when God's people may be redeemed from mortal to immortal glories, from corruption to incorruption. Yours in much love,

J. B. WADSWORTH.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 20th, 1868.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—As I had written so often and so much for the Crisis, I thought perhaps I might be considered as infringing on the rights of others, which is the reason of my silence so long. I will be as short as possible now. Last Thursday morning, at half-past four o'clock, Bro. Conolly and wife, and Bro. Woods and wife, of Favil, Mass., and Bro. Williams of this place, started for Suwannee Shoals, to hold a three days' meeting in the new Advent church, which was nearly completed. The house is ten miles from Lake City, on the Lake City road, which runs up on the east side of the Suwannee river. The weather was like May in the North. People were there from eighteen or twenty miles around; some from Georgia, and some from Lake City. One young man who was traveling heard of it, and stopped over to hear for himself if it could be true what he had heard twenty-five miles off. The house was filled, and it was delightful to behold the interest and attention. Some that had talked against us at first, had made up their minds to come to that meeting and hear for themselves.

The church numbers over fifty, and some are added almost every meeting. We had a blessed good time. I left one appointment seven miles beyond there, and one four miles this side, by request of those that reside there. Bro. Thomas Green, who had been a Baptist missionary preacher, has commenced preaching the Bible doctrine in that surrounding country with good success. He baptized ten in one place. All of the Baptist church but three, I believe, joined the covenant. He is a worthy brother, rather diffident, but reliable, and has the confidence of the people. He was sent to the Legislature, but thinks of resigning. Pray for us. Yours in hope,

P. A. SMITH.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 23d, 1868.

From Bro. Bendixon.

BRO. GRANT:—I have not been well for some time; not that any sickness has broken me down, but grief and sorrow for my Master's cause. They have left me alone, and all the young converts. The older professors have been at work, and are now, to frighten the poor souls, telling them not to go to me, nor to speak with me at all. O Bro., how hard it is. It makes my heart weep; but still it is a comfort to me that my gracious Lord knows all about it. It is his cause, and work, and truth; and as I have tried to do his will, I shall leave the result with him. I am glad that many a soul has heard and obeyed the gospel message, and started for the kingdom. May the Lord keep them to the end.

You see, Bro., I am left alone, and the most of what I hear is evil speaking, saying that I am a false teacher, and more like things. But still, I am glad I have made a stir in the camp, and showed the enemy the broad side; and let me tell you, he don't like to meet me in th open field. I have let the truth fly as shells in among the Devil's hosts, and both edges of the sword have been used as the Lord God has put strength in my arm.

God bless you for that dear and welcome paper, the Crisis. If I did not have that, I should feel myself an entire stranger on earth. I am so glad when I get it. It makes my heart rejoice when I see it. I am not alone in this wicked world to suffer for our dear Savior and his truth. O Bro., is it not a wicked world? Is it not time for our Master to come? I am sighing in my heart, Come, Lord, and come quickly. But I am trying to be patient, always abounding in the good work of the Lord. In his own good time he will come, and then we shall be delivered from his enemies.

I have had a letter from Hull, from that Bro. I met with on my return home. He informs me there is a stir there since I left. They have hired a large room, where they are proclaiming the Lord's coming; and he says the consequence is, the devil has set all his agents to work against the truth. He tells me that the immortality of the soul is becoming more and more an absurdity since I left them, and he rejoices in all the beautiful truths of the Bible. He prizes the Crisis very much (I have sent him some since my arrival), and tells me he has sent them again to London, to one Mr. Bell, LL.D., who is proclaiming the speedy coming of Christ on earth. I pray the Lord to bless these few papers throughout England, that they may be a means to lead many into the truth as it is in the Bible. He wishes me to come over there. If I had the means, I would start for Hull as soon as possible, and I think I shall be on my way the first of January. I trust the Lord will open the way. There are many now all around who talk of the Lord's coming. This precious truth works like leaven; still in the higher societies they are sleeping infidels, deists, or Universalists,—of the latter the ministry almost consist. It looks black. The tares are almost too thick to leave room for any wheat to grow. God in mercy help.

I am looking to the East. The storm seems to gather slowly, but heavily, for the great day of God Almighty. I believe it is not far distant. Praise the Lord. While it gathers blackness in the East, I am looking right overhead, where I behold the dazzling sight of a returning King in glory, coming to take his throne and kingdom.

I trust I shall soon be in America again, if the Lord will. I long for the sweet fellowship that you enjoy there. Farewell, Brn. and Srs.; don't forget us in your prayers; and when the struggle is over, the victory is ours, if we prove faithful. Your Bro., in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes,

O. Bendixon.

Drobak, Norway, Dec. 12th, 1868.

From Bro. S. M. Tatro.

Bro. Grant:—With a great deal of comfort and pleasure in the good religion of our blessed Lord, which I feel to-day, I thought perhaps it would not only interest you, but the dear saints also, to read a short history of the Lord's dealings with us in this place. In 1858 the good Lord poured out his Holy Spirit on the people, and sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, the dear saints comforted, and we soon found ourselves with a little church of sixty or seventy members. For some time the candle of the Lord shone in our midst; but Satan, as is his wont to do, soon began to cause divisions, and of course backslidings amongst us, and we found ourselves after a time torn and scattered like sheep on a mountain in a cloudy day. But God has had a few here that continued to hold on to him, and pray day and night that he would revive his work; but owing to our divided state, and our great lack of faith, we received no answer to our prayers, until a short time ago, when God—Glory be to his holy name! gave us a spirit of confession and forgiveness.

We commenced having weekly prayer meetings, and the Lord owned and blessed wonderfully, and we then felt that it was time to work for sinners. To this end we determined in the name and strength of Israel's God we would make some extra efforts to get sinners converted, and accordingly secured the labors of Bro. B. Hitchcock and others. As the result, backsliders have been reclaimed, and sinners converted. Eld. Hitchcock has been with us through the last week and over Sunday, and we have organized a good and living little church, and every thing looks bright and prosperous.

Sunday was a very precious day to all the dear saints here; after the morning services we had a love-feast, and it was most blessed, I can assure you; all seemed to be in the Spirit on the Lord's day; and after the close of the afternoon service we came around the table of the Lord to commemorate his death and sufferings, and this also was a season which will not be forgotten by many for a long time to come. After this several joined our little church, such as we trust will be saved, and others are coming. Glory to God for the prospect! The church voted to continue the meeting through this week and over next Sunday, as the interest demands it. My dear companion and I have not been able to attend these meetings much. We have both been confined to the house by sickness, but we have stayed at home and prayed, and God has answered. Oh how I long for our dear Lord to come and put an end to sin and suffering.

I thank God that every thing looks now as if our dear Lord would not delay his coming much longer, and my poor heart cries out with good old Bro. John, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." But, dear pilgrims, we must be waiting, watching, praying, and be good children till He comes, then how sweet will be that blessed voice, as we hear it sounding through the air, Children, your sorrows are all gone; your sufferings are all over; now come home. O blessed Jesus, that is just like thee, and we will be good.

Waiting for redemption,

Samuel M. Tatro.

Collinsville, Ct., Jan. 11th, 1869.

From Bro. I. Allen.

Bro. Grant:—We are having a good meeting at Honeoye, and the Lord is doing a great work. Some twenty, or more, have set out for the kingdom, and ten or twelve of the number are those who have never made a profession of religion before. The balance are backsliders, who have been reclaimed. It was a source of rejoicing to see them come back to Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare. Truly there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than the ninety and nine that need no repentance. Bro. Wm. Fenn has been the instrument in the hands of the Lord, to bring this great blessing to the church. He was with us two weeks, including two Sundays. The brethren from Hemlock Lake, and from Canadice, rendered essential aid both by their prompt attention and their means, to sustain the cause of God. The meeting still continues, and the last evening that Eld. Fenn was with us, two men rose for prayers. We intend to continue the meeting in the name of the Lord, just as long as it will be profitable. Bro. S. W. Thurbur is to be with us this week, also Bro. W. Hobbs, to preach the word.

Brethren and sisters of the one household of faith, scattered abroad, pray for Honeoye, that many more may be gathered and saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. I. Allen.

Honeoye, N. Y., Feb. 16th, 1869.

From Bro. G. A. Streeter.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—Thinking you are interested in the cause of our dearly beloved Lord and Master, I would say in short, that I have spent ten days in No. Adams, Mass., and preached thirteen discourses, to the glory of God, I trust. One was happily converted to God, and five reclaimed and came back rejoicing in the blessed hope. The church in A. is rising. They have suffered much, but not in vain, I trust. The Lord is still good, real good; praise his holy name.

Your Bro. in Christ,

North Dana, Mass. G. A. Streeter.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. S. M. Head, Dansville, N. Y., Feb. 6th, writes:—"I do want to tell you what the Lord is doing for me. I seem to have had a new conversion within the last fortnight. I do bless God that he ever sent you to Dansville; that he went before you and prepared my heart to receive the truth. The Bible is a new book to me. O, how I do love God's word. Precious truth, I press it to my heart, and feel to cling to it as I would to a rock when beneath me was a yawning chasm, knowing that if I let go my hold, it would be my sure destruction. It is my earnest desire to 'walk in the light,' and lead others to walk in it I do want to be more like Jesus.

Thursday evening Father's children met to pray. We had a precious season. The Spirit of God was with us. I was carried back to the time when I was converted in childhood in the M. E. church. O, how happy I am. Bless the Lord. May we meet in the soon coming kingdom."

Bro. J. W. Taylor, Little Marsh, Pa., Feb. 19th, writes:—"I have just returned from visiting the church at Wilmot settlement, Brown Co., N. Y., where I spent two Sabbaths, holding meeting each evening through the week. The first quarterly meeting was held Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 13th and 14th. It was a refreshing season. Our covenant meeting Saturday afternoon was indeed a most glorious one. Nearly all that were there considered it the best they ever attended. Their next quarterly meeting will be held (D. V.) the first Saturday and Sunday in May.

This church is the result of the faithful labors of Bro. C. F. Sweet; and although they are but few in number, and have been persecuted much, they have succeeded in getting up a neat little chapel, and the prejudice which once existed seems to be considerably removed. While at this meeting, we met for the first time Bro. and Sr. Stephen Hitchcock, of Kirkwood, who are looking for the salvation of souls. The Lord has few more devoted children they."

Bro. T. E. Parker, Washington, D. C., Feb. 6th, writes:—"When you was here in the spring of 1867, I heard some of your sermons, and got some of your pamphlets, which I have carefully examined in comparison with the Bible, and find that your doctrine does away with contradictive passages in the Scriptures, and makes them harmonize from the first chapter of Genesis to the last chapter in Revelation; which I was always convinced should be done; but was unable to do until I read your explanations."

Bro. J. H. Dadman, Franklin, N. H., Feb. 22nd, writes:—"I am glad to say that, after being hedged in from laboring in the field for five or six months, by sickness and incidental circumstances, I am again in the by-ways and hedges, by the blessing of the good Lord, doing my little, while others are doing much in the cause; for all of which I feel thankful to God."

Bro. W. G. Ruggles, Worcester, Mass., Feb. 21st, writes:—"Bro. A. A. Phelps is laboring with the church in this place, and his earnest, faithful, and pointed preaching has endeared him to many hearts; and we can but wish that in the good providence of God he may see his way opened for future labor among us as a people. We need his labors in all our New England churches. Brethren, help him after a godly sort."

SHOCKING DELUSIONS.

Those who have encountered the mischievous delusion of free-loveism, or have attempted to convince its adherents of their folly and wickedness, can sympathize with a colporteur at the west in his futile efforts to bring them to the truth. After enumerating the different classes of people among whom he has labored, he says:—

But another and far less hopeful class has been extensively visited, who entertain, hug, and cherish that error of all errors, and last great delusion of the Devil, free-love and modern Spiritualism. Some of these I find in almost every town I visit. Errorists of every other kind, Romanists, infidels, and skeptics, I can meet on some ground with some reasonable hope of success. But these silly people give small ground of hope. They bid me good morning with a grin, look at my books with a grin, listen to my remarks and answer my questions with a grin, and bid me good-by with the same senseless grin. It seems to be agreed by them to meet all approaches on the subject of religion in this way, for even the children understand and practice it when their parents are not present. If any colporteur has been successful with this class, I should be glad to have his experience.—American Messenger.

☞ A Chicago clergyman, at the time of the Female Suffrage Convention, expressed himself as willing to give up his pulpit in favor of any woman who would fill it. He has since been tried by an ecclesiastical court for various misdemeanors, and now his pulpit is open.

☞ The famine is rapidly spreading in India, and the government is moving energetically to mitigate its horrors by supplying the people with food as far as possible.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

Auburn, N. Y., Feb. 22. There was great excitement in the Catholic church in this city yesterday morning. A large number of Catholics assembled at 8 o'clock, to resist the action of Bishop McQuid in removing their old pastor, the Rev. Thomas O'Flaherty, who has labored among them twenty-three years, and to whom a large majority of the Catholics of this city are warmly attached.

The people, after assembling, resolved themselves into a meeting, and unanimously condemned the action of the Bishop and refused to permit him or his appointee, Rev. Mr. Kavanagh, to say mass, a large number pushing their way to the altar, and taking the latter by the arm, they led him out of the church. It was feared that violence would be committed on him, but by the interposition of Father O'Flaherty, it was prevented.

After the Bishop and Father Kavanagh left the church the assembly unanimously resolved to hold another meeting at 11 o'clock. At that hour over one thousand Catholics assembled and passed a series of resolutions declaring their determination to stand by their old pastor, strongly condemning the action of the Bishop and expressing their determination to no longer submit to the abuses of what they termed "a one man power," in the United States, but to appeal at once to the ecclesiastical authorities of the country, and if necessary to Pope Pius IX. Addresses were made by influential Catholics sustaining the resolutions which were adopted without a dissenting vote. Future trouble is anticipated, as the meeting resolved that the new pastor should not be permitted to occupy the parsonage.

Passing Events.

☞ The sixty-two thousand Chinese in Calfornia are nearly all enrolled in six clubs, corresponding to the six districts from which they came. When an immigrant ship arrives, the agents of each club go on board and take charge of those who come from their district. The immigrant is boarded and lodged until he finds employment. All Chinamen who are sick or in want are also provided for by the clubs.

☞ Friday, February 5th, was the hottest day ever recorded in England in the first week in February. The mean temperature of the day was 51.2 degrees, and at half-past three in the afternoon the thermometer in the sun marked 71 degrees. In Paris the birds were singing and active out-door exercise was oppressive.

☞ The Belgium clergymen have recently refused to bury two respectable men who declined to accept clerical attentions while on their death-beds. It was insisted that they should be buried with suicides and criminals, in the corner set apart for them. The civil authorities overruled the clergy, however.

☞ The Pope appears to be arming. From Civita Vecchia we learn that French transports continue to arrive there and disembark large quantities of rifles, powder and cannon.

☞ The Canadians fear disastrous floods in the spring when the snow melts, there is such a vast quantity of it up there.

☞ A dog at Dubuque, Iowa, has saved the lives of four persons, and has the unmuzzled "freedom of the city" as a reward for his good services to humanity.

☞ Some of the Italian Republicans are hopeful of having a Republic established in Italy during the present year.

☞ A New York paper mentions as quite a remarkable fact, that there has not been a murder in that city for a month.

☞ Watches for the blind are made by M. Ekegren. The hands are stoutly made, and are not even affected by rough handling.

☞ A shock of earthquake occurred in Wilkes county, N. C., a short time ago, which rocked the houses, and the people fled to the woods in alarm.

☞ The yellow fever has reappeared at Callao in a most malignant form.

To the Afflicted.

For the accommodation of those writing me about the Russian instrument for extracting humors, I wish to say the instrument is a horn case, about one foot long, one inch in diameter, with thirty-six fine, highly electrified needles thrown slightly into the skin by the means of a spiral spring, but not to hurt or draw blood. They can be operated by any one after reading the seventy-fourth page of the medical book that accompanies it. The perforated spots are anointed with the oil that comes with it. There is a counterfeit, four inches long, with no spring. Beware of them. The genuine comes from Dr. Lindon, of Cleveland, Ohio. I act as agent, knowing this to be the best thing in use for immediately extracting pain of all kinds when applied according to directions in the book. It is doing wonders, and no family will do without it when its worth is understood. It is safe, and any one can use it after a little study of the book.

The afflicted will soon be paid for getting one. You can help your poor neighbors who have the rheumatism, sore throat, eyes, or spinal complaint. I know what I am saying and doing. It is for the benefit of the afflicted. This notice is sufficient to set the outline of facts before you, and the book will give you all you need, to be a blessing to the afflicted. Price $10.50. Forwarded to any one within one hundred and fifty miles of me.

Chicopee Falls, Mass. Hiram Munger.

Notice.

With the view of closing my labors with the church in Savoy, I would say, that churches wishing me to labor with them, can address me at Savoy, Mass., for the present. E. M'Culloch.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.
2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.
3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.
4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21:43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $2.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3:7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies, A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness, The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
9. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.
10. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

"WHAT IS MAN?" A Bible view of his creation with the meaning of "Soul," "Spirit," and an exposition of the "Rich Man and Lazarus," "Thief on the Cross," and "Souls under the Altar." By Miles Grant.

This is a work of 128 pp., containing four tracts bound together. Every body should have a copy. Price 25 cents postpaid.

THE SIGHT OF HEAVEN.

Around thy throne, O God, doth shine
 The light of grace and dying love;
O may the light with power divine
 Around us shine like that above.

The light withdrawn, how dark and drear
 Would be the souls of sinful men;
Immersed in crime, and filled with fear
 Lest Christ as Judge should come again.

At first he came the light to shed,
 And save from sin and death and woe;
To heal the sick and raise the dead,
 And grace and life on man bestow.

In robes of light again he'll stand
 On Zion's hill as judgment King,
With all his saints at his right hand,
 Where they victorious songs will sing.

O sinful soul, where will you stand
 When Christ in judgment thus appears?
Arrayed with saints at his right hand,
 Or driven away in all your fears?

O may the light of heavenly grace
 In all its power from God above,
Shine brightly o'er each sorrowing face,
 And fill each heart with joy and love.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHURCH LARGE ENOUGH FOR THE CHRISTIAN'S ENTIRE EFFORTS.

(Concluded.)

There is ample room in the church for brotherhood. Brotherhood in Christ is all that is needed, and yet the professed church members think to find it or seek to find it in the world, or in organizations outside of the church, as though they were one with the membership there, whether they were even professed christians or not. Yet how many are found striking hands in oath-bound brotherhood with the world, with men who may be Masons, Odd Fellows, Sons of Temperance, or Good Templars, and moral, but not christians, or profane, or wine-bibbers, or adulterers, or otherwise impure. Such it is true may, like Judas, be found among the membership of the church; but brotherhood truly there is, and if some obtain it unworthily, it is not like going into unwarrantable places to secure it. The place in the church is all right; the man who gets it there unworthily is all wrong—brotherhood, place, and all.

It is sometimes urged that it is better that a man break off his drinking habits than to continue to drink; and this is certainly true; but cannot the church secure this end as well as any other organization? And if any other can secure this, can not the church do even more, and secure to him the Holy Spirit to keep him in the hour of temptation? O that men who professed to know, did really, fully know what the true church is, and what a power it is, and get thoroughly into it; and then find in a divine Architect's work a completeness of plan and a perfectness of execution in building.

It is the same as to political organizations. The church is a governmental organization; a theocracy; the preliminary of the coming kingdom; and although its politics may not be quite like any and all others, they are purer, higher, and better; and the church is large enough for all the christian's political purposes and aspirations; for, as a thorough theocrat, he is allied to the government of no less a personage than Jesus, the Lord's Anointed; and as all other governments are inferior to it, and as one cannot be of two governments or two parties at one time, so the church is the christian's political home, and is large enough for even that, although not usually considered in that sense.

Sometimes those who are convinced of this fact are urged to lend their influence in this direction and that, in governments, to elect the right men to office (unfortunately they do not agree, when they try that matter, more than others), or in these other associations. But the church is large enough for the use and extension of all their influence; and if he lends it to anything else, he is like a man who lends his name to another's note; and if he thus lends his influence, it ceases to be christian influence, and takes the hue and name, chamelion-like, of that to which it is lent; and he who lends it loses. No, he can find a place for his influence in the church, and that requires it all, and he can say, Gentlemen, I have made my choice of the place where my influence is to be exerted; the cause requires it all. I have room enough here for it, and I cannot lend it to anything else. If I did, I should lose more than you would gain. The cause would suffer, and I should not be a living condemnation to the world. I should compromise, and virtually say, the church is not sufficient for a thorough reformation as it is; though professing sufficiency, it would be a failure. You may say you can do what the church can not; but this I do not believe. I am content to work here, and be a part of this arrangement; you must excuse me from being known as anything else but a christian; a plain, unassuming, pilgrim christian; a laborer for Jesus, and a citizen of the better country. Come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the church is the "ark of safety." In this manner he will keep his proper place, and intimate by his invitation that the best thing for all others is the church of Christ, and a giving up of all their efforts of half work and half reform.

The church, the church is the place for me.
It is the place where I feel most free;
It is my home, my heart is there;
It is my love and my greatest care.

God is only satisfied with a thorough reform, or conversion to himself. He says, "My son, give me thine heart"; and his church is organized by him to lead to that result; and his members have that work to do as laborers together with him; even to beseech men that they receive not the grace of God in vain. God has given them enough to do to fill their hands, their heads, their hearts with work, work, WORK. "Work" to convince men of sin; "work" to show them Christ; "WORK" to lead them to him and him alone. He who leads a soul to anything less than Christ, or to any other place, comes short, and leads astray.

It may be urged, "If I cannot get men converted, shall I not try at least to get them to be as good as I can?" Yes, certainly; but how? By stepping down from Christianity to the work of moral reform? You can never get men beyond your position; hence, were you to get them reformed according to the moralist's standard, then you would feel a want, and deplore the fact that you had let yourself down to too low a position; be convinced that you had yourself sustained a loss; and, with any heart to lead men to Christ, or with any conviction left that nothing less than Christ could be sufficient; you would, you must feel that you yourself needed a reform, and must go back to Christianity, and offer your reformed ones the second invitation, "Friend, come up higher." Christianity deserves the credit of all the partial reforms men have made; so it is conceded by men; and if so, then you can effect as much moral reform by Christianity as by any other means. Let gospel invitations only be yours; let men hear them only; and then if their proud hearts refuse to obey; if they choose some place midway between vile ways and Christian holiness; let them stop there if they will, but let not the members of God's church be responsible for having led them only there.

"Go ye into all the world," said Jesus; and Christianity means just that; it is adapted to that command, or rather the command to it; and so its adherents, armed with this commission and God's authority, can go and battle against the hosts of sin, and rescue men from their grovelings, help their feet out of the mire and clay, and place them upon the rock. Is not that glorious? is it not sufficient? and if so, if the means of reform,—reform that means something; reform that takes hold by "patient continuance in well doing" of "eternal life,"—is in the house of God, then let all the members of the church stay there, and work there, and there only. If they remain there, they will not be befooled and blinded about who are the wicked, and their end; but will be instructed, and "thoroughly furnished unto every good work." God, say they, will be. Let us believe him, and accept the fact as a fact; that "the church is large enough for all the christian's efforts."

For the World's Crisis.

WHY DO THEY GO?

Why do christians go to cattle-shows, picnics, levees, Christmas gatherings, church-fairs, and festivals, etc? What is there in any of these to satisfy the cravings of a heart that is hungering and thirsting after righteousness? What is there in a cattle show where hundreds of people of all classes congregate; where the drunkard staggers around with loathsome breath, and still more loathsome language; where the profane swearer utters horrid oaths; where the unprincipled libertine and vile prostitute walk unblushinlgy by among the crowd, seeking new victims for their base desires; what, I repeat, is there in in all this to feed a soul that has once tasted of the heavenly manna? What is a day spent in listening to the idle chitchat of such a company, witnessing the running to and fro of a thousand people, associating with the votaries of pleasure, and the slaves of fashion, and seeing horses raced till the noble animals are nearly ruined; compared with one hour spent in communion with God, or one whisper of the Comforter? Then why do they go? "Well," says one, "I go to meet my friends." Ah! then your friends are lovers of pleasure, are they? Perhaps they go because they feel certain you will be there. But is that a good place to visit friends? Are your friends christians? Do you feel like sitting down there to talk about the blessed hope, and tell of mercies past and joys to come? Can you learn their whereabouts? Do they go there with hearts full of faith, and zeal, and love for God and his cause?

Are your friends unconverted? Can you talk to them about the follies and vanities of this world? Can you entreat them to renounce its pleasures, to come out from the world and be separate? Would not your conscience condemn you, and a voice from within say to you, "physician, heal thyself"? Do you find your best Friend there? does the One who died to save you go to the fair? If he does not go, I do not want to. He is better than all other friends, and one smile from him is worth more than all the gay assemblies of earth.

"I go," says another, "to pass away the time." Is time then of so little worth that to get rid of it, you barter it for a mess of pottage? Do you not prize the golden moments which are passing so swiftly, never to return, higher than this? Is life too long, that you try to shovel hours and days out of the way in frivolous amusements? Suppose you are so situated that the duties of home and cares of life require but little of your time; are there no sick to visit? no sorrowing hearts to cheer? no errands of mercy, no deeds of charity to occupy your spare moments? Or have you not mind enough to sit quietly down at home and spend a few hours profitably in reading, meditation and prayer? Time is short for life's great work. I daily realize how fast the fleeting moments pass away. I cannot do half I want to; not half that in my heart I long to accomplish, for lack of time.

What is the tendency of all these fairs, levees, picnics, grab-bags, etc.? What real merrit can you attach to them? "Well," says one, "unless we unite with the world in some of their recreations, they will not come to our meetings; and unless we have something to attract the young—something to satisfy their love of pleasure, they will go elsewhere. If we make religion look pleasant and attractive, they will the more readily embrace it; and if we want them to join 'our church,' we must be as popular as other churches." Ah! then this is your plea. To draw poor, deluded, pleasure-loving sinners from the world outside the church, you bring the world inside for a bait. To entice them from the path of folly, you cover religion with folly. To win them from the empty honors, the pride and popularity of the world, you make religion a popular thing and surround it with worldly honor, and make the church a nursery of pride. You exhort them to give up all for Christ, and by your example encourage them to think they can have Christ and everything else too. O consistency, thou art a jewel. I tell you this adorning religion with the vain tinsel of earth, this dressing it up in Babylonish garments, robs it of half its glory. If people are drawn by this false glitter, if they embrace religion because they love this outside show, depend upon it, there will be no real love for religion itself.

O, if christians would strip themselves of the trappings of this world, come out and be separate, and be humble representatives of the religion of the meek and lowly man of sorrows, there would thousands fall down and worship, and submit to the reign of the Prince of peace, where there is now one. Is there nothing lovely in Jesus? Is there nothing attractive in the great love wherewith he hath loved us? Is there no beauty in the Rose of Sharon? Is there no glory in the coming kingdom, no joy in the future reward of the righteous; nothing inviting in the promise of paradise restored, to draw poor sinners from the error of their ways? nothing enticing to the restless, unsatisfied wanderers after rest? Is there not enough glory emanating from the world to come to draw the attention of those who are seeking after happiness from the vain and transitory things of this world?

Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." Did he tell his disciples to weave garlands of roses to hang upon his cross? Did he tell them to adorn it with gold and jewels to attract the attention of the rich and please the pleasure loving eye? No; those who passed by saw the crimson blood, the naked cross and rugged crown of thorns. Did he tell them to seek the honors or favor of the world? No; never. "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have life." "Because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore, the world hateth you." He always taught that to follow him would be a course of self-denial here; a life of sacrifice, and toil, and persecution, sweetened with inward peace; but in the great hereafter the reward should be eternal life, and joys unending. I am glad there is a reproach to the cross of Christ. It is blessed to share the ignomy that was heaped upon that guiltless head. There is joy in the thought that if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him.

I like the writings of D. F. Newton. I am glad that he can wield a "sword that cuts" and kindle a "fire that burns." I hope the Lord will keep his pen moving, until christians throughout the land shall see the sin of uniting religion with folly, and the awful consequences of introducing vain amusements to help advance the cause of Christ.

"IF THOU WILT."

"If thou wilt." The leper's plea,
Wand'rer, well befitteth thee;
Early was thy name enrolled
As a lambkin of the fold;
Yet those hallowed vows fulfill,—
"If thou wilt," the Savior "will."

"If thou wilt," thou mayest be clean,
Seek the humble Nazarene;
Seek him at the gate of prayer;
Seek and thou shalt find him there;
Yet the door is open still,—
"If thou wilt," the Savior "will."

Gems.

— Give light, and the darkness will disperse itself.

— Let prayer be the key of the morning, and the bolt of the evening.

— As the power of grace comes in at one door, the love of vice will go out at another.

— Sin is a hard task-master and pays dreadful wages. "The wages of sin is death."

— Do not sin in rebuking sin; do not sin failing to rebuke it.

— If thy profession has not the blood of Christ at its root, it will wither.

— Some people's defects are but the exaggerations of their good qualities.

— One rarely repents of having kept silence, but often of having spoken.

— Satan's most artful device is to induce disbelief in his own existence.

— Advice which like the snow, softly falls, dwells the longer upon, and sinks the deeper into the mind.

— Prayer is ever profitable: at night it is our covering; in the morning it is our armor.

— We can strike up bargains and make contracts in proxy; but all men must work out their salvation in person.

— True goodness is like the glow-worm; It shines most when no eyes, except those of heaven, are upon it.

—Be deaf to the quarrelsome, blind to the scorner, and dumb to those who are mischievously inquisitive.

— I cannot find what good we get by the amusements which are only calculated to kill time, when we are directed to redeem it.

— As the moon, though invisible, controls the ocean tides, so Jesus, unseen, has power over the motions of the believing soul.

— None can know that they are Christ's, unless they are dilligent in making their calling and election sure.

— Those who deny the existence and agency of evil spirits, ought to be what they never are,—believers in man's total depravity.

— The sinner can do many things which the christian does, while the christian does some things which the sinner cannot do.

— A man's elevated position in the church does not make him other than what he is. The raven cawing from the steeple is a raven still.

— Sickness should teach us what a vain thing the world is, what a vile thing sin is, what a poor thing man is, and what a precious thing an interest in Christ is.

— By the constant repetition of any line of thought, feeling, or action, men lose the power of vivid appreciation. Hence, everywhere the tendency of routine is to dullness.

— Could honey be distilled from the bowels of a toad, who would partake of it? Such however, at best, must be the sweets which a christian obtains from worldly amusements.

— Christ's strength is the strength of the christian. If we would stand, Christ must be our foundation; if we would be safe, Christ must be our sanctuary.

— It is observed that the most censorious are generally the least judicious, who, having nothing to recommend themselves, will be finding fault with others. No man envies the merits of another who has enough of his own.

— To see christians (so called) join hands with worldlings in vain, sensual amusements, reminds one of the true proverb, "The dog has returned to his vomit, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire."

— What sort of an evil is a sectarian spirit? It is the cruel iron wedge of the devil's own forging, to separate christians from each other. Christians thereby become like divided armies.

— Men often boast of progress, when they are only moving in a circle;—and are sure they are in the right path, because with every circuit the foot prints multiply, when they are only following their own tracks.

REMOVING STAINS.—All cloths subject to be stained, such as table linen, napkins, children's clothes, towels, etc., ought to be examined before being put into any wash mixture or soap-suds, as these render the stain permanent. Many stains will yield to good washing in pure soft warm water. Alcohol will remove almost any discoloration. Almost any stain or iron-mold, or mildew, may be removed by dipping in a moderately strong citric acid, then covered with salt and kept in the sun. This may require to be repeated many times, but with us has never failed.—Country Gentleman.

HORSE TREATMENT.—There are a very few common-sense rules, which, if followed, will commend themselves to the horse, as well as to the trainer, viz.:

1st. Always feel kindly toward a horse, no matter what he does to you, and consequently never show "temper." Remember, the horse knows instinctively how you feel.

2d. Never go near a horse if you are afraid of him; the horse will know it and take advantage of it before you acknowledge it yourself.

"SCENES IN THE LIFE OF HARRIET TUBMAN."

Such is the title of a very neat volume, respecting which we have something to say. We are always ready to employ our pen in behalf of the needy, and rejoice that while our own limited resources forbid our aiding pecuniarily as fully as we otherwise would, we can appeal to others, and that too with success.

"Who is Harriet Tubman, and what claim has she on our sympathies?" perhaps you ask. We reply, she is one of earth's lowly ones, belonging to a dark-hued and "contraband" race; was for the first twenty-five years of her life a slave on the eastern shore of Maryland. For many years she worked as a field-hand, following the oxen, loading and unloading wood, and carrying heavy burdens, by which her naturally remarkable power of muscle was so developed that her feats of strength often called forth the wonder of strong laboring men. And thus was she, all unconscious to herself, preparing for that life of hardship and endurance which was before her, and those deeds of daring she was to perform.

Harriet Tubman has been known in various places by many different names, such as "Moses," in allusion to her being the leader and guide to so many of her people in their exodus from the land of bondage; "The Conductor of the Underground Railroad"; and "Moll Pitcher," for the energy and daring by which she delivered a fugitive slave, who was about to be dragged back to the South.

At one time she was hired out to a cruel man, who inflicted upon her the life-long injury from which she is now suffering, by breaking her skull with a weight from the scales. This injury causes her often to fall into a state of somnolency from which it is difficult to rouse her. Disabled and sick, her flesh all wasted away, she was returned to her owner. He tried to sell her, but no one would buy her.

"Dey said dey would n't give a sixpence for me," she said.

Yet, when she had escaped from the cruel bondage of slavery, a reward of $12,000 was offered for the head of one who was enticing away so many parties of slaves from their masters! She had traveled in the cars when these posters were put up over her head, and she heard them read by those about her; yet she went about her mission of love trusting in the Lord for preservation. She went back and forth nineteen times, as a "Moses" leading her people to the land of freedom.

We must quote a little about her praying for her "ole master," when he was trying to sell her.

"I worked as I could, and I prayed through all the long nights; I groaned and prayed for ole master: 'O Lord, convert master! O Lord, change dat man's heart?' 'Pears like I prayed all de time bout my work, everywhere; I prayed, and I groaned to de Lord. When I went to de horse-trough to wash my face, I took up de water in my han' an' I said, 'O Lord, wash me and make me clean!' Den I take up something to wipe my face, and I say, 'O Lord, wipe away all my sin!' When I took de broom and began to sweep, I groaned, 'O Lord, wha' soebber sin dere be in my heart, sweep it out, Lord, clear and clean!'" No words can describe the pathos of her tones as she broke out into these words after the manner of her people:

"An' so," said she, "I prayed all night for master, till the fust of March, an' all de time he was bringing people to look at me, an' trying to sell me. Den we heard that some of us was gwine to be sole to go wid de chain-gang down to de cotton an' rice fields, an' dey said I was gwine, an' my brudders and sisters. Den I changed my prayer.

"Fust of March I began to pray, 'O Lord, if you aint nebber gwine to change dat man's heart, kill him, Lord, an' take him out ob de way.'

"Nex' ting I heard ole master was dead, an' he died jus' as he libbed. O, then, it 'peared like I'd give all de world full of gold, if I had it, to bring dat poor soul back. But I could n't pray for him no longer." After this Harriet heard that two of her sisters had been carried off with the chain-gang, and that herself and brothers were to be taken away that night. Then she resolved to escape. It was common for the slaves to communicate with each other by singing; so when she sang her farewell to her friends thus—

"I'm sorry I'm gwine to lebe you,
 Farewell, oh farewell;
But I'll meet you in the mornin',
 Farewell, oh farewell;"

and as she passed by the Doctor, bowing as she went on, and still singing—

"I'll meet you in the mornin',
 I'm bound for the promised land,
On the oder side of Jordan,
 Bound for de promised land";

those words meant something more than a journey to the heavenly Canaan.

Guided by the north star, Harriet found her way after a long and painful journey to the land where the slave is free from his master. This was before the passing of the "Fugitive Slave Law," so that she could not be taken back to bondage. She came to Philadelphia, and worked in hotels, and afterwards at Cape May; and when she had earned a little money she would go back, and secretly give notice to those who were ready to follow her to freedom. They always started on Saturday night, because advertisements could not be given out on Sunday.

During the rebellion, she devoted herself to the work of aiding the suffering soldiers. She is now, though worn down by hardships, laboring to her utmost ability to support two aged parents, and by her own efforts sustain two schools for Freedmen at the South, supplying them with clothes and books.

It is to aid her in this noble work, that Mrs. Sarah H. Bradford has written this thrilling narrative of a remarkable woman, and the cost of its publication has been raised by subscription, so that the entire proceeds of its sale go to aid Harriet Tubman in her mission work, and also to secure to her parents their little home, which they were in danger of losing from inability to pay the amount due. Letters from Gerritt Smith, Fred. Douglass, and Wendell Phillips, bear testimony to the worth of this noble woman.

And now I trust that I have so successfully appealed to your generous feelings, that you will be ready to send $1.00 to the address of Wm. Garrison, Jr., Boston, and receive in return, postpaid, a copy of this handsomely bound volume, the thrilling facts of which are well worth the price; while at the same time you are helping lift the burden from a long-wearied heart. The book is also for sale at the Freedman's Rooms and Studio Building, Boston.

M. D. WELLCOME.

BEECHER'S AUCTION OF THE GOSPEL.

This is the age of auctions. Everything that can be bought or sold is thrown upon the stock market. Virtue, love, murder and religion are mingled with the other elements existing among us, and compete in the battle for a bid. "For sale" appears to be marked on every thing, if we may trust for evidence to our moral teachers. Instead of the highest religious talent being used to educate the most ignorant and stubborn of our people, it is "cornered" by the stock-brokers for fashionable purposes. Three great stocks have lately come prominently before the brokers. These are Erie, New York Central and Plymouth Church. The first was so roughly handled by its president and directors that it has fallen into the hands of the lawyers, who will bleed it to the utmost. The second was a magnificent affair. Its president rolled it into notice, and, calling its worshipers to the temple in Wall street, showed the faithful what it was to have faith in their Lord Vanderbilt, and demonstrated what inevitable punishment, loss of honor and prestage await those who fail to trust in him and follow his teachings. How of the third great operation? Its president, true to his high moral calling and the great corporation over which he presides, called the religious stock speculators to order, and told them that the Plymouth Church Company were about to issue new scrip and declare a large dividend on the gospel. The par value of the old stock immediately went up to a higher figure. The highest point which it touched was four hundred and twenty above par. The bidding at a price somewhat lower than this was quite active, owing to the exhortation of the president of the company to the excited crowd to "Go it with all your might, gentlemen!" It is a matter of regret that this exhibition was not advertised. The "Devil's Auction" of last year was nothing in comparison. Nevertheless, it is not too late to advise the public that the stock and transfer book, formerly known as the Bible, will be opened every Sunday by president Beecher for the benefit of those interested.

If we remember well, the original Society of Christianity from which the Plymouth Church Company received its charter, had certain by-laws which imposed the severest penalties upon those who speculated in stocks or gambled by other methods. In one of the old temples or offices of the company, a gang of brokers were kicked out by the President of the association for defiling the office with such unhallowed financial proceedings. These by-laws have, however, been very much changed since that early date. A new constitution has been sworn—a kind of financial-federal-religious compact—in which stock-holders may hold for a rise or sell short, according to the condition of the market.

How long are our religious societies to be stained by such disgraceful proceedings as we detailed in our edition of yesterday and to which we here allude? Are the morals of the past too uncivilized for the present? If so, why preach from the Code and fail to practice it, at least in exterior decency? Religion wants reconstruction, for its devotees make a complete burlesque of it, and bring it into such ridicule that no intelligent man desires to wound his conscience by becoming a proselyte.—Herald.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

For the Hygiene Column.

BRO. GRANT:—If you think proper, please publish the following in the Crisis for the benefit of its readers. Not that I suppose the Crisis readers use intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical or medicinal purposes. But as the time of making syrups is at hand, which may be purifying to the blood in the spring-time, it is generally considered necessary to add a little spirits of some kind to preserve it. Now I would suggest the idea of making a small quantity and often, rather than taking the poisoning ingredient in distilled liquors. I think I would rather go without the medicinal benefits of roots and herbs than risk the effect of the poisonous substances in the liquors.

B. MATHEWSON.

ADULTERATED LIQUORS.

The New York World and the Metropolitan Board of Excise have, in the last month, directed their attention to a chemical examination of liquors sold in the city. Samples of liquor were purchased by the World and submitted to Prof. John C. Draper, of the University Medical College, one of the most distinguished chemists in the city. The result is more than startling—it is appalling. Poisonous fusel-oil, tannin in large quanties, burnt sugar, corn spirits, oak bark; these were the articles that entered into the composition of the liquors examined. Of all the specimens of brandy which were obtained there was but one which did not contain these substances in greater or less degree, and the whiskey was in an equally bad condition. All the samples of so-called pure liquor were largely diluted, and there was not a single purchase made which, on analyzation, proved to be genuine.

Of the fusel-oil, which was one of the chief ingredients in these liquors, Dr. Taylor, in his Medical Jurisprudence, says: "I have experienced its effects, and found them to be giddiness, accompanied with a feeling of suffocation and a sense of falling and headache followed, which lasted for half an hour. Two drachms of the oil killed a rabbit in two hours, three drachms in an hour, half an ounce in a quarter of an hour, and an ounce in four minutes." But the most startling part of the disclosure is in the fact that these liquors were bought at "first class" drinking places, and not at the corner-saloons and low whisky-shops.

The samples reported upon are the best liquors sold at the best bar-rooms in New York. The liquors obtained were from the glittering decanters from which fashionable gentlemen are in the daily habit of taking their toddies, under the delusion that a pure article is insured beyond peradventure by the high prices paid. This exposure sweeps away the delusion, and fashionable drinkers may well stand astonished and horrified; for of all the liquor obtained not a sample is pure—not one but is poisonous.

Here is an explanation of the diseases which prevail among the fashionable drinkers of the day. These adulterated liquors derange the system, create a morbid and irresistible craving for stimulants, heat and craze the brain, and lead to drunkenness and death. No one can drink with safety; for the liquor which he sips is poison, as well as the fusel-oil and other ingredients, and the fashionable drinker is the fashionable suicide.

The following are some of the samples:

METROPOLITAN HOTEL: Brandy, forty cts. per glass; water sixty-six per cent; alcohol, thirty-four. Contains slight traces of tannin and fusel-oil, and a very small quantity of sugar. Is an imitation brandy. Whisky, twenty-five cts. per glass: water, sixty-eight per cent; alcohol, thirty-two. Contains a very small quantity of tannin, sugar, and a considerable quantity of fusel-oil.

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL: Brandy, fifty cts. per glass: water sixty-four per cent; alcohol thirty-six. Contains tannin, sugar, and fusel-oil. Is an imitation brandy.

ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL: Brandy, forty cts. per glass; water, seventy per cent; alcohol, thirty. Contains a small amount of tannin, sugar, and fusel-oil, with raisin and plum flavor. Is an imitation brandy. Whisky, thirty-cts. per glass: water, seventy per cent: alcohol, thirty. Contains the largest quantity of sugar, a little tannin, and a large amount of fusel-oil.

The above are but specimens of all. Only one or two samples were found which could be called anywhere near "pure." Liquor taken from what are called "low groggeries" proved to be quite as "pure" an article as those in the "respectable" and "fashionable" hotels in Broadway.

CLEAN TEETH.

"Why is it so many people use the Sozodont?" This question, in large capitals, headed an advertisement of the above nostrum for unfortunate people with foul mouths. There followed a half column or so of high-sounding praise of the virtues of Sozodont, as the answer to the question. It occurred to the writer, on glancing at the question, that less, much less than half a column, would contain the proper answer. We would humbly suggest the following as a better answer: Because the dietetic habits of most people, both young and old, are so bad as to befoul the whole system, and being desirous to show a clean external, they have recourse to Sozodont, being ignorant of a better way.

We have a simple recipe for cleaning foul mouths and teeth, making them sweet-smelling, white and clean; we charge nothing for it. It is easily prepared. We whisper it in the ears of all who wish to try it: a vegetable diet. Now, by a vegetable diet we do not mean to include onions, garlic, or tobacco, because we think they each have a tendency to produce one or both the before mentioned evils. But we mean a diet composed of a good selection of fruits, grains, and the best of the roots and vegetables—potatoes, turnips, pumpkins, squashes, etc.,—cooked in the simplest manner, and eaten without salt, butter, pepper, vinegar, or any other condiment, letting the rich flavor with which nature has so freely seasoned them suffice, as it will abundantly after a short trial. It does away with pastes, powders and sand, while the mouth is clean and sweet, the teeth white and glistening at all times. Try it. We have tried it, and find it excellent.

A query arises as to the propriety of a diet which so befouls the mouth, breath, and teeth, that they need soap and scrubbing brush in order to purge them. And what must be the condition of the whole body when such a diet is used? Not in a condition, truly, to be presented "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service."—Health Reformer.

TEN FOLLIES.

1. To think the more a man eats, the fatter and stronger he will become.
2. To believe the more hours children study at school the faster they learn.
3. To conclude that if exercise is good for the health, the more violent or exhausting it is, the more good is done.
4. To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.
5. To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.
6. To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better, is "good for" the system, without regard to ulterior effects.
7. To eat without any appetite, or to continue to eat after it has been satisfied, merely to gratify the taste.
8. To eat a hearty supper for the pleasure experienced during the brief time it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed sleep, and a weary waking in the morning.
9. To remove a portion of the covering immediately after exercise, when the most stupid drayman in New York knows that if he does not put a cover on his horse the moment he ceases work in the winter, he will lose him in a few days by pneumonia.
10. To contend that because the dirtiest children in the street, or highway, are hearty and healthy, therefore it is healthy to be dirty; forgetting that continuous daily exposure to out door air in joyous unrestrained activities is such a powerful agency for health that those who live thus are well, in spite of rags and filth.

FOR MUTTON EATERS.

It is well known that the sheep in some sections of western New York, are seriously affected with diseases called the "foot rot" and the "scab," which are of such a character as to render the meat of the animal wholly unfit for food. A Rochester paper says that there is no doubt that such sheep are slaughtered and dressed for market, and that a party is building a slaughter-house for that purpose. Many of the flocks there are diseased, and the owners are disposing of the sheep at merely nominal prices. Sheep can be had there for sixty cents a head, and the pelt is worth that sum. The firm propose to dispose of the products in the following manner: The hind-quarters of the sheep are to be sent East, the fore-quarters are to be steamed and pressed for tallow, and the tongues and livers are to be sold in Rochester. A splendid enterprise, truly! The authorities should resort to some process to stop it.—Ex.

TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION.

It seems at first sight as superfluous to state, that in a disease of debility, like consumption, patients should breathe pure air, as that they should have good nourishing food, but it is not so. Theoretically, the value of pure air is accepted; but practically it is universally neglected. Healthful respiration has yet to be applied, not only to every-day life, but in the treatment of disease. In ill health, and particularly diseases of the respiratory organs, the dictates of science and common sense are grossly outraged. If those persons who have consumption, or who have an inclination to it would spend an hour every day in breathing pure air to the fullest extent to which their lungs are capable of taking it in, they would do more to prevent and cure this disease than it is possible to do by medication.—Ex.

EFFECT OF TIGHT CLOTHING AND DIGESTION.—The peculiar discomfort experienced after meals from a degree of constriction round the waist, unfelt at other times, is explained not by mere distension of the stomach, but by its necessity for room in which to churn, in default of which it passes up beneath the ribs and interferes with the play of the diaphragm, consequently with the expansion of the lungs. The asthmatic troubles, often provoked by indigestion and flatulence, also proceed from a sympathy between the muscular tissue of the two organs of which their common nerves are mediators.

Along with the influence of dress, we should consider that of position and movement. To sit bent over or stoop is the worst, because the most cramping of positions, and impedes at once the movements of the stomach and the circulation of blood in the liver. For invalids deprived of the use of their limbs, the joint back arm chair affords the easiest positions. For the rest they must be indebted to lively conversation or music. They should not read unless their eyes are strong, and then something pleasant and humorous.—Herald of Health.

OVEREATING.—Some people seem to entertain the idea that the more they eat, the stronger they will grow. Such need to be informed of the fact that, besides not half digesting the food with which they cram themselves, they impose an additional burden on the vital powers to dispose of that which the stomach, in its overworked condition, cannot take care of, and thus more vitality is expended than is obtained from the additional meal.

LONGING.

Hasten, sweet day of rest,
I've waited long for thee;
My heart is sore oppressed,
Thy dawn I long to see.

Old earth is dark and drear,
Her pleasures pass away;
The brightest hopes we rear,
Soon wither and decay.

Here all must fade; the little bud—
How soon becomes a flower,
To scatter in the summer breeze,
Forgotten in an hour.

So friends we once have loved,
And forms we used to greet,
Have passed in early youth,
In death's cold arms to sleep.

But in that beauteous morn,
Which ends this long dark night,
They'll bloom in fadeless beauty,
To range the fields of light.

I long to rest in that bright land,
From sorrow, pain and care;
A crown I see in Father's hand,
A welcome for me there.

Providence, R. I. MARY BROWN.

THE MIGHTY EARTHQUAKE.

NUMBER FOUR.

As men take up their papers and read week after week, and month after month, of villages and cities being overthrown and destroyed; of whole districts engulphed and swallowed up; of the sea coming in upon the land; of mighty ships of war being borne far up into the country, and there left by the receding waves to lie and rot and fall down piecemeal; of our own granitic, government-built custom houses being rent and fractured until untenable, from the imminent peril of their tumbling in upon them; they pause and wonder, and trembling ask, "What shall the end of these things be?" not remembering the words of Jesus, nor believing them in their full import if recalled, how that there should be "great earthquakes in divers places"; "signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the EARTH distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which ARE coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory; . . . all these things are the beginning of sorrows"; for when the seventh angel shall sound, the nations will be angry, and God's wrath will have come (Rev. 11: 18), which wrath will be completed by the seven angels pouring out the seven vials of God's wrath into the earth; and when the sixth pours out his cup, it will cause the nuclean demons to gather the kings of the earth to the battle of the great day of the omnipotent God; and then the seventh will pour out his vial upon the air, and there will be voices, and thunders, and a great earthquake, such as was not since there was a man upon the earth, so MIGHTY an earthquake, so GREAT. Rev. 16: 18. For "the Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem (same as 1 Thess. 4: 16); "and the heavens and the earth shall shake (Joel 3: 16), and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east (i. e., the middle summit, that one over against Moriah); and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west (i. e. Mount Olivet will split in two, at the centre, the fissure running east and west); and there shall be a very great valley; and half the mountain shall remove toward the north (i. e., Galilee), and half toward the south"*—Zech. 14: 4 (i. e., toward the mount of corruption or offering).

That Ezra, Nehemiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Haggai, and Zechariah, all prophesied in the days of the captivity, or during the restoration and rebuilding of the wall or temple, at or on the return from Babylon, ought not to be denied. But it does not follow from this that their prophecies did not reach beyond, and also comprehend some of the events pertaining to Christ's second coming, as well as the first. Of these prophets, Ezra and Nehemiah are purely historical; while the four remaining ones are almost as purely prophetical, except Daniel, who combines both in one book; but in his prophetic work, he unquestionably reaches not only to and comprehends the restoration from the captivity; but as clearly indicates, not only the time of the first advent, and the subsequent second overthrow of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple by the Romans; but goes beyond to the second coming of our blessed Lord, and the setting up of his kingdom, as well as the time when the saints shall take possession thereof. If, as some were of opinion, Ezra wrote the book of Malachi, then he has done the same as Daniel in relation to the second advent. Why may not Zechariah have done the same thing under the influence of the same "one spirit."

Paul has, in one verse (1 Cor. 15: 23), stepped from the first to the second, and comprehended both advents, and in it covers all the intervening time.

One thing is certain: no such earthquake valley as that described in Zech. 14: 4–5, extending from Olivet to Azal (or Ascalon); or, if we consult the eighth verse, from the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea, was produced at the time of the crucifixion, or at the ascension. Now, if we will turn to the 11th and 12th of Daniel, we shall be relieved of the seeming difficulty which presents itself in Zech. 14: 1–2, where very many apply the words spoken to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus; but to the writer it would seem to be applied more appropriately to the "willful king" of Dan. 11: 16, and 36, who is to "plant the tabernacles of his palace (or the tents of his generals—of course with an army) between the seas in the glorious holy mountain" (i. e., Jerusalem between the "former and hinder sea,"—Zech. 14: 8, or Mediterranean and Dead Seas), "yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help (or deliver) him"; for "that determined shall be poured upon (i. e., the seventh vial) the desolator"—marginal 9: 27), for at that time shall Michael stand up, ... and (THEN) there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to this time."—12: 1–3. "For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once (more), it is a little while (so said Jesus—John 16: 16–19), and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory."—Haggai 2: 6.

"Behold the man whose name is The BRANCH; . . . HE shall build the temple of the Lord; . . . and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne." Zech. 6: 12–13. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." 14: 9. "And this word, Yet once more (from Hag. 2: 6), signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made; that those things which cannot be shaken may remain; wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear."—Heb. 12: 27–28.

Who can tell how soon that interminably vexed "Eastern question" may so develope the "willful king," as to bring "all nations against Jerusalem, in consequence of his having gone up to take a spoil" and possess himself of the "keys of the Holy Sepulchre," or, in plain English, of "UNIVERSAL EMPIRE"; at which time a repetition of what happened to Korah and his band shall transpire, when "the earth opened her mouth, . . . and they went down alive into the pit (or fissure) and perished"; the "remnant," while "fleeing the valley" on account of the inrushing waters from the "former sea," being "slain," or consumed by the fire, shall come out from the Lord—the "sword" that "proceedeth out of his mouth." Numb. 16: 1–35; Rev. 19: 21; Ps. 50: 3; 97: 1–3; Isa. 11: 4. G. W. STETSON.

For the World's Crisis.

"STAND UP FOR JESUS."

These words are familiar to most people, as they are seen conspicuously posted in almost every public place. But what do they mean? What is it to "stand up for Jesus"? Is it not to hearken to his counsel, confide in his word, and trust his grace in every emergency? to be in harmony with the principles he has taught, and contend earnestly for his word? Says the apostle, "We have the mind of Christ"; "Except ye have the Spirit of Christ, ye are none of his"; so if we have the mind and Spirit of Christ, his will, mind, spirit and word will be ours. Then it will be our greatest pleasure to deny ourselves, take the cross, and imitate, or follow him. His words will be sweet to our taste. I am often grieved when I talk with professors of Christ's religion, while urging the importance of the doctrine plainly taught by Jesus and his apostles,—that men are to be rewarded only when Jesus comes, when they get into a tight place, with not a word of Bible to sustain them, say, "O, it don't make but little difference what we believe, if we only are honest and gain heaven." Is this standing up for Jesus? Nay, verily. It is not only neglecting, but rejecting his word; for he says, we must believe in order to be saved. "My sheep hear my voice"; that is, his word. They have ears to hear, and they follow and stand up for his word.

Let us see what it is to "stand up for Jesus." Jesus says, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself." This is a plain declaration of Him who "spake as never man spake." Faith believes the word of Jesus our precious Savior, and gives due attention to it, and contends earnestly for it, even at the loss of reputation or life. So with the resurrection of the dead that have fallen in death under the Adamic penalty. Jesus says, "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." This will receive a joyous response, as being essentially necessary to the giving of life that shall be perpetual. These, with all other sayings of our crucified Redeemer, should be attended to believingly. It is not enough to simply admit their truthfulness; this is not standing up for Jesus in any sense of the word. More is demanded, even that a man should contend earnestly, stand stiffly, and not be ashamed of his word, nor of him, nor of his coming; knowing he has said, "He that is not for me is against me;" giving no place for indifference.

Then, to stand up for Jesus is to fearlessly defend, in a kind manner, with the ability God has given us, making all the converts possible to the Lord Jesus Christ, and his blessed life-giving word. More is demanded of us in these days of apostasy. Don't be afraid of being too strong, or of running too fast; only keep on the right track. Stand up for Jesus; lift up thy voice, be valiant for the truth, and run for the prize. If some are left behind, it can't be helped. We must stand in the divinity of truth, leaving tradition, fables, drones, world-lovers, fault-finders, and pleasure-seekers, with all their train behind, and with Jesus make sure of life at the coming of the Captain of our salvation.

Chelsea, Feb. 25th. L. BOUTELL.

For the World's Crisis.

A SAD PICTURE.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give the following extract an insertion in the Crisis? I copy it from the minutes of the last session of the N. E. Annual Conference of the M. E. church, pp. 24 and 25.

"But while we rejoice in having accomplished so much in giving the word of life to the destitute at home and abroad, we must not shut our eyes to the fact that there are very many who would blush with shame were it known that they did not own a Bible, who, nevertheless, know little more about its contents than their depraved neighbors whom they profess to pity. The evidence is alarmingly abundant that in many professedly christian homes the Bible is little read, and scarcely studied at all. Thousands in our Sunday schools and Bible classes, know almost nothing at all of the word of God; and many cannot answer some of the simplest questions, giving evidence that to a fearful extent the Bible is a sadly neglected book. As a whole, the Scriptures are acknowledged to be true; but, in particular, it is too often practically and theoretically denied. As a people, we are great Bible owners, and almost as great Bible neglecters.

But, while this is true of large numbers of church-going people, they are not alone blameworthy. As ministers and teachers, we are not a little responsible for this state of things. We circulate the Scriptures "without note or comment;" but, the fact is, we are the notes and comments. There are comparatively few independent students of the Bible among the people, and two few among the ministry. For the most part, the people's opinions are but the reflex of the minister's teaching. There is too little thorough Bible exposition in our pulpits. It is studied and preached in spots, but too rarely taught as a system, perfect only as the entire contents are included. The people, therefore, get the impression that the Bible is a fragmentary mass of mystical religious truth, which they cannot expect to understand,—in a word, that it is a religious enigma, instead of a plain revelation from God to them personally. If the minister does not study the laws of biblical interpretation, without which the Holy Scriptures as a system of truth cannot be understood, how can he expect to make his hearers understand and love them?

The question, How shall we get the people to study the Bible? is often asked, often discussed in christian conventions, and as often unanswered, unless it it be with the customary, but too often fallacious excuse,—inherent, total depravity. No one, whether he be sinner or saint, can take pleasure in guessing riddles as a rule of life. Let God be his own interpreter, and not the mysticisms of Origen, nor the spiritualistic "new hypotheses" of even learned doctors. Let enigmatical, lazy tradition die, that God's lively oracles may live and operate. When the people are convinced that the Bible is the gift of God's love to them, and not a volume of religious, mystical lore for professional gentleman alone to study, they will become interested in it, and properly estimate its value, and not before."

Will all that apply to Second Adventists as a body? If any believe that with us "the Bible is little read and scarcely studied at all," let such just examine our Bibles and see if they find no marks of attention to it.

"There are comparatively few independent students of the Bible among the people."* . . .
"For the most part, the people's opinions are but a reflex of the minister's teaching."

I think if our Bibles were examined they would attest some marks of Bereau effort. Do our people "get the impression that the Bible is a fragmentary mass of mystical religious truth? that it is a religious enigma?" Nay, verily.

"How shall we get the people to study the Bible? is often unanswered." Now, I can tell how I would do not to get the people interested in it. I would mystify it. For instance, I would say, "When God made that promise of land to Abraham, he did not mean real land, but an undefined sky-kingdom; and when God says "the wages of sin is death," he means eternal life in misery; and where the sinner is compared to "chaff," "tares," "fat of lambs," "stubble fully dry," and such combustible materials, and is to be burned up with fire, God only means the fire of a guilty conscience; and where he says "the dead know not anything," he means the body; and where the Bible speaks of the dead as sleeping, the body only is meant; and when Paul says, "It is appointed unto to men once to die, and after this the judgment," he doubtless forgot to insert between death and the judgment" that long period of happiness of the righteous dead in heaven and of misery of the wicked in hell; and where he speaks of "the patient waiting for Christ," he means the patient waiting for his coming at death, (as a Baptist minister lately said to me.") And I would further tell them, that where they found the word death connected with the sinner and a future state, they should always substitute the word misery; and where the word life is connected with the righteous and a future state, they should substitute the word happiness; for existence is not meant in such cases, as non-existence is not a supposable case with immortals. And where Christ says "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh," for the words "Son of man," I would suggest to them to substitute death, for the reason that such a substitute has come so universally into use, that its propriety should not once be questioned. And when Christ says to the Pharisees, "the kingdom of God is within you, "I would tell them to pay as little attention to the marginal reading (among you) (notwithstanding he told his disciples to beware of the doctrines of the Pharisees,) as the minister did in speaking from this text last evening, not even mentioning that there was any marginal reading till after meeting, when I asked him to whom the language was addressed; and I would now and then give them a riddle to guess, like one from a minister not long since. He said a crown was laid up for Paul which the Lord was to give him in that day. He stopped there, of course, as he had done a few weeks before. Soon after he said Paul had gone to his reward, and quoted as proof his desire to depart. Now here would be the riddle. How could a crown be laid up for Paul till that day, and he be gone to his reward? I fancy some would guess that he got both crown and reward at death. But those would have to guess again, for the minister soon said that the judgment did not take place at death, because men's influence as well as deeds are to be judged, and their influence does not cease at death.

True, it would require long research to find for a certainty why God meant so differently from what he said; yet I think this plan would succeed in allaying any desire "to study the Bible, because of the uncertainty as to what God did really mean, when he did not mean what he said. But, seriously, did we not get interested in the Bible when we ignored its mystical interpretation? Did not our hearts burn within us when we understand that blessed promise of God to Abraham, and its relation to us and its glorious results? Blessed be God, it set my heart all aglow. And when I was satisfied to a moral certainty that God would not torment the wicked forever, but rather destroy them, O how my heart did exult in him. Never before, it seemed to me, did I so love God and his truth.

When the people's hearts become good mediums for the Spirit of God (not the spirits of dead folks), and when they ignore the mystical interpretation of the Bible, and take God at his word, then will they love to study it.

JESUS, DEAR, I COME TO THEE.

Jesus, dear, I come to thee,
Thou hast said I may;
Tell me what my life should be,
Take my sins away.
Jesus, dear, I learn of thee,
In thy word divine,
Every promise there I see,
May I call it mine?
CHORUS.—Jesus, hear my humble song,
I am weak, but thou art strong;
Gently lead my soul along,
Help me come to thee.

Jesus, dear, I long for thee,
Long thy peace to know,
Grant those purer joys to me,
Earth can ne'er bestow.
Jesus, dear, I cling to thee,
When my heart is sad,
Thou wilt kindly speak to me,
Thou wilt make me glad.

Jesus, dear, I trust in thee,
Trust thy tender care;
There's a happy home for me,
With thy saints to share.
Jesus, I would come to thee,
Thou hast said I may;
Tell me what my life should be,
Take my sins away. [Selected.

PAY THY VOWS.

There are but very few persons, who have come to the years of accountability, but what have at some period of their lives made vows to God. In all probability, many of these vows are yet unpaid. The language, then, of the Psalmist comes home to such hearts with most solemn force,—"Pay thy vows." A vow is a solemn promise to God of doing some good thing, or abstaining from some evil thing, which he forbids. Anciently, vows were considered very sacred. It was looked upon as an enormous offence not to perform that which one had vowed. When a person had vowed a righteous vow, there was no release for him from that vow. Lev. 27: 28–29. It must be paid. It was far better not to vow, than to vow and not pay. Do we not suppose God will hold us just as responsible as he did those in the days of Moses? Let us hear what the wise man says: "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools. Pay that which thou hast vowed." Eccl. 5: 4.

Dear reader, have you not made vows to God? Do you not remember the anguish of that hour when you saw yourself a lost sinner in the sight of a holy and heart-searching God? Did you not pray and cry and groan, while you saw what a wretch you were, and how wickedly you had despised and set at naught the loving invitations of him who died for you? While you reflected, how black your life appeared. How you did reproach yourself. Did you not promise God then that if he would forgive your sins, and adopt you into his family, and give you his Spirit, you would give all to him, and serve him as long as you lived? Have you done it? or has your heart grown cold, and are you living in a careless, half-hearted manner? Are you awake and alive? Is everything on the altar? Are you doing all to the glory of God? if not, remember your promise. "Pay thy vows." Perhaps when you saw the light shining upon the prophetic page, and as you surveyed the world, you saw evidences which were conclusive to your mind that the coming of Jesus was at hand. Then you thanked God and promised him that you would live nearer to him than ever before; you would warn your friends, the church and the world of the soon coming judgment. Are you doing it? Is your heart full of the love of Jesus? Do you feel for sinners as you should? O if you are not where you should be, remember there is something wrong somewhere. Search your heart. Examine yourself. Pay your vows unto God.

O how rapidly the world is rushing on to the judgment, and what a multitude of vows there are in God's book of remembrance, which are yet unpaid. Soon the books will be opened, and every man judged according to the things written therein. O reader, is there a broken vow on that book against you? Have you promised to give God your heart, your time, your talent, a portion of your property, or anything you possess, and have you neglected to do it? O awake! reflect, think. Where are you? What are you doing? Remember God keeps an account. Soon thou shalt be judged according to thy deeds. O pay thy vows; prepare to meet God, and the crown of glory will be yours.

SON OF GOD vs. DEVIL.

OR,

THE FINAL DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

NUMBER NINE.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 JOHN 3: 8.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.—Continued.

4. In Isa. 26: 14, it is said, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Who are here spoken of? Not all the wicked, surely; but only a particular class of them; and nothing is here named that even alludes to the general resurrection of the wicked. Isaiah is here speaking of certain "lords" who had once ruled Israel; and therefore says, "Other lords beside thee have had dominion over us." Then he adds, but "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." That is, the "lords" spoken of who once "had dominion" over Israel;—"they are dead, they shall not live" to have "dominion" over God's people. The Lord Jehovah has made the "memory" of such "lords" to perish; so that Israel need not fear that "they" will ever have "dominion" over them again. In the closing part of this chapter (Isa. 26), the resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked is spoken of. The tenth verse speaks of the Lord's dead, as having a resurrection when Isaiah's dead body shall rise. And in verse 21, it is declared that "the earth also shall disclose her blood."

5. In Jer. 51: 39, the prophet says, "In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord." Here, again, nothing is said of the general resurrection of the wicked. The class here spoken of are Belshazzar, his princes, and others, who took "the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God, which was at Jerusalem," and "drunk in them." Dan. 5: 1–5. And while "they tasted the wine," they became drunken and sleepy. Hence, Jeremiah says, "In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake." Again, in Jer. 51: 57, 58,—"And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men; and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates burned with fire," etc. Thus we see that Babylon's "princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men" became "drunken" and sleepy; and the Lord's vengeance came upon them that night, and they were all slain; and thus they still sleep their perpetual, drunken sleep. They did not wake up from that drunken sleep, as drunken men usually do; neither could they ever wake themselves up from it, when death came and took them away in that state. This sleep must be a perpetual one, so far as they have any power to wake themselves. Hence, they are now in hades; but they will be "made alive" again, when "death and hell" (hades) deliver up the dead to be cast into the lake of fire: where they will be "destroyed both soul and body." And so all "objections" which can be raised against the resurrection of the wicked, will all vanish like dew before the sun, when carefully examined, and tested by the word of God.

Christ says, "For the hour (Greek hora—season or time) is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Here is where the "Son of God" will finish up his work in destroying "the works of the devil"; when "the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 8.

"The Son of God" will "destroy the works of the devil." O sinner, flee to Christ. He is your only Savior. Soon it will be too late. Hear the voice of warning. Mercy, lingers. What will your doom be, if a little longer you slight the invitation of the gospel? Remember, "the Son of God" will "destroy the works of the devil." If you are now in the family of Satan, escape for your life. In the family of Christ, you can have joy and peace while you here live, and in the world to come eternal life. "Life" and "death" are now set before you. Which will you choose? If you will have "life," then you must soon turn from the "way that leads to destruction," and follow Christ, the Son of God; for he is the only "way, the truth, and the life." How much better to love and serve God here, and live eternally in the kingdom of the Son of God, than to serve the enemy of your souls here, and finally be "destroyed both soul and body in gehenna fire." Life eternal is now offered. Christ is now interceding; the Holy Spirit is striving; angels are waiting; God's ministers are pleading; saints are praying. O say, sinner, will you have life eternal? "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." Life, life, eternal life! O sinner, seek it now, without delay! Amen. T. M. PREBLE.

PRUNING.

"They are much improved," said a skillful pruner, as he decended from his ladder, and viewed the fruit of his afternoon's labor upon the lofty maples and apple-trees, that adorned the front and side of the house. "Yes, vastly improved," exclaimed a voice from an upper verandah, overlooking the scene; but the ground beneath is all covered with rubbish. Yes, but a few hours labor will remove all this, and then a diligent use of the rake and broom will make all comely again. Then from a window on the other side of the house, how great was our surprise to view the long grape-arbor stripped of its last year's growth, and left quite bear except short vines carefully trained and tied on either side. Ah! we exclaimed, that year's growth seems all lost. No, the roots are strengthened, was our consolation, and one year's profitable growth really obtained. But, ah! why this superfluity? the arbor once beautifully covered, left now bare again? With sadness the reflection came, thus it is in nature, and thus it is in grace,—a great show for a little true advancement, yet the show must be made to gain the advance.

For instance, the sower must sow the seed "by the way side," and upon "stony places," and "among thorns," in order to secure its lodgment in the "good ground." The crooked, dead and superfluous branches must be brought forth to gain the straight and beautiful tree. The superabundant vine must be indulged and wisely disposed of in its time, to gain strength of vine sufficient to bear the delicious fruit. The ground must be covered with rubbish if the trees are relieved. Thus we must endure the evil if we would secure the good; the bitter if we would taste the sweet, even in things of this world; the pain if we would have the pleasure; the grief if we would have the joy.

So with the christian; he must suffer the persecution, if he would be pruned for the promised rest; he must fight the good fight of faith, if he would gain the victory, and "lay hold on eternal life"; he must shed the tears if he would have them wiped away; endure the sorrow and sighing if he would have it flee away; he must bear the cross if he would be ready for its removal to wear the crown.

But how many heads must be born to get the one to fill the last crown? How many groans from this "groaning creation" to get the shout of victory in the glorious restitution promised? But the last crown will soon be filled, the last groan soon uttered, and then, glory to God crowns the shout of VICTORY for ever. Amen. Alleluia.

Your Sister in hope,

BRAKEMEN.

Have we any brake-men? Such men are very important in their place and calling; without them there is no safety in running the train. The brake must have attention. Who will attend to it? The brake-men chosen for that purpose. By them the train is regulated. If going too fast, the brake is put on. When the alarm of danger is given, the brake-man's hand winds up the brake. At night, when darkness covers the land, it is the duty of the brake-man to light up the cars; and when cold, it is the duty of the brake-man to build the fires, fasten the train together when necessary, and unhitch when duty demands. It must be seen that importance is attached to this class of men.

When we apply this figure to the church of God, we see the need of such a class of men. The gospel train has been made up of persons that love Jesus' coming; and when this has been the great, absorbing question, the train has run well, until time was made a test; then the train ran too fast; then the brake-men were of use; and when any side issue has come along, and some have judged one another, and called each other hard names, and said of those that demurred from them, that they lacked common sense, etc., then put on the brakes; and when love begins to ebb out that always has held the train together, then the brake-men are called to build the fire of love in the room of paper covenants. The whistle of alarm is heard. Come now to church building, have your names all enrolled on the church-book, and organize yourselves into one body, as much as to say, We are not one body, have more union in the body, as much as to say we have not had it.

As the light of the coming of Jesus is ebbing out in the minds of many, and a spirit is rising high and fast to be something, or somebody, and like others who have run these trains on the same track, where pride and popularity can sit and smile; we ask where are the brake-men to light up the lamps, and give light to the train, that we may see where we are? Hands on the brake before we dash against the Mount of Honor. If we dash there, the fire will go out; the light will be gone. Those sincere bodies that arose from Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and others, from love to Mount Honor, have run their car to a stand, and are ready to sit down with any man that will pay one dollar for an oyster supper at their church fair. The track is laid, the train is preparing to go, where are the brake-men? Oh, will God give us light and love. Who will go in for trimming the lamps to meet the Bridegroom? Who is on the watch now? Where are the brake-men? Hands to the brake! ISRAEL DAMMON.

"BEHOLD, I COME AS A THIEF."

"Behold," saith the Lord Jesus, "I come as a thief"—that is, unexpectedly. "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up; therefore, be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, in the dead of night, when men are all fast asleep. So will the Lord Jesus come at a time when the world are altogether asleep in spirit—altogether unaware and thoughtless—none of them thinking of any such things at all—all just thinking that things are going on as usual, and will go on as usual for their time at least.

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, to find men unprepared. "For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marraige, until the day that Noah entered into the ark; and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, suddenly. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even to the west; so shall the coming of the Son of man be."

Solemn, awful, startling, words! full of comfort, indeed, to those who know and love the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior and their friend—"whose they are, and whom they serve"—but full of terror, alarm, destruction, and despair, to those who know him not and love him not.

To those who love him, and are looking for him, Christ will come to bring blessing and glory; to those who love him not, but love the world, and live for it, he will come to bring judgment and punishment.

Yes, there is an awful day coming for the world! Some morning, when all are going about their day's business or pleasure, just as usual, or some night, when people are asleep in their beds, or awake for deeds of darkness, when "the adulterer has waited for the twilight, saying, No eye shall see me," and thieves "in the dark break through houses which they marked for themselves in the day-time"—suddenly, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the heavens will open—a light brighter than the sun will make the noon-day look pale, or break in upon the darkness of the night—and "then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Then what will sinners do, when the angel's trumpet-blast shall resound through earth and heaven, and they shall feel in that tremendous moment that they have trifled too long, and that now it is too late, and all is lost for ever and ever.

For the World's Crisis.

"ANOTHER GOSPEL."

When reading "A general History of Free Masonry in Europe," written by Emmanuel Rebold, M. D., I found the following compend of Masonic Gospel, and transcribe it as one illustration of "another gospel," and so a sign of the times in which "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." pp. 62, 63.

"The mysteries of Freemasonry are but a resume of divine and human wisdom and morality,—that is to say, of all those perfections which, when practised, bring man nearest to God. Freemasonry of to-day is that universal morality that attaches itself to the inhabitants of all climes—to the men of every worship. In this sense, the Freemason receives not the law, he gives it; because the morality Freemasonry teaches is unchanging, more extended and universal than any native or sectarian religion can be; for these, always exclusive, class men who differ from them as pagans, idolaters, schismatics, heretics, or infidels; while Masonry sees nothing in such religionists but brothers, to whom its temple is open, that by the knowledge of the truth therein to be acquired they may be made free from the prejudices of their country, or the errors of their fathers, and taught to love and succor each other. Free-masonry decries error and flies from it, yet neither hates nor persecutes. In fine, the real object of this association may be summed up in these words: To efface from among men the prejudices of cast, the conventional distinctions of color, origin, opinion, nationality; to annihilate fanaticism and superstition; extirpate national discord, and with it extinguish the firebrand of war; in a word, to arrive, by free and pacific progress, at one formula or model of eternal and universal right, according to which each individual human being shall be free to develop every faculty with which he may be endowed, and to concur heartily and with all the fulness of his strength in the bestowment of happiness upon all, and thus to make of the whole human race one family of brothers, united by affection, wisdom, and labor.

Slowly and painfully does the highest condition of human knowledge accomplish its great revolution around the glittering axis of truth. The march is long, and since it began, nations and peoples have lived and died; but when that journey is accomplished, and the incarnation of truth, now robed but in its symbol, shall appear in all the splendor of its brilliant nudity, truth's torch shall then enlighten the world, the doctrine that has just been announced shall become the religion of all the people of the earth; and then, and not till then, will be realized that sublime ideal now mysteriously hidden in the symbol of Freemasonry. That day is, without doubt yet FAR DISTANT; but it will arrive. Its coming is marked by destiny, and in the order of the centuries. Already in the sacred balance of eternal justice, is seen each day to diminish a portion of the errors of the people, and to increase the body of light, of principle, and those truths which are preparing the way for its triumph, and which one day, will give assurance of its reign."

Thus our author foretells the advent of a Masonic Millenium; but admits that it is yet far distant, yet he assures us "it will arrive." Higher authority, however, assures us that Jesus will come first—come soon, and warning words bid us "beware, lest, being led away by the error of the wicked," we "fall from our own steadfastness." And again I say BEWARE. CHAS. P. DOW.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, March 10, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

It will be observed that this number closes the present volume. Now is the time to send the advance pay for the next. Now is a good time to obtain new subscribers. We hope to be able to make the next volume especially interesting to our readers. We trust none will drop our acquaintance.

INFIDELITY ADVANCING.

Those who cry "peace and safety," and tell the people that the world is growing better, must be blind leaders of the blind. Even the most careless observer, it would seem, cannot help seeing the rapid departure from the Bible and pure religion. It is true, there are a plenty of forms and ceremonies, but the real life of godliness is becoming scarce among professors of religion. They are fast turning among the crowd of unbelievers, who are daily growing stronger and bolder in their opposition to the plain truths of the Scriptures, and the necessity of believing and obeying them, in order to be saved. Men seem very anxious to be saved without coming to Jesus, and humbly asking him to forgive their sins, and lead them in wisdom's ways.

The Boston Traveller in substance asserts that there is not a large town or city in Massachusetts in which an audience of at least two thousand persons cannot be collected who would loudly applaud any speaker for ridiculing the Bible as containing inspired writings. Could this have been said forty years ago? The more Spiritualism spreads, the larger will be the number to "applaud" those who ridicule the divine inspiration of the Bible.

BIDDEFORD.

We spent Feb. 28th at Biddeford, and had a very interesting day. There is a deep interest to hear on the evidences that we are near the end of the present dispensation. It was said one hundred went away in the evening for want of room in the house. Two rose for prayers, one of whom, we trust, found peace. With the other we had no opportunity to converse. One was baptized, who bids fair to be a useful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. The prospect in Biddeford is very encouraging. While there, we had the pleasure of a visit with Bro. B. Emery, from Kennebunk Port. He is a faithful watchman, who loves the blessed hope, and is ever ready to proclaim the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming.

A NEW TRANSLATION.

In this paper will be found a notice of an "Interlinear Translation of the Sacred Scriptures," by Dr. L. Tafel. The following is from the specimen page, and is a word-for-word translation of Matt. 6 : 25:—"For this I say to you, not to be solicitous to the breath of you, what ye shall eat and what ye shall drink; nor to the body of you, what ye shall put on; not the breath more is of the nourishment, and the body of the raiment?"

The word rendered breath, in each place, is psuche, the only word rendered soul in the New Testament. It is rendered life in the common version in Matt. 6 : 25. The original word occurs one hundred and five times in the Grk. New Testament, and is translated life forty times. Nephesh, the corresponding Heb. word, is from a verb which signifies to breathe. We are glad to find the Dr. willing to give the real meaning of the original words in his "Interlinear Translation," without regard to the sectarian views of any denomination.

MUSIC.—We are always pleased to get good music for the Crisis. Sometimes we receive very nice pieces, but we are unable to use them, because they are secured by copyright, and the owners will not allow us the privilege of publishing them. But if any of our musical friends can secure us some choice, plain pieces of music, we should be very glad to put them in the Crisis.

The article headed, "A Sad Picture," contains facts and thoughts worthy of consideration by all the friends of Jesus. It is some source of comfort to know that there are those who are waking up to a sense of the peril of these last days. We hope they will be successful in awakening others.

THE CHRISTIAN AT WORK, is an interesting monthly, full of good things, and endued with the real spirit of christianity. It advocates free seats in the house of worship, and is opposed to the fashionable, mock religion of the day. It is ably conducted, and is the organ for the living christian element in the various evangelical churches. It has been published one year, and its circulation is now 75,000. It is published at 735 Broadway, New York. Price 60 cts. per year.

☞ INSTRUCTION.

Brethren sending appointments for the Crisis will please send on a separate slip from other business matters, and will write them after the following form, and save very much trouble:—

Boston, Mass., (Lowell St. Chapel), Sabbath, March 7th.
Densmore Hill, Vt., Sabbath, March 14th.
Concord, N. H., (Centre St.), Sabbath, March 14th.
Or, Concord, N. H., (Bethel), Sabbath, March 14th.

Write the town first, then the place in the town, then the time, and then it is ready for the compositor without altering or copying.

"THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT."

A few years since, Mr. Andrew Jackson Davis issued a work, entitled "144 Self Contradictions of the Bible." This work has passed through several editions, and been widely circulated by the Spiritualists and other opposers of the Bible. In the language of another, we would say, "It is considered the strong tower of skepticism." Mr. A. J. Davis, who published the work, was also editor of the Herald of Progress, in which we find the following, from one of his contributors:—

"Unless our judgment deceives us, the general reading of this work would oust from Christendom the last blind worshiper of the Bible, the contents of which are shown by this little tell-tale, to be a stupendous compound of contradiction and error. The most studious reader of the Bible will be astonished and overwhelmed at every step in going over these few pages to find how numerous and point-blank are the contradictions which fill the hitherto supposed God-given book."

Sister H. V. Reed, of Harvard, Ill., has given a brief, but successful review of the "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible," in a work entitled, "The Bible Triumphant." Price 50cts. For sale at the office.

We have been requested to present to our readers a review of the "144 Self-Contradictions." We have concluded to comply with their request, so far as we have opportunity, by giving extracts from the work of Sr. Reed. We purpose to begin with the new volume, next week.

PROSPECTS OF WAR IN EUROPE.

The war aspect in Europe is becoming more and more threatening. We do not believe Napoleon will be quiet much longer. He has not forgotten how Bismarck snubbed him in 1866. There is evidently a strong feeling in the bosom of the French Emperor against the Prussian power. Like coals covered with ashes, preserved during the night; so Napoleon has been smothering his real feelings for the past two years, till he was fully prepared to meet his foe in all situations. That time seems at hand. The following from the Boston Journal, March 4th, affords some clue to the state of things in Europe.

"WILL THERE BE WAR IN EUROPE? The New York Evening Post translates the following extract from a letter written by a distinguished statesman and jurist in Germany to a friend in New York. Its statements will be read with some surprise, but, coming from the source they do, they are worthy of consideration:

'In the meantime the war with France is steadily preparing. Napoleon III. labors most unequivocally toward it, and it seems that he is going to make the King of Italy his ally, despite the opposite sympathies and interests of the Italian people, who from France can only expect the rule of foreigners; from Germany, however, natural friendship. As a third ally, in the background, is Austria biding her time. The Emperor and Premier are bent on vengeance against Prussia. It is to be hoped that the Hungarians will exact a stop in that quarter. At the bottom, it is the clergy who stir the fire. The great question is Priestcraft and Cæsarism on the one hand and Germanic independence and liberty on the other. It will be bad indeed if we must make concessions to the Russians, who are still barbarians, in order to defend ourselves against the united Latin (Romanic) states, and the traitorous priests and princes in South Germany. As to the future, I am calm. It is impossible that Rome, rotton and absurd, shall again rule Europe, even if Pope and French Emperor are allied; but it will cost much blood, much wealth and the graves of many high-souled men. It is fortunate Grant will have entered the white House before the war, which will scarcely begin before the French elections in May. Grant's bearing will have great influence. If the Germanic world were as closely allied, but at the same time for liberty and unity, it would be a child's play to chastise the Latin people so that all their lust to rule the world again would be driven out forever. The Germanic element is not the ruling power of the world's situation, for the simple reason that, consistent with the principle of liberty, it divides in different directions and unites with more difficulty. The Latin people and the Celts easily subordinate themselves to centralism. Poor, intelligent centralism may be far more powerful in war than wealthy nations who enjoy liberty and representative government."

THE QUEEN OF ENGLAND.

We learn that some of the Queen's subjects are quite dissatisfied with her proceedings, and speak against her openly. We think there are but few in the world who could have filled her place as well.

The following from the London correspondent of the Boston Journal affords a clue to the feeling entertained by some toward their Queen:—

"It is said that the two most abused persons in the kingdom are Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The years of the Queen's mourning for her husband have been very long. The closing of the palaces, the absence of the pomp and show of royalty in the streets, the few visits of kingly and imperial persons from abroad, the few drawing rooms, the absence of levees, with the other paraphernalia of royalty, have, it is said, had a depressing influence on the trade of London. When the royal family drove out daily in Hyde Park, and the royal carriages driving back and forth through the streets of London, making the season so gay, and calling crowds of strangers to the city, merchants rubbed their hands with glee, and traders were joyful in their Queen. I never heard a word said against Her Majesty, as a daughter, wife, mother, sovereign or woman, till I came to this city. The worst things ever said in our country about public men, not excepting President Johnson, are not as scurrilous or as offensive as those openly spoken against the Queen of these realms. Her offences seem to culminate in her attachment to the famous John Brown. She is accused of holding a romantic passion for him. It is said that she believes that the spirit of Prince Albert takes possession of him, for Spiritualism is one of the offences charged on the Queen."

THINGS ARE CHANGING.

Forty years since, when a minister became a pastor of a church, it was expected he would remain for many years; there being but few exceptions to the rule; but now it is the opposite; but few remain only a short period. The Methodist says:—

"In several important towns within our knowledge, the ministers of the Methodist churches, though only in charge two or three years, lay claim to being the oldest pastors of the towns, showing that changes are very frequent in other churches, and are made sometimes under very unpleasant circumstances."

Why is this? The answer is easy to be given.

GERMAN TRACTS.

We have received from Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, the following German tracts, viz:—

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

Price by mail: Single copy, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents. Postage 4 cents. For sale at this office. AG'T.

☞ BOOK MARKS.

Some of our brethren have inquired where they could get these little pointers, ☞ for book marks to stick on the leaves of their Bibles, to point to the passages they want to refer to. For the accomodation of all such, we have some for sale at the office. Price, a card of twelve for 25cts. AG'T.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—We understand Bro. Hook had a very interesting meeting in the Theatre again last Sabbath. Interest good. Large turnout. Many intelligent people re heard to remark,—"That is old-fashioned religion." He is to be there again next Sabbath. Pray for him.

JUST WHAT IS NEEDED.

We have long desired an interlinear translation of the Bible. Mr. A. J. Tafel, of Philadelphia, has undertaken the work, on a plan similar to that of the Emphatic Diaglott. We take pleasure in bringing it to the notice of our readers. The following prospectus will give some idea of the work:—

The undersigned has in preparation a translation of the Old and New Testament Scriptures, for the use of students of the Bible, and especially of those who wish to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the original languages in which the Holy Word was written,—upon the following plan:

(I.) Above each word of the Hebrew, Chaldee and Greek texts will be placed an English equivalent, which shall render its fundamental meaning and grammatical function in such a manner as to enable any one familiar with English grammar to analyze every sentence of the foreign language.

(II.) In addition to the original meaning of the words, their derivative significations will be given, whenever it may seem necessary; together with grammatical and other notes illustrative of the more difficult expressions and passages.

(III.) In order to enable the reader to pronounce correctly, in the first Greek Part, as well as in the first Hebrew, and in Chaldaic, beneath each word will be noted its accent and pronunciation,—the rules laid down by Webster being adopted as far as possible. In the subsequent parts, the pronunciation of words which did not before occur, will be given separately in the margin.

The Hebrew and Greek alphabet, together with Webster's pronunciation key, will also accompany the first numbers.

(IV.) In order that the student may seasonably acquire a knowledge of the prototypes of the later (as well as the older) Hebrew and of the Chaldaic, the Books of Ezra and Daniel will appear immediately aftea the Third Part of the Old Testament.—Thus the student may early become acquainted with the new element which was introduced into the later Hebrew.

(V.) A succinct Chaldaic and Hebrew Grammar will also be given; together with a synopsis of the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic Verbs and Nouns. This (of which, in our Essay on Semitic Comparative Philology, published in the Bibliotheca Sacra, July 1862, we have already presented some outlines) will be published as an Appendix, and separately paged; so that it may afterwards be bound up with the "Notes," in a volume by itself.

(VI.) The Text and Translation of the New Testament will be issued in seven or eight parts, that of the Old Testament in twenty or twenty-one parts. Each part will contain 160 large octavo pages, and 15 or 20 pages of the "Notes."

(VII.) The whole will be published, by subscription, by A. J. Tafel, No. 48 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa., to whom all communications should be addressed.

DR. LEONARD TAFEL, Philadelphia, Pa.

The following is the publisher's notice:—

As soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained the work will be commenced, and it is expected that every two months a Part will be issued.

The Parts will be published alternately, beginning with the Greek.

No labor or expense will be spared to bring out the work in elegant and substantial style.

As an inducement we offer to every one sending the names of six subscribers, a seventh copy free.

Due notice will be given on the completion of each one of the successive Parts to every subscriber, when, on remitting the stipulated price, the respective Parts will be served by return mail. A. J. TAFEL, Publisher, 48 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. P. O. Box 2332.

Specimen pages will be sent to any one on application to Mr. Tafel.

YEA, OR NAY?

Bro. Miller said, after 1843 passed, that he thought it might be as long after that time before the Lord would come, as the children of Israel sojourned in the wilderness. I do not endorse this view, though no one can disprove it. It argues a great weakness of mind to say that a thing is true, because it cannot be proved wrong. J. S. WHITE.

MINISTERIAL WANTS.

He who proclaims in purity the truths of the gospel in new fields is often called to pass through many fiery trials; trials, too, that are little understood, save by the families of those who pass through them. If a minister has the courage to attack sin in high places, and to condemn the popular theories of the day, he may expect in new fields to receive little for the support of his family. On the contrary, he may expect any amount of opposition. He may expect to have his views misrepresented, and to be called all manner of hard names. He may also expect occasionally to be called upon to defend or maintain his positions in public discussion; and he may expect sometimes to meet "big guns," who will make use of every means in their power to make him appear ridiculous. One of their peculiar cries is, "Ignoramus." If they can succeed in making the people believe that "no scholar would advocate that doctrine," a great point is gained. And if the D. D. happens to know a little Hebrew or Greek, what a display he makes, especially if you happen to be ignorant of these languages.

Now I know of a minister, who is often called upon to combat error in public discussion; and he much needs the Englishman's Hebrew Concordance and a Hebrew Lexicon; but he is utterly unable to buy them. He labors mostly in new fields, where the friends of truth, as we understand it, are few and isolated; and he thinks that he is doing well if he can manage to support his family with his own manual labor and pinching economy. Of course he has no money to spare from his family.

Shall he not have the books? Let every brother and sister send five or ten cents as a contribution to Bro. Grant, to purchase the books that this brother needs, and make his heart glad, and strengthen his hands in spreading the cause of truth. Attend to this matter at once. Contribute as the Lord hath prospered you, and if more is contributed than is needed to purchase the Concordance and the Lexicon, let it go to the Tract Fund. Contribute, and may the Lord bless you. Amen.

D. W. GREEN.

We hope this call will be heeded. The books which that poor, but intelligent preacher so much needs, will cost about $30. It will probably be necessary to send to London, England, for the Concordance. It will give the dear Bro. great joy. Shall he have the books to equip him for the warfare against the powers of darkness? He is one of the ablest contributors to the columns of "our paper."

Perhaps some liberal soul will give the whole amount, and make the brother's heart glad at once.

For the World's Crisis.

SHALL WE DO IT?

Dear Christian brethren of Orleans and Niagara counties, N. Y.:—Shall we engage Evangelists to employ their time in preaching the gospel, having regular appointments within our bounds? Here are a number of localities where the the gospel of the kingdom has been preached through the efficient labors of Brn. C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner, H. L. Hastings, P. A. Smith, J. Wendell, and others. We have been edified and instructed, and the communities about us enlightened. Shall we make a united effort for the advancement of the cause of Christ in this part of the Lord's vineyard? Brethren are invited to correspond with Warren Burnham, Wolcottville, N. Y., with reference to this, and if thought expedient, we will meet to confer on the subject. WARREN BURNHAM.

FROM ROCHESTER.

BRO. GRANT:—Bro. Thurber closed his labors with us last Sabbath evening. Truly we have enjoyed a rich feast since he has been with us, and good has been done in the name of the Lord of hosts; to him be all the praise. We have had some adverse influences to contend with, and it seemed as though the enemy had strained every nerve in order to accomplish his end, and scatter God's dear children to the four winds; but glory to God, victory has turned on the side of the church, and we feel more determined than ever to work the work of God, however crossing it may be, and have that love that suffereth long and is kind, and which will work no ill to his neighbor. O, my Lord, give us more of it, is my prayer. We should have been glad to have kept Bro. Thurber longer, but duty called in other places.

The church has been enabled to come up on to high ground, and "to lay aside every weight, and the sins that so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us in the gospel; looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." Our hearts have been encouraged to see a goodly number come forward for prayers, and to see backsliders coming back to Father's house, where there is enough and to spare. There are some fifteen or twenty that will go forward in baptism the first opportunity. Probably more good might have been accomplished, had it not been that we were obliged to move our place of worship, on account of many that became alarmed in regard to the safety of our hall. It so disarranged us for awhile, that a great many went to other places of worship who had become interested in our meetings. The Lord bless them, and save them and us in his glorious kingdom, which is soon to come.

We parted with our dear Bro. T. Monday evening with reluctance, and could not suppress the tears from coursing down our cheeks as we took the parting hand; but amid it all felt to rejoice that parting scenes are almost over. We must be a tried people, and the quicker we get into the crucible the better; then we shall come forth as gold tried in the fire, fit for the Master's use. Pray for us. Yours in hope, N. MCCULLOCK.

OFFICIAL CORRECTION.

BRO. GRANT:—It would seem to devolve on us to say a word in explanation of the report of the Ministerial Conference, as it has called forth through the Crisis some correction from some of the Brn. who withdrew from it, and still another asks for correction.

Soon after the organization of Conf., the question of church organization was brought forward for discussion, in which several members took an active part, prominent among whom was Bro. H. B. Sevey. The discussion was conducted in kind feeling, and from the remarks of Bro. Sevey on that occasion, we think every attentive listener in conference will read with much surprise his objection to the report; but we are too well acquainted with Bro. Sevey to attribute the discrepancy to anything more serious than a confused state of mind on church organization, to which some others are liable. After Bro. Sevey was dismissed, Bro. I. Damman requested his dismission, having during the discussion declared his decided dissent from us on church organization, and the reception of the money from the mob, saying he wished to enjoy his own opinion, and express his own views on these points; and he was dismissed. After this, and during some discussion on these points, Bro. J. R. Hall requested his dismission for the reasons given by Bro. Damman; hence the report as it is. Had Bro. Hall given his reasons in his own language, no mistake would have occurred; but he (we are glad to say) has requested us to say, through the Crisis and Voice, that he is not opposed to church organization, and that his views on that point are unchanged; this we cheerfully do, believing he has taken the proper mode of correction. Yours for the truth,

C. GOUD, President.
L. F. COLE, Sec'y.

LETTER FROM BRO. D. D. REED.

To the saints of God scattered abroad: As you have not heard from me for some time, I thought I would let you know that I am still alive. During the fore part of the winter I was in Minneapolis, helping the brethren in building a house to preach the true gospel in. They will have a nice house when done. It will be sixty feet long, and thirty-six wide. I am now at a place called Crow Wing, about twenty-five hundred miles up the Mississippi, away out on the frontier. When I first came, I went about seven miles right straight into the big woods, and preached the coming of Christ in the Indian wigwam. Some of the Indians understand English. One of the Indians said, "I be one good man; any man say I was not, he lie."

Last Sunday, I preached in this place—Crow Wing—drawn part of the way by a big dog. That is the way the Indians travel in this country. They came to my meeting Sunday drawn by dogs; sometimes by three dogs, one hitched on ahead of the other. There are a great many half-breeds here, French and Indian, and some Americans. They understand both the Indian and our language, so I can preach to them, and make them understand. I should think there were some fifty houses in Crow Wing. There was a half-breed Indian let me have his house to preach in Sunday. It was a very large room. It would hold about one hundred. In the afternoon, I preached on the inheritance, and showed them that God was going to give them this land back again, if they would repent and forsake their sins, and love our Savior Jesus Christ. I preached again in the evening, on the resurrection. I had a good congregation, some French, some Indians, some half-breeds, some Americans. They gave me the best attention. I had great liberty, and I believe God's Holy Spirit was in the congregation. One Indian told me he liked it first rate. I thanked them for their good order and attention. I told them I would be there again next Sunday, and preach on the kingdom of God. I told them that I would bring my big chart, and hang it up, and let them see the kingdoms of this world, and I would explain it to them. I expect a big crowd.

This is the first Advent preaching that was ever in these regions. Some told me it was no use to come here, the place was so wicked; but I do not believe it. I feel that my place is to go ahead and break up, and then let the hailstones fly. I am scattering tracts all over this country. When I return to Minneapolis, I will send the money for those tracts, and then I shall want a great many more. God bless you. In hope of life, D. D. REED.

SR. A. E. SMITH.

To the Editor of the "World's Crisis":—By the interposition of Divine providence the labors of Sr. Anna E. Smith, of the Star of Hope Mission, are suspended for the present, and I fear for some weeks, if not months to come. She came to this place on the 23d inst., to fulfill her appointment, laboring under a severe influenza, with her physical strength exhausted. After her lecture (which was highly appreciated by the audience), she came to my home, took her bed, to which she has been confined ever since; and while it is to be hoped that she will be able soon to return to her field of labor, in which her whole heart and hands are engaged, and through whose instrumentality many poor and degraded of God's creation have been raised from degradation, vice and misery, to become the followers of their Savior; it is hoped that the support of the Mission will not be forgotten by its friends in her absence. A greater effort will be needed to continue its operations, for its accustomed support, in a measure, must fail by her sickness. Her appointments must from necessity be withdrawn. Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I have recived four packages of tracts from you, and the $25 from Bro. W. Baker, and some papers and tracts from parties unknown. I cannot expect much from the brethren, as almost all of God's people are poor, and the different calls for help, public and private, are in so many directions; taking all this into consideration, I have been well cared for. I think that the $25 from Bro. Baker will meet my wants until Feb. 1st; therefore, if I do not have any to leave here with, if I can keep my health, I can make out as I have previously. It don't cost much in the country, scarcely any thing, though the people are very poor, hard run for a living, bad crops, since the war have kept the most of them unable to rebuild, and support a minister; therefore, many of the preachers have to do as St. Paul did, preach and support themselves. A colored preacher told me that he had recieved but fifty cents from his church in several months. There is plenty of work to do, but the cry is, no money. I am told that many promise, but seldom pay. Sometimes I think that I am not doing much good, and I had better leave the work for somebody else who is more competent in this way, but how could I content myself, knowing the terror of the Lord and the wages of sin? No, I could not, if I had both the Indies for my own, and saw men traveling the broad road to perdition, for it would be nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit. I have begun late, and I hope I may never become a stumbling-block to any one, but daily take up my cross and make my calling and election sure.

I would not have asked for the tracts, but I felt that the brethren had such that they had read and laid aside, had no further use for and would be glad to dispose of them to the extension of the divine cause. I would be glad to abide here longer, as there is such a mass of mind to act upon, and so many more can be influenced in such a place than where the population is sparse; but the Lord knows best, and will meet all necessities to them that walk uprightly and are called for his purpose.

Any one might suppose I was having a pretty hard life of it. I answer, is not rest sweet? None but those who labor know any thing about it. A good appetite is the best of sauce. Then if we hunger and thirst after righteousness, we have the promise of being filled. And the Bible affirms that he si kept "in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on" God, for he promised to guide the meek in wisdom and to teach them his way. O may it ever be our cry, Lord, guide us into all truth, and bring us at last to the rest that remaineth for thy people. He that lives without Christ in the world has nothing, let him possess what he may, for the Scriptures declare that he is poor, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked. O, what an awful condition to live in; still I once inhabited those grounds, and thought then I was as good as any body. O, I hope I shall never cease to praise God that I was permitted to hear the truth in Rochester. It was there I was awakened to my true condition. Those I thought to be my enemies have proved to be my friends. May God be praised forever.

I think to continue here until the 12th of Feb. Bro Baker and friends have not only my thanks, but prayers, that the good Lord may recompense you all, and crown us at last with infinite love. My health is good, except a cold. We are having Indian summer with us here. Every thing is moving on peaceably since the election.

Yours in much love,
Dec. 7th, 1868. J. B. WADSWORTH.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps you and the brethren and sisters would be glad to hear from Bro. Spaulding. Well, I have not written for a good while. I have been feeble, infirm, and depressed in spirit, rather a burden to myself and thought I was to others. But a change has come over me. I have been revived in my mind. The hypocondria has left me. Yes, and Satan has left me for a season. He has tempted me year after year to self-destruction; but by the grace of God I have come off more than conqueror, through him that loved me. Blessed be the Lord, I yet live to praise him, and declare his truth. I know death cannot praise God, and those that go down to the grave cannot declare his truth. The living, the living, they can praise God asI do to-day. Yes, I feel well both in body and mind, free from depression of spirit, free from temptation.

My hope has brightened up and is like an anchor to my soul sure and steadfast, and it enters to that within the vail. I seem to enjoy the light of God's countenance shining upon my mind. I feel a sense of his approbation. I feel united with Jesus, and know that my Redeemer liveth; and that I shall stand with him one day upon the earth; and though worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh I shall see God. O yes, the doctrine of the resurrection is glorious to me. It is heart-cheering, soul-inspiring to me. I believe it, I love it, I expect to witness it. Yes, the first resurrection (or as Paul says, the "better resurrection") I hope to enjoy, that I may experience no second death.

My general health is good, but age has brought on many infirmities and weaknesses My feet, which used to be like hind's feet, are tender, sore and numb; and I have strong symptoms of the paralysis, and expect I shall have to lie down in the grave soon, and I am not at all afraid, disturbed or alarmed. No, I feel a perfect submission to the will of my heavenly Father. Let him do with me as seemeth him good. I shall not sleep long in the grave before the morning of the resurrection will come, and the voice of the archangel's trump will wake me up, and I shall come forth satisfied with Christ's likeness, shall see him as he is, be with him, and like him, and enjoy the society of saints and angels. Yes, and walk the golden streets, and drink of the pure river; go in and out at the pearly gates, and range the verdant fields of the restored earth; eat of the fruit of every tree, and especially the twelve kinds which grow on the tree of life. Yes, I believe in the resurrection of all things spoken of by the prophets; a resurrection of man by a resurrection into the image of God; a restitution of the earth and of animals, so that God's original plan shall be carried out, and the earth become the glorious kingdom of God, when the just shall reign with Jesus Christ forever.

"O glorious hope, O blest abode,
I shall be near and like my God."

Then shall I be free from the infirmities of weak human nature; yes, and free from the temptations of Satan.

"A hope so much divine, may trials well endure."

One word to my scattered brethren and sisters. Live out your religion; be living epistles known and read of all men; love as brethren, be pitiful; be kind, be courteous, study the things which make for peace, and try to edify each other. Keep your minds open to conviction, there is much to learn; be growing in knowledge as well as grace: keep your eyes open to the signs of the times, which show plainly Jesus' coming is nigh.

Your Brother, B. SPAULDING.
Chelmsford, Mass. Feb. 28th, 1869.

From Bro. G. S. Sheldon.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to state through the columns of the Crisis that Bro. J. Dixon, of R. I., has been laboring with us for the last five weeks, and that his labors have been blessed of the Lord. A number have turned from dumb idols to serve the living and the true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. The careless have been awakened, the church edified and strengthened, and quite an interest awakened among outsiders, which, I trust, will result in further good. Bro. Dixon, by his untiring efforts to promote the cause of Christ, his ardent desire for the welfare of the church, as evinced by his visiting from house to house the members of the flock, and ministering to the sick, has endeared himself to the hearts of this people; and it was with regret that we parted with him. Many are anxious for his return.

Your Bro. in Christ,
G. S. SHELDON.
New Britian, Ct., Feb. 27th, 1869.

Brom Bro. C. W. Low.

BRO. GRANT:—My physical health has been poor the past winter, but my spiritual health has been good. Jesus, and the doctrine of his second coming, is precious to my soul. I am looking beyond the sorrows and afflictions of my present earth-home, to the bright and beautiful home of painless rest. To my mind, all things indicate the soon coming of Christ, and when he comes to judge the world in righteousness, I want to possess a moral and spiritual character that will prevent me from falling out of life—out of being. I long to see my dear Savior and be made like him, and go up to meet him in the air and thus be forever with him.

Your Bro. in Christ, C. W. LOW.

From Bro. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—I believe all the Church order that the New Testament teaches, and have for years, and hope to while I live. May God give me grace to believe and practice the same till Jesus comes.

The Lord is converting souls in Holden, Me. Praise God for his goodness. Backsliders are participating also in reclaiming grace. I. DAMMAN.

Obituaries.

RICHARDSON. On the 27th day of January, 1869, Mary Richardson, wife of John Richardson, fell asleep in Christ at Lawrence, Mass., aged sixty-nine years.

Sr. Richardson was born in Bridgewater, Mass. and removed in childhood with her parents to Winthrop, Maine. At the age of seventeen years she was converted, and united with the Christian church, and two years later gave her heart and hand to the companion of her joys and sorrows, with whom for fifty years she walked the pilgrim's path. For more than forty years their home was a home and resting-place for the pilgrim saints of God, who there found repose for their toils, and refreshment for their journeyings.

In 1843, while residing in Brunswick, Me., Bro. and Sr. Richardson embraced the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, and thenceforward their faces were turned towards the day of redemption, when the Savior shall come to gather home his saints.

Her disease was consumption, and for five months she was a feeble sufferer. A few hours before her death, when asked if she was resigned to die, she said, "It is a great deal to say, but I believe I can say it." Near the time of her death, she repeated the lines:

"O Jesus, my Savior, to thee I submit,
With love and thanksgiving fall down at thy feet
In sacrifice offer my soul, flesh and blood,
Thou art my Redeemer, who brought me to God."

She died in peace at last, calmly as an infant sinks to rest, attended by her husband and her children, whom she had trained and guided in the fear of God, and who were one in faith and hope with their father and mother, whom they have honored to the end.

She was borne to Auburn, Me., to rest among the graves of her kindred, and words of comfort were spoken to the surviving friends by Rev. D. B. Randall, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. Her friends sorrow not as those who have no hope, but calmly wait for the day of resurrection, and glorification, and reunion, when Christ who is our life shall appear, and gather all his chosen to the paradise of God.

"There none shall beckon us away,
Nor bid our festival be done;
Our meeting time, the eternal day;
Our meeting place, the eternal throne.
There, hand in hand, firm linked at last,
And heart to heart, enfolded all,
We'll smile upon the troubled past,
And wonder why we wept at all."

NEEDHAM. Died in Tongonoxie, Kansas, Jan. 24th, Eld. George Needham, aged fifty-three years.

Bro. Needham was one of the first to embrace the evidence of our Savior's soon coming, in connection with the labors of Bro. Miller. He was an able preacher of the gospel. He had piety combined with manhood, which made him a man in his religion. Possessing large conscientiousness, with corresponding qualities, he was governed by sound principle and strict moral integrity. He was quick to see the right and the wrong, and had the manliness on all occasions to approve the one and condemn the other. He was open, frank, and reliable. He made principle everything, utterly detesting policy. With him was no mask of hypocrisy. These traits of character coming in contact with their opposites were the occasion, not the cause, of some severe trials through which he sometimes passed.

It will be remembered by many that Bro. Needham was located for a time in several places in this vicinity; in Albany, N. Y., Worcester, Mass., and Providence, R. I. From the latter place he removed to Illinois, where he remained about sixteen years. He ever maintained his faith, and a strict regard for truth and right. He has left a family to mourn their loss. May the blessing of heaven rest upon and abide with them.

J. S. WHITE.

BAHLER. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 9th, Mrs. Emma Bahler, wife of John F. Bahler, aged twenty-seven years.

The subject of this notice became interested in the blessed hope about one year ago, under the labors of Eld. Miles Grant, was baptized, united with the church, and lived a consistent christian until her death. She leaves a dear husband and one child to mourn her loss. Bro. Bahler is blind, and had never seen his companion in this world, but is full in the faith that he shall see her in the world to come. The church deeply sympathize with him in his bereavement. The funeral services were held in the City Hospital, where a large congregation assembled. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, founded on Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians, 4: 18,—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

S. W. THURBER.

KINGSLEY. Died in Westerly, R. I., of hemorrhage of the lungs, Bro. Samuel C. Kingsley, in the forty-first year of his age.

For a number of years Bro. Kingsley has been a great sufferer in body, all of which he bore with the fortitude and patience of a Christian. A number of years since he embraced the "blessed hope" of the speedy coming of Christ, and the resurrection of them that sleep in him to eternal life and glory at his coming. This hope he held fast to the end.

His funeral services were attended by the writer, assisted by Bro. E. R. Wood, at Lafayette, R. I., the place of his former residence. May the blessings of the "widow's God, and the Father of the fatherless" abide upon this stricken household.

A. DURFEE.

BROWN. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the lungs, Feb. 19th, 1869, Bro. John Brown, aged sixty-seven years, eight months, and five days.

Many years did he live in hope of Jesus' speedy coming, and of seeing him as he is, and being like him. His aged wife and children mourn not as those that have no hope. They do believe that Jesus died and rose again; hence those that sleep in Jesus will God bring from sleep with Christ. "Be ye also ready," is the lesson taught. May all the friends be wise.

B. P. STEVENS.

JOHNSON. Died in Plainville, Conn., Feb. 21st, 1869, our beloved Bro. Hiram L. Johnson, aged thirty-four years and six months.

He formerly resided in New Britain. For seven years he had been an humble, devoted follower of Jesus. A self-sacrificing zeal had characterized his whole christian life, and that hope that had been his stay in health became his comfort in sickness, and lit up his countenance with a heavenly smile of joy and resignation. His death was that "of the righteous," leaving behind the most positive evidence of future life and blessedness. He "sleeps in Jesus," to "awake in his likeness." An afflicted wife and little son are left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father, but not to sorrow "as those which have no hope." Funeral attended by the writer.

W. N. PILE.

BOND. Died at Waltham, Feb. 18th, Maria J. Foster Bond, wife of Rev. H. F. Bond, and daughter of the late Dea. Gideon Foster, of Charlestown, aged forty-three years.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, March 5. The English and French journals mainly eulogize Gen. Grant's inaugural address, and argue that the paragraph on the foreign policy indicates peace.

SPIRITUALISM IN ENGLAND. The London correspondent of the Times devotes a considerable portion of a recent letter to the statement of some very extraordinary alleged spiritual manifestations, and the following extract will show that the London people have in these manifestations a sensation marked enough for even the metropolis of the British kingdom:

"At this moment, next to the Ritualist controversy, I am inclined to think that the most exciting topic in London society is Spiritualism. It has even been brought into the new philosophical society, the Dialutical, which has several young Lords among its members, if no elderly soap boilers. Making a call in Paternoster row the other morning, I met a barrister of some literary and scientific as well as legal reputation and social position, who gave me an account of some recent manifestations in the presence of Mr. Home, which have been witnessed by a hundred or more noblemen and literary and scientific notabilities, and which are more astounding than anything which has happened, perhaps, for centuries. Passing over the usual manifestations, such as raising of heavy bodies, playing on locked pianos, or so that the keys can be seen to move without fingers, I come to three or four distinct manifestations, the testimony to which is very difficult to get over. My informant is a man in every way reliable, and the other witnesses, whose names have been confidentially given me, not only belong to the highest circles of politics and society, but are men eminently capable of forming a correct judgment. These, then, are the facts related. In several instances the body of Mr. Home has been elongated by measurement upon the wall and lying on the floor, to the extent of eight or nine inches, and then shortened as much—making a carefully measured difference of a foot and a half. He has been at different times raised into the air from the height of four feet to that of a higher ceiling, and carried round the room in the clear view of all present, who have had the means of assuring themselves that no deception was possible. He was carried horizontally out of a window in the third story of the house of Lord ——, and brought in at the window of another room, some thirty feet distant, having been carried through the air forty feet or more from the ground. Finally, he has on several occasions taken a live coal from a coal fire, held it in his hand, and laid it the hands of other persons, without even the smell of fire, or the sensation of heat being perceived by them. My informant showed me where his own finger had been burned in testing the reality of this manifestation. He assured me that he had seen Mr. Home go to a large coal fire and lay his face upon the white hot coals, without even singing his hair or beard.

The last statement, which certainly is a pretty strong one, is supported by the testimony of S. C. Hall, the editor of the Art Journal, and numerous other persons, who are vouched for as men not very likely to be imposed upon.—Journal.

Passing Events.

☞ There is a very serious famine at St. Barthelemy, the only Swedish colony in the West Indies. Scores of people are dying of starvation, and an urgent appeal has been made to the Swedish Government for relief. Hurricanes and drouths have destroyed the crops, and the condition of the island and its inhabitants is pitiable in the extreme.

☞ There is no Bourbon left on a throne. The Count of Chambord is an exile in Austria; the Duke of Orleans, ditto in London; Queen Isabella, ditto in France; the claimant to the Spanish succession and the title of Charles Sixth, ditto in Austria; Francis II., late King of Naples, ditto in Rome.

☞ The snow in Canada lies on the railroad in some places thirty feet deep. No trains have left Montreal for three days, and no mails have been received at Ottawa from the West for a week. The mails from the East are still carried to Ottawa in sleighs.

☞ The Czar's health is greatly impaired. Three years, it is said, have wrought a great change in him, and his once handsome face shows that his cares are too weighty for him.

☞ Convicts arrive at Sing Sing of late at the rate of eight per day, and all the cells, 1200 in number, are full, and they contain two.

☞ The British House of Lords contains now 30 Catholic members, and the lower house 38. Of the barons belonging to the upper aristocratic circles 50 are Catholics.

☞ A Russian letter says the Empres Carlotta has been for the last two months in a calm state, and has become extremely inactive. Often she does not get up at all, but passes two days in bed.

☞ The imported sparrows which a New York gentleman was kind enough to give that city some months ago, have increased and multiplied until now there are three large colonies in the city, if not more. If what was predicted of them is true, few worms will live out their days on the city trees hereafter.

☞ An oak tree was recently cut in Candia, N. H., which was four feet in diameter and measured four tons of ship timber. It had a hollow wherein eighty pounds of honey were found.

☞ Boston manufactures more furniture than any other city in the United States. It is exported to all parts of the country.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ CORRESPONDENTS SHOULD KNOW THAT WE CANNOT DISCONTINUE OR SEND THEIR ORDERS, UNLESS THEY GIVE US THE POST OFFICE AND STATE IN PLAIN LETTERS.

☞ BRO. W. F. SCHWILK—We have not yet received any information on the subject.

☞ M. G. S.—It was sent March 8th. Hope to hear soon.

☞ MRS. S. BROWN—We extend your credit two years.

☞ J. M. MATTS—The $1.84 was only for the books.

☞ HATTIE M. SHACKLEY—Money received and paper sent to your address.

"CAST ALL YOUR CARE ON HIM."

O come to Jesus, weary one,
Whate'er the load you bear;
Before the cross just lay it down,
And trust it to his care.

Nor cast it down to take again,
But sweetly leave it there;
He knows your every grief and pain,
And will not spurn your prayer.

Leave there the anxious weight of care
For dear ones far away;
His watchful love is everywhere,
Though dangers crowd the way.

Leave there foreboding thoughts of ill;
Believe his promise sure,
Whose loving kindness surely will
All needful good secure.

Ye hearts bereaved, o'ercast with gloom,
O come with all your grief,
And he who wept o'er Lazarus' tomb
Will give you sweet relief.

Lay down a burdened, sinful heart,
Repent and be forgiven;
Life, joy and peace will he impart,
Who died to purchase heaven.

There is no care too great or small
For his exhaustless love;
On him then freely cast it all,
And look in faith above. [Selected.

MIRACLES--THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE PAST.

It is thought by many, that the day of miracles is passed; that it is not the will of God that miracles should be wrought now, but that these wonderful manifestations of the Spirit only followed the apostles; and as some say, for the confirmation of the covenant which was one week or seven years. Dan. 9: 27. But we find the apostle places the gift of working miracles in the church as late as A. D., 59; and when Jesus Christ gave his last commission to his ministers, he gave promise of miraculous power, without intimating it was to cease with the apostles. Again, the historian Gibbon shows these gifts were in the church as late as the latter part of the second century; and that "the Deity suspended the laws of nature for the service of religion," etc. He also shows that the church possessed power to cast out demons and heal the most dire diseases. He then adds,—"But the miraculous cure of diseases of the most inveterate, or even preternatural kind, can no longer occasion any surprise, when we recollect that in the days of Irenæus, about the end of the second century, the resurrection of the dead was very far from being esteemed an uncommon event; that the miracle was frequently performed on necessary occasions, by great fasting and the joint supplication of the church of the place; and that the persons thus restored by their prayers had lived afterwards among them many years." (Gibbon's History of the Roman Empire vol. 1, page 540.)

Mr. Wesley says, these gifts were in the church until Constantine's day, at which time wealth and honor were bestowed upon the church and clergy, and they lost their spiritual power, possessing no more than the heathen about them. These, with other arguments which might be adduced, are, to my mind, cogent reasons for believing it to be the weak faith of the church, why these gifts are not manifested as formerly. But if all God's children cannot see alike relative to the Divive will, in bestowing the gift of tongues, and power to expel demons, etc., I trust all will concede this point, that it is for those who live "at the time of the end" to exercise "the prayer of faith," as it evidently is when the "Judge standeth at the door" that the direction is given to those who are sick, to "call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." James 5: 14.

But, says the objector, then christians need never die. No, not if the elders can get the faith. But it is certain that the apostles could not heal all, if so, why did Paul leave Trophimus at Miletum sick? I know quite a number who have tested the virtue of this command, and been raised up from a sick bed, praising God for his divine faithfulness.

About twenty years since, within the precincts of New England, a dear little girl of six summers, possessing remarkable mental and moral powers, was very sick with scarlet fever. The best medical skill and care were employed in her behalf. But in spite of all that love and skill could devise, she kept sinking lower and lower, until her physician relinquished all hope, and gave her up to die. "The man of God" who had dispensed the word of life a short distance from this sad scene, the day previous, lingered to sympathize with the afflicted parents, who were very dear to him, being some of the first fruits of his ministry; indeed he felt like a kind of foster-father towards the little sufferer. As was remarked her physician gave her up, and no marvel, for her eyes appeared forever fixed in their sockets, the blood settled under her nails, all consciousness fled, the physician left to attend elsewhere; the distressed father retired once more to pour out his anguish into the ear of him who has so kindly offered to take the suffering burden from his children.

All human means had now failed; but the mother, who knew something of the power of God, seemed prompted by the Spirit to seek help from a higher source, and quick as thought she requested the "man of God" to pray and anoint her dying darling. For a moment he hesitated, because death had so nearly obtained dominion over the dear one; but another moment, and he knelt by the bedside in silent prayer, applying the oil, then immediately retired to his chamber, where he fell prostrate to supplicate him who has promised to hear in secret. In a moment the evidence came—a moment more and the mother's voice called from the foot of the stairs, "Bro. ——, she is better, she moves her eyes." "I know it," responded the "man of God," yet retaining his lowly position. Soon the comforting intelligence of the Spirit gave him such perfect confidence in the case, he arose and immediately decided to take his departure, having about thirty miles to ride over a rough way after three o'clock P. M. He arrived safely, finding his family anxiously straining their eyes in the dark, and carefully listening for the approach of the well known carriage wheels.

Perhaps parents can best understand the joy of that household, as from day to day they witnessed the rapid convalescence of her who lived to be the light of her home, and as she merged into womanhood the charms of her person, united with mental brilliancy, made her the cynosure of almost every circle, especially at the boarding school where she excelled. It must be acknowledged that, now and then an envious eye glanced fiercely at such appreciated worth; but the firm, gentle, unassuming manner soon dispelled, and totally disarmed the virus of this malignant passion. A consciousness of having been rescued from death's door by a special interposition of the Eternal, held a great influence over E. through life (for during the year '68 she fell asleep in Jesus), and no doubt was a rein which suppressed youthful effervescence, producing that cheerful sobriety becoming her age and sex. PENCILINGS OF A PILGRIM.

WORCESTER, MASS.

This city of hills is, perhaps, one of the most beautiful and romantic of which New England can boast. It contains about forty thousand inhabitants. Few places are growing more rapidly. Real estate is held at a high figure, and is constantly advancing. Business is lively, the velocipede business not excepted. I spent two pleasant and profitable weeks here, notwithstanding the shafts of disease that were hurled at me with unwonted fury. Returning strength demands my grateful praise.

The Advent society in Worcester numbers about two hundred members. Many of them combine sterling piety and good common sense. There is much harmony of feeling. The meetings are well attended, and a good degree of religious interest is manifest. But even the most vital portion of the church is impressed with a sense of spiritual want. Some of them are groaning for richer baptisms of the Spirit; and more signal victories over the world. Amen! This aspiration is the foreshadowing of better things. Let the little ones continue their cry, till the floodgates of mercy are lifted up, and the tide of salvation runs rich and full. Battles precede victories. We must consent to be wrestling Jacobs, if we would become prevailing Israels. A church of two hundred members divinely anointed for their mission, ought to shake a small city from its foundation. O ye Worcester pilgrims, arise and shine for God. Learn the secret of your success, and go forth to burn your way through the icy walls of formalism and death. May your shouts of victory soon ascend over many willing captives sitting at Jesus' feet.

"SATAN CAME ALSO."

On the first Sabbath evening of my stay in Worcester, Professor Denton presented himself before a large concourse of people in Mechanics' Hall, for the purpose of disproving the authenticity of the Bible. How well he succeeded can never be fully known till the final records shall be unfolded in the flashing light of the judgment day. But the very fact that multitudes of people will crowd around such infidel teachers, is itself significant. It proves that men are more eager to swallow down the lies of the Devil than the truths of God. They are more anxious to blast the Almighty's reputation for veracity, than to discover their own damning sins. It shows that the days of "fables" are upon us, when men shall depart from the faith, "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." Mr. Denton is a prominent Spiritualist lecturer. He consents to be a mouth-piece of Satan in contradicting the God of the universe. It is sad that a man of letters should be found thus employing his best energies in trying to break down the authority of that precious Book which has shed its luster upon the dark pathway of man in ages past, and which refreshes the weary pilgrim with many a sweet promise of a blissful immortality to come. Infidels may combine to destroy the Bible, but ere they finish their task, the God of the Bible will destroy them. They will see their folly, too late, as they sink in dreadful self-reproach into that yawning chasm of destruction, which the Bible had warned them to shun.

A CURRENT LIE.

The Springfield Republican recently guessed its way to the strange conclusion that the Advent people had, by formal action, renounced their faith in the speedy coming of Christ, as a specialty, and fallen back upon the same general platform occupied by other churches. Other papers have been passing the report around, until the impression seems to be quite general that all time arguments are henceforth to be rejected by Adventists, as contraband. As an impartial witness to the proceedings of the Springfield Conference, I wish to say that no action of that Conference, either formal or informal, furnished the least possible foundation for the above named report. The "time" subject was not at all agitated. Had a vote been taken, I venture the assertion that every man would have recorded it as his conviction, that we are living in the very last days. The fixing of definite time is evidently a mistake. I believe the time of the glorious advent may be known approximately, but not definitely. Evidences are multiplying that we are nearing the grand consummation. Let us watch and wait.

THE WORK IN ROCHESTER.

For the past seven weeks, our society have enjoyed the privilege of listening to the word of God, as spoken by the holy prophets, apostles, and our Savior Jesus Christ, in a manner that has caused our hearts to rejoice with exceeding great joy. Bro. Samuel W. Thurber came among us seven weeks ago, to labor with us in the Master's vineyard, full of zeal and love to God and man. His first discourse was powerful and right to the point. Some of the brethren took exception to the manner of delivery, but the truth was, it was a little too strong for them. Bro. Thurber said that he could not preach with full sails up, so he hauled them all down, and the next Lord's day he commenced to feed us milk. At first it seemed rather new, and you know that a great many people cannot bear new milk; but the longer he fed us the older the milk grew, until at last, we wanted meat. This may seem Greek to some, but the most of your readers will understand it, because it is the language of Canaan.

There are a great many things to cause us to dislike this strong meat, that Paul mentioned, if we allow wolves to come in and devour it, and sometimes ourselves also. That has been the case with us here in Rochester; many have been wounded and left on the field for dead. These wolves came around with different names, and under different garbs. A great many years ago, the leader of this pack called on a newly married couple, whose prospect of life and happiness certainly was better than ours, and completely ruined them and caused their death; and simply because they listened to what he had to say. The best way, when he comes to counsel, is to turn a deaf ear. And since the time he ruined this happy pair, it has been his ostensible business to enter Kings' palaces, halls of legislature, cities, villages, and hamlets, to create confusion, disorder, bloodshed, and a thousand other evils, and he has been fearfully successful. After he has made one assault, if he would come in the same garb, no matter what his pretense was, we might know him. But he will defeat us every time, unless we are under the care of the chief Shepherd.

By this time, you will ask, who was the wolf and where was he? Well, he pretended to be a friend, and as such a great many thought they would see what he had to say; after a long time, we found his retreat. I found him first in in my own heart, and as soon as I found him I had no time to see if he had been any where else; because I made up my mind he had to leave there first. After a persistent effort, I, with the help of the chief Shepherd, drove him out. I also heard the brethren and sisters say they had found him too, and at him they went. At last, our cup of joy was full. We had defeated and drove him off the field, and we were victors.

Now I will tell you with what garb he came here. He came as a friend to counsel and advise us what course we should take when a brother or sister spoke evil of any one—"I would never stand that. Just as long as you keep still, they will talk about you; and I would advise you to defend your rights and good name. You have rights, and I would not allow any brother or sister to infringe upon them. You have just as good right to say you won't and you will, as any one. You just show a little fight, and they will come to terms; or, I would leave and go to some other church. They will treat you all right there. You just tell Bro. A. and Sr. B. how they have been talking about you. Be sure and tell them who it was, and you will make it so warm that they will want to do something." This is what this assumed friend advised. But how we thank God that Bro. Thurber has been here to help us. We have excommunicated the deceiver, and have read him out of the church, and now are growing in love and the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Bro. Grant, have you ever seen him in Boston, or anywhere in your travels? They tell me that he is going to give all a call. So you may expect him that way. If you will be on the guard for him, you will be able to keep him at a distance; otherwise, he will come in unawares and commence his depredations. What I would say unto one, I would say unto all, Watch.

There has been a great deal of interest in most of the churches in the city, more especially in the Brick and Central Presbyterian churches. Mr. Hammond has been conducting the exercises. About three hundred have professed the faith, as taught by that church. He believes in the near coming of the Savior. He has been traveling through Europe, and he says that there are thousands there who are preaching that Christ will come within seven years. May God bless their labors. I think that Bro. Hammond is a true christian. One of the persons that was converted under his preaching attended the last meeting that Bro. Thurber held here. He confessed the Savior. He had the ring of the true metal. He said he longed to see Jesus come. It did us all good. To be sure, in some things he said, he had them mixed; such as "his mother's spirit looking down from heaven with joy at his conversion;" but never mind that; that is an error of the head.

In our society, there have been but a few conversions, but then the church has been built up. What rapid strides we are making in the road to the celestial city. God has crowned the labors of Bro. Thurber with success, and how reluctant we were to part with him; and he confessed that we had entwined ourselves around him so that it seemed as if he could not leave. We trust that we shall again see him here, if time continues.

In closing, I would say to all the readers of the Crisis, Be faithful, be true, be honest, be vigilant, be watchful, and prayerful; for we soon shall hear the midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him." J. E. WELLS.

STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—It was observed a short time since, by a friend of the cause who visited our Mission, that he had not for some time seen any of Sister Dow's pieces in the Crisis. I am aware of the fact that it is some little time since I have sent any communication, but I would say, it is not because my interest in this blessed work has diminished in any degree, but as there are others of the laborers here, who, in my estimation, are so much better able to interest the public than myself, that I have kept back; but thinking now that perhaps I have a duty to perform in this direction, however small it might be, as well as the rest. I will try, by the help of the Lord, to pen a few thoughts.

About the middle of January, I went to New Hampshire to visit my friends for the first time since I came here to labor, which is nearly a year; was gone about two weeks, attended a good many meetings in Concord and elsewhere, and I never was more thoroughly convinced that the work of the Lord in large churches, where there has been so much preaching, is about at an end. There seems to be little or no move; and laborers who have the work at heart go and toil and preach and pray, a week at a time, and go away disheartened at the lack of interest and of faith on the part of the church. Instead of taking hold unitedly and earnestly to try and save souls, they are all the while contending on points of doctrine; speaking evil one of another, and backbiting; which things, if practised, will bring death into any church. This is a sad state of things, but nevertheless true. "Where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." How far from being where Jesus prayed that his people might be, in his last prayer for them before his departure. I pray "that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." But it seems to me that the present condition of things, instead of leading the world to fall in love with Jesus and his gospel, tends rather to drive them further away. They look upon those who profess to be Christ's followers, and say, If this is what religion does for people, I don't want it; I am just as well off without it. May the Lord help us to see to it that we are not stumbling-blocks in the way of sinners.

I really felt homesick to get back to our little mission meetings once more, where the Lord does condescend to meet his humble followers; those who are willing to be anything for him. He is truly at work in our midst; not as many conversions as at some former periods, but among us as a band of laborers; and also among the members, the Lord is working by his mighty power, and there has been such a struggle for victory, such an earnest seeking for holiness of heart, such a consecration of all to the Lord; and he in his great condescension and love has heard and answered the prayers of his little ones; and praise to his name, victory has turned on Zion's side. Our meetings are growing in interest. For about four weeks, we have held them every evening, except Saturday. The Lord is greatly blessing the efforts of his weak children, and we expect to see a still greater outpouring of his Holy Spirit in our midst. Pray for us, that the Lord may carry on this blessed work, and that we may each one be in that little, humble place, where the Lord can use us to his own glory; and we be instrumental in bringing many to Christ.

Sr. Smith is still away from home, but we, as laborers, are trying to discharge our various duties, by the help of the Lord. Among other things, we are kept quite busy in dealing out clothing and food to the sick and poor, as the Lord gives to us. Many a poor heart is made glad by the little packages that go out from the "Star of Hope" from day to day. Our calls for help are very numerous; but through the generosity of some of the Lord's children, we have been enabled to help very many this winter. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon those who have remembered the poor, not merely to say, Be ye warmed, and clothed, and fed, but have given those things which were needful for them. Methinks such will hear it said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Your sister in the highways and hedges,

— The guiltiest man often joins the loudest in the cry of "Stop thief!"

— Faith is exceedingly charitable, and believing no ill of God.

— He who loves little, prays little; he who loves much, prays much.

— He who would reprove the world must be one whom the world cannot reprove.

— Little minds are tamed and subdued by misfortune, but great minds rise above it.

— He who has a love for nature can never be alone.

— All visible greatness of mind grows by looking at an invisible greater.

— The nation that has best affected other nations, has done so by giving them Christ.

— A thousand parties of pleasure do not leave a recollection worth that of one good action.

— He who is not willing to fill a place he is fitted for, will find no place fitted for him to fill.

— Faith never made true anything that was false; unbelief never made false anything that was true.

— Many a rich man in bringing up his son, seems ambitious to make what Aaron made,—a golden calf.

— A man who labors earnestly and perseveringly to convince others, at least convinces us that he is convinced himself.

— Be always frank and true; spurn every sort of affectation and disguise. Have courage to confess your ignorance. Confide your faults and follies to but few.

— The man who would shine in conversation must possess original ideas and strong sympathies—be able both to listen and communicate.

— Often do we think when we ought to act, and act when it behooves us to reflect; hence caution is frequently as fatal as rashness.

— The greatest and most amiable privilege which the rich enjoy over the poor is that which they exercise the least—the privilege of making them happy.

— We often take a one-sided view of God's infinitude. Because he is infinite, nothing is too high, but also because he is infinite, nothing is too low for his regard.

— If you would find a great many faults, be on the look-out; but if you want to find them in unlimited quantities, be on the look-in.

— As the magnetic needle points always toward the Pole, so does pure love evermore point its possessor toward that God whose nature and whose name is Love.

— Do little things as if they were great, because of the majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, who dwells in thee; and do great things as if they were little and easy, because of his omnipotence.

— The christian life is not an engagement by contract between the master and his servant. It is the union of two hearts—that of the Savior and the saved—by the endearing ties of the most intimate love.

— "It is a good sign," says Bishop Hall, "when God chides us. His round reprehensions are ever gracious forerunners of mercy; whereas his silent connivance at the wicked argues deep and secret displeasure."

— God loves importunate prayer so much that he will not give us much blessing without it; and the reason he loves such prayer is, that he loves us and knows that it is a necessary preparation for our receiving the richest blessings which he is waiting and longing to bestow.

— Do not be troubled because you have no great virtues. God made a million spears of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted, not with forests but with grasses. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint.

— Grace to live from day to day an increasingly christian life, without being inordinately anxious about the morrow; faith in Christ as the only and all sufficient Savior for us; and more success in imitating the example of him who is Lord and Master, are, and must be, the great aim of every christian, and if ever reached and realized will prepare him equally for death and life.

MINISTERIAL SAYINGS.

A minister being sent by a wealthy man, who was sick, to Boston for a Doctor, told him the man was very poor, and he would no get anything if he went. He would have to pay his own expenses. The Dr. concluded to go, and when he came to leave the man, he asked him what his bill was, and he told him fifty dollars; whereupon the man paid him, and he left in surprise, after what the minister told him. When remonstrated with for it, the minister said for a plea, "We ministers have to use a great deal of sophistry sometimes."

Another minister, in Maine, a short time ago, in laboring to overthrow the doctrine of the "everlasting destruction" of the wicked, said "the apostle Paul was a very ignorant man, brought up at the foot of GAMMON hill."

Another Orthodox Advent preacher, in laboring to overthrow the same doctrine, in a place where it was spreading rapidly, preaching in an Orthodox church, said the people of the town had had wrong instruction, and said, "If there is anything you don't understand, ask your minister." Truly, I thought it was different advice from that given by our Divine Head to the Jews, and that was—"Search the SCRIPTURES." I never shall forget the saying of a good minister of Jesus Christ, in my early experience—"Ministers are nothing but men." A. P. MOORE.

For the World's Crisis.

AMEN.

In our opinion, a truer and more heaven-approved utterance was never printed in the Crisis, than that in the issue of February 24th, entitled, "The church large enough for the christian's entire efforts." Would that the article might be read by every clergyman and church member in our land. The effect would be salutary; the church would more highly appreciate her duty and privilege than she has. The want of the hour is, that the church be more fraternal than Masons; more reformatory than Good Templars. Let the church become what she was in the time of the apostle Peter, and the sons of the brotherhood will not lack for bread, and drunkards will be effectually warned of the peril of their course. J. B. CLEAVELAND.

DID THE WORLD MAKE ITSELF?

A School Dialogue.

BY S. C. WELLCOME.

(George sits in a deep study.)

Flora.—George, what makes you look so sober,
Are your friends all dead and gone?
Tell us what you're thinking over,
While you're musing thus alone?

Laura.—Yes, George, I too feel quite curious,
Now to have you speak and tell,
Why you sit so deeply musing,
Hasn't your school-mates used you well?

Sarah.—Come, rouse up, George, from your study,
Why, how stupid you appear;
Tell us quick of what you're dreaming,
Else I'll come and box your ear.

George.—Well, girls, I've been busy thinking
What a curious world we're in;
Who has made this vast creation?
When did such a work begin?

Who has made the starry heavens,
And the earth on which we move?
Sure all animated nature
Says there is a God above.

Flora.—Why, this earth, you stupid fellow,
Has been growing many years;
Many years, yes, many millions,
Till it now quite large appears.

Yes, geologists now tell us
That the earth was once quite small;
That a cloud of fiery atoms
Cooled and formed into a ball.

Then this ball kept growing larger,
Needing no creating hand;
Having in itself the power
To create the sea and land.

Laura.—Sister Flora, you're mistaken,
I have read as well as you;
Once this earth was but a fire mist,
Shining much as comets do.

This fire mist formed into granite,
When it cooled so long ago;
Then great earthquakes broke its surface,
Forming mountains high and low.

Heavy rains then washed this surface,
Forming then the clay and soil;
Out of this grows vegetation,
Which requites the laborer's toil.

Henry.—Yes, girls, now you think you've done it,
Telling how the world was made;
But who made the living creatures?
Not a word by you is said.

Do you think men grew spontaneous,
Shooting up from mother earth?
Growing up like little saplings,
Or did nature give them birth?

George.—Now, girls, I think Henry's got you,
For I don't believe you know
How so many living creatures
On the earth were caused to grow.

Flora.—Well, sir, if you did but know it,
There is life in every thing;
Man and beast, the trees and flowers,
And the birds that sweetly sing.

Life in all things was inherent,
From the earth themselves they formed;
Growing from the dusty pebbles,
As the heat their life blood warmed.

Laura.—Pshaw! what nonsense, sister Flora,
You think animals once were stone;
I can use much better logic,
From the earth we all have grown.

I have read that living creatures
Once were like the tender grass,
Growing from the earth spontaneous,
Changing forms though very fast.

Soon they grew to plants and roses,
Giving fragrance all around;
Then they changed to little tadpoles,
Then to frogs that hop around.

Quickly then they grew to monkeys,
Then into the black baboon;
Next they changed to little niggers,
Then to Indians, all so brown.

But the next great change was final,
For 'twas made from brown to white;
Here we get our fine complexions,
Say now, Sis, am I not right?

Henry.—Well now, girls, I tell you truly,
Some geologists are true;
But I think that many of them
Know no more than some of you.

All the greatest men among them,
With the Bible do agree,
That a great and live Creator
Formed the heavens, earth and sea.

George.—(To the girls.)
That's what I'd been pondering over,
When you came and spoke to me;
And my soul was lost in wonder,—
Oh! how powerful God must be!

You've been talking silly twaddle,
I don't care how much you've read
How mankind were once small tadpoles,
Growing up as you have said.

You from them may have descended,
I such origin don't claim;
God from dust created Adam,
Man was what God called his name.

Now when lost in meditation,
Thinking of the works of God,
How he made all living creatures,
And the heavens he spread abroad,

I believe the Bible story,
Of his goodness and his love;
His works through all nature praise him,
And angels sing his praise above.

Flora and Laura.
George, we won't give up the Bible,
And with you we will agree
That God was the all-wise Creator,
Who formed the air, the earth and sea.

Garden City.

— Young people are conscious of many wants, but there are two things absolutely needful—a good conscience and a good name. They need the first that they may dwell with God; the second, that they may dwell peaceably with their neighbors.

LOST AND FOUND.

Some years ago two boys, while p'aying upon a cliff near the sea, found a young sea-bird which a dog was worrying. It would have been killed but for them. They drove away the dog and carried the bird, nearly as large as a goose, safely home. There it was shut up in a coop, like the hens and chickens, fed and kindly cared for. It soon became quite tame, and manifested constant affection for its little masters, who felt quite proud of the result of their care. And thus weeks and months rolled on. In the fall of the year the bird became very tame, the coop was occasionally opened and the prisoner permitted to go to the coast, near which the boys lived. But it came regularly home at night, receiving its supper along with the rest of the biddies, and crept to its nest to repose. So the cold winter passed away, and spring came.

One night the bird which had been cared for so well was missed. It did not come home. The next day and the next went by, and still the coop was empty. The fact was, the boy's bird had been coaxed away—I can not really say into bad company. But it had joined a flock on its way north, and flown with the rest. Presently the boys began to comprehend the difficulty, and as a matter of course they had to have a good cry about it. They had really learned to love their bird, and to part with it, for them was a severe trial. That is all very natural, for kindness, no matter upon what creature bestowed, ever begets kindness, and to part with an object that we love is ever painful.

Some of my readers will, no doubt, anticipate the end of my story, for many similar events are recorded. One cold autumn day, as the boys were at play in their yard, they saw a flock of sea-birds coming toward them. Nearer and nearer they came, till at last, to their infinite surprise, the whole flock settled upon the ground close at hand, and the largest waddled along toward them, quacking most curiously as she came. It was the bird which had flown away in the spring, now returned with her young ones to claim hospitality for the winter! You may imagine, if you can, the delight of the boys, and indeed that of the parents, at this instance of affection. Words can not describe it. You may make up your mind that the flock was not turned adrift, though for a long time the young ones were pretty wild, and did not take as kindly to the boys as the mother did. Ah, well; they did not know them as well.—Casket and Playmate.

SOWING LITTLE SEEDS.

Little Bessie had got a present of a new book, and she eagerly opened it to look at the first picture. It was the picture of a boy sitting by the side of a stream, and throwing seeds into the water.

"I wonder what this picture is about?" said she; "why does the boy throw seeds in the water?"

"O, I know," said her brother Edward, who had been looking at the book; "he is sowing the seeds of water-lilies."

"But how small the seeds look!" said Bessie. "It seems strange that such large plants should grow from such things."

"You are just sowing such tiny seeds every day, Bessie, and they will come up large, strong plants after a while," said her father.

"O, no, father; I have hot planted any seeds for a long while."

Bessie looked puzzled, and her father smiled and said, "Yes I have watched you planting flowers, and seeds, and weeds, to-day."

"Now I know that you are joking, for I would not plant ugly weeds."

"I will tell you what I mean. When you laid asid that interesting book, and attended to what your mother had done, you were sowing seeds of kindness and love. When you broke the dish that you knew your mother valued, and came instantly and told her, you were sowing seeds of truth. When you took the cup of cold water to the poor woman at the gate, you were sowing the seeds of mercy. These are the beautiful flowers, Bessie. But I hope my little girl has been planting the great tree of 'love to God,' and that she will tend and watch it, until its branches reach the skies and meet before his throne."

THE HAIRS OF YOUR HEAD ARE NUMBERED.

"When I was a very little boy," said an aged minister, "my father used to send me for the cows. They were kept in a pasture some distance from home; and, as I was a timid child, I always ran as fast as I could, that I might get back before dark. One day, on reaching the pasture, no cows were to be seen. I hurried on to the next field, calling, and looking on both sides of the road. Not finding them I kept on, until, finding myself a long distance from home, alone, and darkness coming on, I sat down on a flat stone by the road-side and cried heartily. Suddenly the thought came, 'God knows just where those cows are; he can send them to me in a minute. It will be much better to pray than to weep.' And, kneeling down on the stone, I asked the Lord earnestly to show me where they were. As I rose, with a lighter heart, I heard the lowing of cattle, and looking round, saw the whole herd in the opposite field.

I never forgot that lesson. Seventy-five years have passed since then, but the stone is still there; and I never pass it, on my way to my old home, without recalling that night, and thanking God for teaching me from a child, to seek his help in little things as well as in great.

When I had a difficult lesson to learn I asked his help, and it was made easy. When tempted to sin, I sought strength from above. Through life I have been most wonderfully cared for. Fear not, therefore, my children; 'the very hairs hairs of your head are all numbered,' "—Child at Home.

ON THE TRACK.

The other day I heard a mother ask her little son to do something. "In a minute," he said. She spoke again. But it was one, two, three, four, five minutes before he minded her.

It makes me think of the switch-tender's boy. What if he had waited a minute before minding his father? A switch-tender in Prussia was just going to move the rail in order to put a coming train of cars on a side track, when he caught sight of his little son playing on the track. The engine was in sight, and he had not a moment to spare. He might jump and save his child; but he could not do that and turn the switch in time; and if it were not done the on-coming train would meet another train, and a terrible crash and smash take place.

The safety of hundreds of lives depended upon his fidelity. What could he do? "Lie down! lie down!" he called, with a loud, quick voice to the child; and seizing the switch, the train passed safely on its proper track.

Did the heavy train run over the little boy? Was he killed? Was he crushed to pieces? No, for he did just as his father told him, and did it instantly. He fell flat between the rails, and the cars went high over his head; and when the anxious father sprang to the spot, there he was alive and well—not a hair was touched. It was his quick obedience, you see, that saved his life. He did not stop a minute. Even a moment's hesitation would have been too late.

OUR PATTERN.—A Polish prince was accustomed to carry the picture of his father always in his bosom; and on any particular occasion he would take it out and view it, and say, "Let me do nothing unbecoming so excellent a father."

☞ The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

WE SHALL SLEEP, BUT NOT FOREVER.

AIR.—"Ye who know your sins forgiven."

We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part no, never,
On the resurrection morn.
From the deepest caves of ocean,
From the desert and the plain,
From the valley and the mountain,
Countless throngs shall rise again.
CHO.—We shall sleep, etc.

When we see a precious blossom,
That we tended with such care,
Rudely taken from our bosom,
How our aching hearts despair.
Round its little grave we linger
Till the setting sun is low,
Feeling all our hopes have perished
With the flower we cherished so.

We shall sleep, but not forever,
In the lone and silent grave;
Blessed be the Lord that taketh,
Blessed be the Lord that gave.
In the bright eternal city
Death can never, never come;
In his own good time he'll call us
From our rest to home, sweet home.

For the World's Crisis.

CALAMITY, OR PENALTY.

To the lost race of Adam the Adamic death is evidently a calamity or a penalty. In their natures they are wholly unlike. Calamity is a misfortune occurring casually and involving no guilt in the parties concerned. Penalty is the punishment annexed by law for the commission of crime.

Suppose an individual to lose his property by fire while he is indebted its entire value; his loss is a calamity. Suppose he again acquires property; his previous loss does not invalidate the claim of the law which again takes it from him to pay its penalty.

He might suffer a score of calamities, and yet the penalty stands charged to his account. Should he never acquire property after his loss by fire, he could not pay the penalty, because nothing but property can pay it; and being already deprived of that, by calamity the penalty remains unpaid.

The Adamic death is apparently a calamity to the human family, because the innocent as well as the guilty suffer it. Both the innocent and guilty may be victims of a calamity, but only the guilty can justly suffer the penalty.

The divine law which the wicked are under requires their life to pay its penalty; nothing else will suffice; and as they have already lost that by calamity, through Adam, being dead in him, they can not pay the penalty unless they are raised from the dead, and thus furnished with life for that purpose.

If the first death is the penalty for sin (except in the case of Adam), the wicked can have no resurrection, because the penalty is eternal. Man was created from the dust of the ground, and animated by the breath of life. When the breath is taken away, death results. Ps. 104: 29; 146: 3–4. There is no intermediate position, consequently no degree in death. The day in which his breath goeth forth and his thoughts perish, expresses in the fullest sense the change. Countless ages add nothing to its awful gloom and silence. If, then, the wicked have no resurrection, we must date their execution at the point where they die in Adam, and accept it as the penalty for sin.

Says the apostle (1 Tim. 1: 9), "The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient." Rom. 6: 14,—"For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Rom. 8: 2,—"For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Why should those who have been made free from the law of sin, and which has no dominion over them, be subject to its penalty, death?

If a person can become inanimate while filled with the Spirit of Christ, may not the wicked dead be animated? Is not the lack of principle apparent in one case equally as in the other? Says the apostle (Gal. 5: 22–23),—"There is no law against those who have the fruits of the Spirit." If the first death is the penalty for sin, are not the righteous compelled to pay the penalty contracted by the disobedient who are under the law, like sending the honest man to jail with the thief?

To allow the righteous man a resurrection does not obviate the difficulty, for to hold them under the penalty a single hour involves their criminality. The law and its penalty were made only for the lawless and disobedient; consequently all who die must be reckoned as disobedient. And does not this position seriously contemplate an eternal sleep to all men? A resurrection to all, or a resurrection to none, appears inevitable.

It may be said that Christ being the only medium by which the dead can be raised, only those who are in Christ can have a resurrection. It is written (Eccl. 3: 20), "All go to one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Notwithstanding all who are filled with the Spirit of Jesus are included in this vast unconscious congregation, the testimony of the wise man is unhesitatingly accepted, because the fact that they die presents an impassable barrier against equivocation.

Again it is written (John 5: 28–29), "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Can we give our unqualified assent to the words of the wise man (Eccl. 3: 20), while the testimony of the only begotten Son of God, who spake as never man spake, is subjected to criticism, and large room for doubt as to its truthfulness is allowed? Is it not reflecting upon his character so to do?

If the wicked are to be left out in the "all" of John 5: 28–29, should not the righteous be left out in the "all" of Eccl. 3: 20? If principle cannot be evenly adjusted to both sides of the question, should it not be allowed to retire before inspiration, and steadfast faith and implicit confidence in the word of God be adopted instead?

It is written (Rom. 6: 23), "The wages of sin is death." Wages is the price paid for service rendered; and as the infant has never rendered any service to sin, why should it be entitled to the wages? It may be said they die because of Adam's sin, in which case the first death ceases to be the wages or penalty for sin, for lack of guilt or service to sin. Therefore, as all die alike, the necessity for the resurrection of the wicked again appears.

A clerk, at a salary of a thousand dollars per year, inherits a like sum from his deceased parent. Is that a reason why his wages should be withheld? The posterity of Adam inherit death from their deceased parent. Should those who are faithful servants to sin be deprived of their fairly earned wages on that account? Then let the law which was made expressly for them bring them to judgment (2 Pet. 2: 9) and execution. Jude 14–15. Would a kind and merciful parent inflict twenty stripes upon the disobedient child, and five upon his obedient brother?

Should the righteous suffer the penalty till their resurrection alike with the wicked, does not their union with Christ exempt them from sharing in the slightest degree the penalty for sin?

If the wicked never live after they die in Adam, the righteous should never die in Adam. Obedience should prevent any suspension of life, if disobedience prevents a restoration to life.

If disobedience leads with direct certainty to death, obedience should be a sure preventative against it; if no life to the wicked, no death to the righteous.

We thus feel impelled to the conclusion that the Adamic death is a calamity to his posterity; and as all lose life in him, the wicked must have a resurrection from the dead, in order to pay the penalty for their service to sin, or it remains forever unpaid.

Let us seek for purity and holiness of heart, that we may share in the priceless gift of God—eternal life. O. D. WOODRUFF.

Southington, Ct., Jan. 26th, 1869.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO IS MICHAEL?

Is he Christ? So some teach. The argument: 1. Michael is called "the great prince." Christ is called the "Prince of princes—the "Prince of the covenant"—the "Prince of peace." Therefore because Michael is called the "great prince," he is Christ. The argument proves too much, for whoever is a "great prince" is Christ. Cyrus was "a prince of the kingdom of Persia," and its great prince; but he was not Christ.

2. Michael shall "stand up." "Stand up" means to reign. Christ is the King that shall reign over all the earth; therefore Michael is Christ. Too much argument again; it breaks by its own weight, or rather weakness. Michael was reigning at the time the language was addressed to Daniel,—the "great prince which standeth for the children of thy people." If "stand up" means "to reign," then Michael was reigning then, for he was "standing" for Daniel's people"—the Jews. Therefore, if Michael is Christ, Christ was then reigning! If the premises are correct, the logic is sound, and the conclusion unavoidable. Is it so? Was Christ reigning then? If not, Michael is not Christ.

3. "At that time," when "Michael shall stand up," there shall be a "time of trouble," etc. When Christ shall come the second time, there shall be a "time of trouble"; therefore Michael is Christ. An unwarranted conclusion. There was a time of trouble when Israel was delivered from Egyptian bondage; when the temple, Jerusalem, and the Jews were destroyed; and it is true there will be a time of trouble when Jesus comes the second time; but how that proves Michael to be Christ I fail to see. A "time of trouble" in connection with the "standing up of Michael" proves the presence of Michael, but not that he is Christ, any more than the presence of Titus at the destruction of Jerusalem proves that he (Titus) was Michael. Not a whit. If it did, then we might argue that Christ came then, for there was a "time of trouble such as was not since the beginning of the world."

4. "Thy people shall be delivered" at the standing up of Michael. The resurrection takes place at the coming of Christ; therefore Michael is Christ. Christ shall descend with the "voice of the archangel"; therefore the archangel is Christ! Christ shall "send forth his angels to gather his elect"; therefore the "angels" are Christ! Such arguments are foolish.

Who, then, is Michael? Why not believe what the Scriptures say? "Michael the archangel." "Michael, one of the chief princes." "The first prince" (margin). When God chose Israel from among the nations to be a "peculiar people"—the chief nation among all nations, he appointed "Michael the archangel", —the "chief angel," to have the oversight of them until God should through them accomplish his purposes in regard to the plan of salvation. Therefore we find that it was the "angel of the Lord" that led them out of Egypt; that was "a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night"; that overthrew the hosts of Midian in a single night; that assisted Gabriel to influence Cyrus to issue a decree for the return of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their city, etc., etc. Gabriel tells Daniel that "the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days; but, lo! Michael, one of the chief princes—[the first prince, margin], came to help me." Dan. 10: 13. "There is none that holdeth with me in these things but Michael your prince." Dan. 10: 21. Why Daniel's prince? Because he is the "angel of the Lord" which "standeth for the children of thy people." "Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee."—Jude 9.

Question: If Michael was the Lord Jesus, why did he not rebuke him? In Rev. 12, a "man child" is brought to view that is to "rule all nations with a rod of iron," etc. There was a Dragon also, who tried to destroy the "child"; there was a contest between the "Dragon and his angels" on the one side, and "Michael and his angels" on the other.

Question: Was Michael and the "man child" one and the same?

When the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven," in connection with the "voice of the archangel"—Michael, who once stood for the protection of the Jewish nation until it ceased to be a righteous nation and was destroyed, and who has since stood for the church of God in all nations, will then go forth with "his angels" "to gather together" the "elect" from one end of "heaven to the other."

The "field" will then be given into the hands of "Michael and his angels" to "reap" the "harvest" of the world. They will gather the "wheat into the garner" of the Lord; and the "tares in bundles to be burned."

Then will Michael "stand up" to do the great work committed to his charge, in the closing scenes of the great and glorious plan of redemption. Much more might be said on this subject, but I forbear. S. J. RONEY.

HUMILIATION.

Although it seems like a humiliating act to a great many people to give up the follies and fashions of this world, and serve and obey our blessed Lord, yet there is no other way for us to do than to give up all for him, and be reconciled to his will, if we would expect to receive his approbation, and reign with him when he comes.

It was for us that Christ came to this earth and bled upon the tree, giving up his life, and going into the tomb, in order that all who "believed on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." And it is not all in simply professing to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and being baptized, for we have a daily work to do.

If we do sincerely believe on him, we shall humble ourselves, "putting off the old man with his deeds, and put on the new man;" we shall not be ashamed to work for our Master, nor to do the work that he did while on the earth. We know that while he was here, he became as man, and went about doing good; and that "though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich."

What a great sacrifice! What infinite love was thus bestowed on sinful mortal man! How can we ever forget to thank and praise him for his great goodness towards us? Can there be any act too humiliating for us to perform, or any cross too heavy for us to bear, when it is all for our great Redeemer?

"The gift of God is eternal life"; but who are those that receive the "gift"? Is it the proud and haughty, or is it "he that humbleth himself?" "Saith the Lord of hosts, all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, that it shall not leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. Then if the proud are to be "burned up," it is very certain that they can have no life; but God will render "to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality,—eternal life."—Rom. 2: 7.

It is very humiliating to a great many to give up the idea that they already have immortality, and will not believe that if Christ had not offered himself as a sacrifice for us, they never could have had eternal life. Instead of acknowledging him as the great Life-giver, they boast of having an immortal soul planted within them, and cannot even tell how they came by it, or when and where they received it, but suppose they are naturally possessors of immortality. They suppose it must be so because "our learned men," as they term them, preach it, and believe that they certainly must have the truth. And it is too humiliating to them to study the word for themselves, and stand up for the truth, independent of what others may say or do; so, for fear of reproach, they still live on without any apparent desire to know whether they are believing in the truth or a fable.

But how could we ever have the least hope of immortality, if Christ had not pitied our lost condition, and gone down into the grave and rose again, to suffer for us the penalty of God's law?

Let all those who are unwilling to humble themselves, and believe the simple word of the Lord, instead of the popular theology of the day, think deeply of this; and explain if they can what need there be of a "resurrection of the dead," if, as they say, man is immortal and goes to his reward at death.

Humiliation for the sake of the Lord is quite different from doing some act to please men, which may at the time seem very humiliating, but which is done to obtain a reward, or to accomplish some great end. It is very natural for us to be willing to humble ourselves and make great sacrifices in order to please the world, expecting to receive a compensation. But this, whatever it may be, cannot in the least compare with the great "gift" which God has promised unto all that obey him.

If we desire to be humble followers of Christ, we shall be willing to give up the pleasures and honors of the world for the sake of him who has done so much for us. We must deny ourselves of everything which is contrary to Christ's will, if we would be accepted of him when he comes. We must "love not the world, neither the things which are in the world. If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him."—1 John 2: 15. GEORGE E. LEE.

CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.

The following, from the pen of Theodore L. Cuyler, is worthy of careful reading. It is a part of the "Introductory Letter" to "Christian Separation from the World," by S. H. Platt.—ED.

The most fatal danger to which the church of Christ in our land is exposed, is that of corruption through sinful conformity to the world. Jesus Christ was eminently sympathetic with all around him, and was the divine friend of sinners; and he was "separate from sinners." His separateness consisted in his spotless purity and holiness. They are to be a "peculiar people"—mingling with the world as leaven in the lump—working in among the world like preserving "salt"—trying to purify the world, and keeping themselves "unspotted from the world." Jesus and the apostles foresaw the great danger, and therefore warned the church faithfully to the end of time "be ye not conformed to the world!"

During my twenty-two years of ministerial labor, I have always observed that those who loved most the sinners' souls had the least to do with sinners' sins. The contrast is equally true. Those professed christians who have the greatest liking for sinners' sins, are always the most indifferent to the salvation of sinners' souls. The moment that a christian becomes tainted with worldly conformity—he also becomes utterly useless to his church, his pastor and his Savior. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

I have observed, too, that when church members become fond of squandering their money on personal luxuries, they usually grow stingy in their contributions for Christ; when they grow fond of the dancing-party, and the opera, and the wine-glass, they begin to dislike the prayer-meeting and the mission-school. Revivals never begin over a whist-table, a decanter, or a novel; nor are they promoted by dancing-parties and masquerades.

On this much-discussed question of amusements I have come to the following conclusion: We all need certain kinds of recreation; and God has provided innocent ones in abundance. Every recreation which makes the body healthier, the mind clearer, and the soul better, is innocent. But whatever stimulates the passions is a sinful amusement. The condemnation of the theatre, the card-table, the promiscuous dance, and the loose novel, lies in this, viz: They all stimulate the passions. Christians, therefore, should let them alone. So should they let wine-bottles and luxurious dinners alone. Not only for example's sake, but for their own sake. The "flesh lusteth against the Spirit"—and we are commanded to "keep our bodies under."

Christians should not exclude themselves from sympathy with other people, like the monks or the Mormons. We must be in the world, and yet not of the world. Christian separateness is not to be in condition or contact, but in character. We must aim to be holy. We must strive to draw the people of the world up to us, and not let them drag us down to themselves. If the church of Jesus loses its saltness, wherewith shall this poor world be salted?

For the World's Crisis.

AN INFIDEL OBJECTION ANSWERED.

Infidels and sceptics often refer to the genealogy of Christ, as given by Matthew and Luke, as being contradictory; and by this means try to destroy confidence in the divine inspiration of the Scriptures. It is said of Joseph (Luke 3: 23), that he "was the son of Heli." But Joseph's own proper father was named Jacob; as is shown in the legal genealogy of Christ. Matt. 1: 16. Joseph, however, was the son-in-law of Heli, who was the father of Mary, the mother of Jesus, the Son of God. In the legal genealogy, the royal line was traced forward from David, through Solomon, to Joseph. But in the maternal genealogy, the royal line is traced backward from Heli, through Nathan, to David; and then still backward to the first man, Adam. But Joseph was not the natural son of Heli by generation; as Adam was not the son of God by generation. Joseph, the first person named in the series, according to Luke, was not the natural son of Heli; and Adam, the last person named in the series, was not the natural son of God.

Matthew, in descending from Abraham to Joseph, the husband of Mary, speaks of sons—properly such—by way of natural generation; as, Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob, etc. But Luke, in ascending from Christ to God himself, speaks of sons, which may be natural, or they may be only legal sons. On this account, the mode of expression is used which may be applied to sons, either "supposed," or naturally such. Hence, of Jesus himself it is said, "being [as was supposed] the son of Joseph." Luke does not always speak of sons as properly such. This is evident from the first and the last person which he names.

Jesus was the legal son of Joseph, because he was the husband of Mary, the mother of Jesus. And Adam, who is said to be the son of God, was only such by creation. In the genealogy as given by Luke, there are two sons named, which were only sons-in-law. A. Clarke says, "As the Hebrews never permitted women to enter into their genealogical tables, whenever a family happened to end with a daughter, instead of naming her in the genealogy, they inserted her husband as the son of him who was in reality but his father-in-law. . . . Jesus was considered, according to law, or allowed custom, to be the son of Joseph, as he was of Heli. The two sons-in-law, who are to be noticed in this genealogy, are—Joseph, the son-in-law of Heli, whose own father was Jacob (Matt. 1: 16); and Salathiel, the son-in-law of Neri, whose own father was Jechonias (1 Chron. 3: 17; Matt. 1: 12). This remark alone is sufficient to remove every difficulty." Thus Joseph, son of Jacob, according to Matt. 1: 16, was son-in-law of Heli, according to Luke 3: 23; and Salathiel, son of Jechonias, according to Matt. 1: 12, and 1 Chron. 3: 17, was son-in-law of Neri, according to Luke 3: 27.

Therefore, says A. Clarke, "Mary appears to have been the daughter of Heli, so called by abbreviation for Heliachim, which is the same in Hebrew with Joachim. Joseph, son of Jacob, and Mary daughter of Heli, were of the same family; both came from Zerubbabel; Joseph from Abiud, his eldest son (Matt. 1: 13); and Mary by Rhesa, the youngest." See Luke 3: 27. Hence it is plain that Salathiel and Zorobabel, from whom Matthew and Luke cause Christ to proceed, were themselves descended from Solomon in a direct line; and although Luke says that Salathiel was son of Neri, who was descended from Nathan, Solomon's eldest brother (1 Chron. 2: 5), this is only to be understood of his having espoused Nathan's daughter; and that Neri dying, probably without male issue, the two branches of the family of David, that of Nathan and that of Solomon, were both united in the person of Zorobabel, by the marriage of Salathiel, chief of the regal family of Solomon, with the daughter of Neri, chief of the family of Nathan.

Thus it appears that Jesus son of Mary re-united in himself all the blood, privileges, and rights of the whole family of David; in consequence of which he is emphatically called the Son of David. It is worthy of remark that Matthew, who wrote principally for the Jews, extends his genealogy to Abraham, through whom the promise of the Messiah was given to the Jews; but Luke, who wrote his history for the instruction of the Gentiles, extends his genealogy to Adam, to whom the promise of the Redeemer was given in behalf of himself, and all his posterity. And as Clarke says—"No person ever born could boast, in a direct line, a more illustrious ancestry than Jesus Christ. Among his progenitors the regal, sacerdotal and prophetic offices, existed in all their glory and splendor. David, the most renowned of sovereigns, was king and prophet. Abraham, the most perfect character in all antiquity, whether sacred or profane, was priest and prophet; but the three offices were never united except in the person of Christ; he alone was prophet, priest, and king." OPPOSITIONS OF SCIENCE.

The spirit of opposition and hatred against God and his word, is evidently increasing, and the prophecy is fulfilling which declares that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." And while sinners of the "baser sort" are growing more fiend-like in all departments of crime (as the daily press abundantly testifies), there is a great increase of opposition to the truth manifested by men of learning; and the moral sense of the community is shocked by bold and bitter attacks upon the Bible by professional men, who advertise public lectures, and before great audiences declare themselves wiser than the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

A prominent lecturer, who is well known in this section, is reported to have said recently in public that he would as soon worship a "wooden god" as the God of the Bible. Is it any scandal to apply the words of Paul to such a man? 1 Tim. 6: 3, 4, 5. "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud [margin a fool], knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, destitute of the truth; . . . from such withdraw thyself."

How can any christian patronize such a man when they know his sentiments? Let me exhort you to avoid him, and turn away from him as you would from the most venomous reptile; and thus "resist the devil." Even if you do not fear that he will influence you, yet there are weak ones who will be emboldened to go where they see you go, and the faith of such may be overthrown. "And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?" Remember that "he that walketh with wise men, shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed." Prov. 13: 20.

If we would keep ourselves clean, we must not handle coals; and if we would be holy, we must not listen (willingly) to the teachings of Satan and his emissaries. The science which derides the Bible and its author, is "falsely so called." Will you do all you can to counteract the influence of these false teachers, these teachers of falsehood, and "forgers of lies," and thus perhaps save souls from death, "and hide a multitude of sins?"

Webster, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS.

THE LAKE OF FIRE, AND THE DEVIL.

At the time of the "gathering of the nations," when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, after saying to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," he will also say to those on the left, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels." In Luke 10: 18, when the seventy had stated, in verse 17, that the devils (daimonia) were subject to them by the name of Jesus, he said, "I saw SATAN fall from heaven as lightning." In John 8: 44, he said the Devil abode not in the truth, that he was a liar and the father of it; and 1st John 3: 8 declares, that the Devil has been sinning from the beginning (i. e. of the world, hence the reference by Jesus to his lying to Eve, and John's reference to his inciting Cain, who was his offspring, to kill Abel), while 2 Pet. 2: 4 and Jude 6 both testify that these rebellious angels are delivered into chains of darkness, in order to reserve them to the judgment of the great day.

Now "the King" does not say, in Matt. 25: 41, that this "everlasting fire" was (or has been) prepared "from the beginning of the world," as he does say of the kingdom, but it is nevertheless strongly implied, and his language in John 8: 44, and that of 1st John 3: 8, with like expressions of Peter and Jude, are all confirmatory of the implied declaration being like that expressed. The use of the word "prepared," also, in both places, shows that the same idea is embraced, i. e., that as the kingdom was appointed, or made ready beforehand for future use, so, from the same time (the beginning of the world) was the everlasting fire prepared for the devil. But as the saints do not inherit from "the beginning," nor until the time appointed of the Father; so, neither does the DEVIL go into the everlasting fire until the set time, the day appointed of God for his punishment.

But we should be very careful, and not make confusion here by confounding these "goats on the left" with "the Devil and his angels"; for they are quite distinct and separate companies. In other words, we have here three companies in view: 1st, the "blessed" on the right; 2nd, the "cursed" on the left; and 3d, the "Devil and his angels" in the dim and distant future. Of these bands, the blessed receive their portion first; viz., the kingdom; afterwards, or next in order, those on the left; viz., the goats receive theirs; and then after that, according to the intimation given by the King, the third company will receive that which has also been prepared for them, since the beginning of the world, and for which they have been held in reservation, in chains under darkness, viz., the Devil and his angels are also to go into the same everlasting fire, into which the "cursed," or "the goats" were sent when the King took his seat upon the throne of his glory, and gathered all nations before him, and made award to them. Otherwise, the Devil and his angels escape their penal award, or get that which from the beginning was not designed for them; since the goats are sent away under the express declaration that they must go into that fire, made ready for the Devil, etc.

But the King, in verse 46, simply states a legal fact; viz., that "these" shall go away into everlasting punishment, without defining what the punishment is, specifying only the time of its continuance; so in verse 41 he only gives the sentence of award to those "on the left," called in verse 33 "the goats"; but without specifying which of "the nations" is thus denominated, beyond the legal term used in verse 41, "ye cursed." But as the apostle Paul, in 2 Thess. 1, defines what the punishment is, and the manner and effect thereof, and we accept his explanation; so does John the Revelator tell us who these goats are, and also how long beforehand of the devil they are in getting their adjudged penal award; and as we believe and receive Paul's statement, so we ought to believe and receive the testimony of the beloved John. In Rev. 19: 20, a like simple statement of a literal translation is given concerning "the beast and false prophet"; viz., that "these both were cast alive into a lake of fire," but without specification as to what fire, only "it burned with brimstone." Now, this event thus barely stated synchronizes precisely in point of time with the events of Matt. 31–41, if so be that the symbols employed in Rev. 19: 11–20 do at all represent the personal coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the final conflict of the antichristian earth-powers against him; but, according to chap. 17: 14, such is the case. Now this being so, we must of necessity find the Devil going into the same fire into which the beast and false prophet are previously cast, or we must admit our view of the subject erroneous, or else, the Devil gets into more than one fire, or the wrong one, and not the one prepared for him. But if John does testify that the Devil does subsequently go into this same fire, then it follows, as a corollary, that the beast and the false prophet of Rev. 19: 20, the ten kings of chap. 13: 1, and chap. 17: 12, the two-horned beast of chap. 13: 11–17, and chap. 17: 12–14, with the worshipers of the beast and his image, chap. 14: 9–10, are collectively identical with (one and the same as) "the goats on the left" of Matt. 25: 33, and the "ye cursed" of verse 41, described by our Lord. And John does so testify in Rev. 20: 10, in these words: "And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

For the World's Crisis.

"BE NOT WEARY IN WELL DOING."

"And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

As a natural result arising from the inherent frailties of human nature and the unholy influences which are prevalent, man is inclined to grow weary in the work which it is necessary for him to perform in order to secure the reward God has promised to the faithful, which is eternal life, or the apostle Paul never would have exhorted his brethren to not be weary in well doing. Life is fraught with cares, trials, and temptations. But to those that love Jesus, and look to him for assistance, strength and faith is given to enable them to resist and overcome evil.

Judging from a wrong stand-point, many impressions have been received by man which time and after experience have shown to be false; one of which has been to many a convert only the precedent of sorrow and darkness, and caused him to doubt the genuineness of his conversion. It is the impression entertained that the conversion of a person exempts him from, or places him beyond, molestation by temptation, trouble, and disappointment; and consequently he anticipates only peace and happiness in this life, and thinks not that he will ever grow weary in well-doing.

As the result of the false impression he entertains, he thinks it will be very easy for him to always do right, though all around him do wrong. But if this is true, and there are no obstructions in the onward and upward course of the christian, what need is there of Paul's exhortation to not be weary in well doing? When we reason on the formation and development or growth of things in the natural and physical world, we regard the laws of nature as our standard. We know that to accomplish a certain object certain labor must be performed, and that to produce a certain result certain means must be employed. And when we reason on the formation and development of the christian character as connected with the plan of redemption by Christ, we should regard the principles and laws revealed in the Bible as our standard, or our reasoning will only tend to lead us astray. As in nature reason fails to make all plain, and faith is allowed to come in, so in reasoning on the plan of salvation, where reason fails faith must take its place.

The scholar who wishes to attain an eminent position among the learned and wise of his age, must labor long and arduously ere his wishes will be realized. If he becomes discouraged as the obstacles in the road to eminence loom up before him, and ceases to labor, he will not become learned or wise. Or, if he sits idly down with folded hands expecting that learning will come as the result of his wishing for it, he is destined to be sadly disappointed.

So it is with the child of God; if he grows weary in well doing, falters, and ceases to press his way onward, he will not reap the reward. The farmer who, in the spring casts his seed without care on the unprepared soil, then departs and in the fall returns to gather in the sheaves of grain, knows little of the laws of nature, or else regards them not. He might as well have left the seed in his store-house. And they who would reap the reward of eternal life must not only work where, when, and as God wants them to. The architect who wishes to rear a magnificent structure, must first prepare the material for use, next lay the foundation and raise the frame, and then bestow a great deal of care and labor on it to make it a beautiful and perfect structure. Without patience and perseverance he will not finish it.

Neither will the follower of Jesus without patience and perseverance overcome the discouragements which surround him, and prepare for translation. The tall oak of the forest which defies the winds and storms was once a little tree, and easily bent by the winds, which now only sway its small branches. Its growth from the commencement of one week to another was so little that it was not noticed. But the growth of many years has increased its size and strength, and now it is the king of the forest.

So, little by little, advancement is made in the onward and upward way. When one evil is overcome, new strength is gained to overcome another. When one temptation is resisted, courage and strength are gained to resist another. It requires time for the heart reconciled to God to develop the strength and beauty of the christian graces perfectly, and in emergency bring them into exercise so that they will adorn life.

If it is so easy for us to do right that there is no danger of our doing wrong, why did Jesus tell his disciples on the memorable night of his betrayal, as he anticipated the severe test their faith must so soon meet with, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." It was necessary for them to watch and pray. And from that time it has been necessary for the household of faith to watch and pray.

And now, while the darkness which precedes the flush of twilight has overspread the earth, shall we cease to watch and pray, and neglect to continue in well doing. The arm that lifted us up out of the horrible pit and miry clay, into which we as sinners had fallen, is strong enough for us to lean on now. The hand that was pierced for us shall lead us safely through this world. Then let the weak take courage, for faith whispers we shall reap if we faint not, and that, too, in a little while; and in the circling ages of the endless future dwell in the presence of the Lamb. The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, March 17, 1869.

☞ Take Notice!

☞ All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

☞ All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

☞ Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us your NAME and POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

NEW VOLUME.

With this number begins a new volume. Now is the time to obtain new subscribers. We are thankful to our friends for what they have accomplished during the past few months. Can not more be done during the next few months than ever before? The people need just such truths as are weekly issued in the Crisis. Unless something is done soon, we fear many will be engulphed in the whirlpool of infidelity. Shall we not make an extra effort to reach them, and get them interested in the study of the Bible? How can we do it better than by persuading them to take "our paper?" Will not the preachers interest themselves anew in this work, and do all they can to get new subscribers? Some have already done nobly.

WRITING FOR PAPERS.

Those who write for publication should use good black ink, a coarse pen, and have their lines a good distance from each other. We sometimes receive communications with lines only half the distance apart of common ruled paper. It is difficult for compositors to set such manuscript, as they are obliged to read it some distance from the eyes. We are not particular that articles should be written only on one side of the paper; but write very plainly, especially names of persons and places. Please observe these requests, and it will add much to the comfort of our faithful compositors.

QUOTATIONS.

We wish that all who make quotations in their articles for the Crisis, from the Bible, history, or any other book, would be very particular to quote word for word, just as it is in the book. If you wish to quote scripture, always turn to the passage, and then be sure that not a word is put in, or left out in what is marked as a quotation. If a single word is left out, then put three or four periods in the place of the omission, thus,—. . . ., so that the reader may know where the connection in the quotation is broken. If all our writers would observe this rule, it would save us much labor. Please remember this, and do not quote from memory. Be accurate. Lovers of the truth should be exceedingly careful to have every thing just right.

TO THE PREACHERS.

We wish to say a word to our preaching Brn. concerning "our paper." Those who read the Crisis are anxious to hear from you. It would add much interest to the paper if you would write more; even if it was only a short letter of ten lines; indeed, we do not ask for long articles, but a good many short ones. Please send a word of exhortation and comfort to the scattered saints. It will be to them like a pleasant call. This is certainly so. Do not begin to excuse yourselves, and say, O I can't write any thing for the Crisis; there is enough without mine. No, there is not enough without yours. Men who can preach can write a few words for the edification of those who love Jesus. Do not make any more excuses, but sit down at once and begin; and you will find in almost every case you will be more likely to say too much than not enough. The most difficult part is to get the pen into the hand and make a beginning. You will get along well enough after that. There is not one in a hundred who is conscious of what he is capable of doing. Come try. Help us make "our paper" more interesting than ever before. Will you do it?

Do not keep silent any longer. Your cheering epistles, words of counsel, and admonitions, are needed to help keep the church in a healthy condition. Let every one do a little, and much good will be accomplished.

NEW BEDFORD.

We commenced meetings in the City Hall, in New Bedford, March 7th, and have continued them every evening to this date (March 11th,) and with most encouraging results. The City Hall is a very excellent place for our meetings. It is a large and elegant room, very finely lighted. It is kept in a very choice manner, and has not been used before for religious meetings. It was obtained through the kindness of the city Clerk, who loves the word of the Lord. Our audiences have been large, attentive and intelligent. It was a pleasure to speak to such congregations. They seemed anxious to hear on the great truths of the Bible, which have been so sadly neglected by many who stand as watchmen upon the walls of Zion.

In all places we find an increasing desire to hear on the prophetic Scriptures, which show where we are in the history of the world. Men are becoming tired of mere moral essays, instead of sermons that unfold the holy Scriptures. They are getting sick of shadows, and are calling for the substance. They begin to see that much of the preaching of the day contains but very little Bible truth, either practical, doctrinal or prophetical; and that it is time to inquire for "the old paths." Several preachers were in, with some of whom we had very pleasant conversation. They all appeared kind and friendly. We met some sixteen of the New Bedford preachers, and formed a good opinion of them as a body. Some of them believe the great truths for which we have been rejected from popular pulpits. There is evidently less of sectarianism among them than is seen in most ministers. We were pleased with their modest, plain, unassuming manner.

Each evening we have prayer-meetings from half-past six to half-past seven o'clock, and they are excellent. The prayers, exhortations and songs are really heart-cheering, because they proceed from hearts filled with the love of Jesus. The prospect is very encouraging. Brn. M. Batchelor and J. W. Thomas are present to assist in the meetings. They are true men of God, whose labors are blest wherever they go.

PERSONAL.

BRO. J. W. THOMAS has concluded to go to Canada, and spend some time at Danville. We congratulate our Brn. and Srs. there for the favor they are about to enjoy in the labors of Bro. T., whom we know to be a faithful young man in the vineyard of the Lord.

We met BRO. A. A. PHELPS in Boston, with whom we had a very pleasant interview. He is worthy of the sympathies of all the good, and should receive their hearty support, while he is faithfully engaged in the service of the Lord. For the sake of the truth, he left a good situation, and received the frowns of former friends; but he glories in the cross, and is ready to suffer still more for the sake of Jesus and his word.

HINTS ABOUT MEETING-HOUSES.

A Bro. wishes us to say a word about the best form for a meeting-house. Our own choice would be to have the width about two-thirds the length; flat ceiling, and very high, the higher the better, as it gives more room for pure air. We have never seen one too high, but many that are too low. If the house was only twenty by thirty, we would not have the posts less than fourteen feet, sixteen would be better.

The subject of ventilation requires special attention. With very little expense, a house can be well ventilated; but we seldom find one that is even tolerable. We had rather preach three sermons in a well ventilated house, than one in houses as they are generally arranged. About all the trouble we have in our meetings is a want of fresh air. We have suffered more for want of this, than every thing else. Bad air may very properly be called a meeting-killer. It exhausts the preacher, gives him a sore throat, produces stupidity in the hearers, headache, and a feeling well-known to many preachers, who talk about "blue Mondays." We must have fresh air if we would feel well physically, mentally and spiritually.

How shall pure air be secured in a crowded house? This is a vital question, and is easy to answer. We will first give a few facts relative to the laws that govern the atmosphere. Pure air, when heated rises to the top of the room, and the cold air remains at the bottom, because heavier; hence the people in the gallery may be warm, while those below are suffering with the cold. if the air remained pure all the time after being breathed by living beings, we would only need some place in the ceiling to let the hot air escape. But this as not the case. Air that has been breathed once is not fit to be inhaled again, because it becomes corrupted by passing through the system. Just think of the condition of a crowd of people in an unventilated room. In a few moments the air will have been breathed over once, having passed through systems impregnated with various diseases; and then it comes your turn to take that corrupted air into your delicate system again, growing worse all the while, till stupor comes over you, and your vital powers and senses are prostrated and blunted, so that you are not aware of your perilous condition. Let some one come in then from outside, and they would be shocked at the stench of the atmosphere in the room.

Now what is the remedy for this? Air that has been breathed becomes heavier than common, pure air, and falls to the floor. If there is no ventilation only at the top of the room, then this bad, heavy air must be inhaled over, to a large extent, before it can escape at the top ventilator. To remedy this, there should be large ventilators at the bottom of the room, where the bad air, that has been used, can make its escape; and at the same time let in fresh air to supply the waste.

Some years since, we were holding meetings in a house that had no means provided for ventilation. The room was good height, but the air soon became quite impure, and we were obliged to have the windows lowered. This made it inconvenient for those who sat near the windows, because of the current of the atmosphere, which came in upon their heads. We then had a trap-door prepared directly over the preacher's desk, with a rope attached, which came down the back side of the desk, and placed under the control of the speaker. This afforded some relief from mere hot air, but was not sufficient. We next had another rope attached to the lower sash in the gable end, and that rope also came down the back side of the preacher's desk. With these two open, the room could be easily relieved of pure hot air; but this did not provide a proper escape for the bad, heavy air that had fallen to the floor; neither did it give a proper supply of fresh air. To meet these two difficulties, we had a hole cut under each stove, some two and a half feet long, and about eighteen inches wide, and by this means secured what we so much desired. Through these the bad air escaped before it rose up to our heads, and the fresh air came in, without troubling any one, as it was a relief to those who sat near the stove. If the weather was quite cold, the air coming up under the stove would be warmed some before it was ditributed through the room.

In addition to this, we would have another place about the preacher's desk some two feet square, that could be opened to let out bad air and let in the fresh. This should be below the heads of the audience. These arrangements are substitutes for the old-fashioned fire-places, which always kept a room in a healthy condition, by means of the drafts up chimney, which produced a constant change the atmosphere.

Every room or fire-place not supplied with an open grate, should have ventilation at the top and bottom. In a small meeting-house, where but one stove is necessary, we would put it near the door, and have the pipe run the whole length of the house, passing over the aisle, so as not to heat the heads of any. If two stoves are used, and there are two aisles, then we would put both stoves near the door, and run the pipes over each aisle to the other end of the house; or else put one stove at one end, and the other near the desk, and run the pipes in opposite directions.

We would say again, be thorough in arranging for ventilation, especially at the bottom of room. It will cost but a trifle. When the house is built, the best way is to run up wooden boxes by the side of the chimneys, with registers at the top and bottom. These may answer for ordinary congregations, but for the crowd, you will need all the others of which we have spoken. We consider a house of double value when properly ventilated. Pure air is essential to all who wish to feel well.

We never sleep with a closed window, either in summer or winter. It is no wonder that some people always feel poorly in the morning, and get up with sore throats. The rooms in which they sleep smell horribly, in consequence of the bad air, breathed over so many times. Many sick persons would get well if they only had pure air, who are now dragging out a miserable existence, because they are so stinted for "the breath of life."

THEATRE COMIQUE.—We learn that Bro. Hook had a good time in the Theatre Comique last Sabbath, and has decided to be there again March 21st. The congregations, attention and interest are good, and increasing. He is to baptize next Sabbath at 5 P. M. in the Mystic river.

"THE ADVENTISTS' 'DEVIL.'"

It is evident that the Devil very much dislikes exposure; and when his tricks and traps are brought to light, he takes special pains to stir up his followers to make ridicule of those who believe in his existence, in order to stop any further exposure.

Under the above heading, we found the following in the Banner of Light [Spiritualist], Feb. 27th, 1869:—

"The World's Crisis says: 'Where the hedge is lowest the devil leaps over.' We are not personally acquainted with this Orthodox personage, but we are of the opinion the hedge is lowest about the Advent doctrine and its churches, consequently this biped, or quadruped, whichever he, she or it is, could jump in or out quite easily. Whether in or out, or both, we cannot say, but we recommend trapping the critter and putting it beside the sea-serpent (or the stuffed skin of it) in the new Museum in New York, provided our devil-fearing brethren could spare it from their catalogue of supernatural beings and agencies for evil. There is, however, little prospect of getting our Advent friends to give him up at present, since the increased necessity of using it to account for all the spiritual phenomena. We never read one of our Advent exchanges without being struck with the evident signs of a morbid, but not dangerous insanity that pervades most of the writings. We have ever noticed the same in their speakers, and attribute much of it to a ridiculous belief in a devil, and his power over the affairs of this world. The age of supernaturalism is near a foreclosure with the rational minds of all classes of people, and we rejoice in the prospect of 'a good time coming.'"

We also "rejoice in the prospect of a 'good time coming,'" when those who scoff at the doctrine of the Bible, make Jesus but the bastard son of Joseph, mock his followers, and trample upon his divine teaching, will be put to silence, the truth triumph for ever, and the lying demons, who pretend to be departed human spirits, will end their work of deception.

"DESTRUCTION OF THE FLESH."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you be so kind as to give me a little light on a passage of Scripture found in 1 Cor. 5: 5? I do not understand it. You will confer a favor on me by giving me your opinion of the passage through the Crisis. Your Bro. in Christ,

R. M. HURLBUT.

The passage reads as follows: "Deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." "The day of the Lord Jesus" is yet future, hence the salvation named is not at death.

Other renderings of the passage make it plainer than it is in King James' version. Wakefield renders it "for a punishment of the flesh." Mace renders it, "To suffer corporeal punishment." Belsham says, "The Latin fathers and Beza thought that . . . by the destruction of the flesh was meant the destruction of the offender's pride, lust, and fleshly passions." Beza says, "By this means [excommunication] his flesh may be tamed, that he may learn to live to the Spirit."—Belsham, vol. 1, p. 252. The Syriac version reads: "That in spirit he may have life."

The obvious meaning of the passage appears to be this: the punishment, or chastisement, was designed to lead the individual to live so that his spirit, or disposition, might be in harmony with the Spirit of the Lord, in order that he might "be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus," when he comes to reign in his kingdom.

☞ INSTRUCTION.

Brethren sending appointments for the Crisis will please send on a separate slip from other business matters, and will write them after the following form, and save very much trouble:—

Boston, Mass., (Lowell St. Chapel), Sabbath, March 7th.

Densmore Hill, Vt., Sabbath, March 14th.

Concord, N. H., (Centre St.), Sabbath, March 14th.

Or, Concord, N. H., (Bethel), Sabbath, March 14th.

Write the town first, then the place in the town, then the time, and then it is ready for the compositor without altering or copying.

GERMAN TRACTS.

1. "The Hope of the Dead in Christ."
2. "The Future Doom of the Ungodly."
3. "What is Man?"
4. "Answer to the Charge of Heresy."
5. "Rich Man and Lazarus."

Price by mail: Single copy, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents. Postage 4 cents. For sale at this office. AG'T.

☞ BOOK MARKS.

Some of our brethren have inquired where they could get these little pointers, ☞ for book marks to stick on the leaves of their Bibles, to point to the passages they want to refer to. For the accomodation of all such, we have some for sale at the office. Price, a card of twelve for 25 cts. AG'T.

☞ Do not fail to read with care the article headed, "Calamity, or Penalty."

For the World's Crisis.

ANOTHER INVITATION AND WARNING.

"Prepare to meet thy God." "The Judge is at the door!" "The consuming fires of earth's last day are approaching, and doom of the ungodly near at hand."

On a single sheet of good size and form for posting, framing or distribution, sent by mail at 2 cents, and stamp per copy, or ten copies for 15 cents; fifty copies, 65 cents; one hundred copies, $1.25. The prophet says, "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it."

BRISTOL.

Because of the interest manifested at East Haddam, where Bro. L. F. Moore has been laboring, I shall be obliged to withdraw my appointment for Bristol, for Sabbath, March 21st, remaining in East Haddam for the present. Already twenty-three souls have been to the anxious seat, and some of these we believe are happily converted to God.

VISIT TO MT. VERNON.

THE MOB.

Many are anxious to know more of the case of the attempt by these misguided young men, to cut down our tent last fall. By permission I will say, The fellows found their friends did not sustain them, but advised us to bring them to court. This we did not like to do, and yet it seemed wronging them to let it pass unnoticed. While delaying to act, they asked and even urged for terms of adjustment, but did not ask forgiveness.

It was thought best to give them the opportunity to show som efruit of regret, and give some guarrantee for future good behavior, without attempting to lay the heavy fines of the law upon them; thus they were allowed to pay to the tent committee one hundred dollars, and to Bro. D. W. Griffin (for stoning him) twenty-five dollars, which they gladly did, and signed a bond for future good behavior.

It was thought by some of our brethren abroad that this was not right, and that it would act against the influence of our preaching there. I consequently add, I have recently visited the place, called on several of the parties, and their parents, and found them respectful and kind. The parents expressed gratitude to us for the course pursued, and told me the community were satisfied and pleased, only some thought their case was settled too easily; they wished me to come and hold a protracted meeting in their Mission meeting-house as soon as I could, and stated that this was a general wish. I intend to go if my other engagments will allow.

Several wanderers have been reclaimed, others awakened, and a general inquiring into the truth, as a result of the tent meeting. May the Lord work among them, and convert those young men. I. C. WELLCOME.

ROCHESTER.

After an absence of two months East, I returned to this place, and have spent one Sabbath with the saints here. Never had I a more cordial greeting than now. We spent this day with them in joyous hope of eternal rest together in the kingdom. Bro. Thurber's faithful labors have been blessed; good has been accomplished, and some are ready for the baptismal waters. I trust I shall be able to report good progress here in future.

Our new hall, though three stories up, is well filled, and a Sabbath School numbering one hundred and fifteen is especially interesting. Many good families will leave us this spring for other parts, but I trust their places will be supplied by others, as in the past.

Brethren, pray for Rochester, that this thrifty branch of the Lord's planting may be preserved fruitful until "that day."

Yours in hope, H. PRATT.

P. S.—I expect to be east in April. Those wishing my labors will write me at once, at Rochester, N. Y., No. 98 South Saint Paul St., and I will arrange accordingly.

I am credibly informed that Thomas K. Beecher, brother of Henry Ward Beecher, has stirred up the town of Almira wonderfully, in preaching that we might expect the personal advent of Christ in 1869. Amen.

OUR WANTS IN THE MISSION FIELD.

We are in need of clothing, shoes, and any articles of use, new or old, among the poor at the missions in St. Louis and Memphis. These missions are established and are prospering in their labors among the poor, and they should be sustained in their good work.

1. I would make a special request for Eld. Comodore Decatur, Compton Hill, St. Louis. He is laboring hard to keep up his school and church, and is worthy of sympathy and help. There are many poor children in his neighborhood who need clothing and shoes at this time to fit them for school; and if the friends of the poor in some town or city should make him up a barrel of articles suitable for these poor ones, the blessing of the poor would rest upon them.

2. Others have need also in other schools of the Mission, which should be sent to Arthur Waite, 1136 North Fifth-street, St. Louis, Mo. The barrel for Bro. Decatur should be directed to Comodore Decatur, care of A. Waite, 1136 North Fifth street, St. Louis, Mo.

3. Memphis should be remembered also, as they have many poor ones to look after.

4. Another thing I would call the attention of the Lord's stewards to, is this. Our Mission families have to purchase all their vegetables, flour, and groceries at very high prices, especially at Memphis, where flour is from eighteen to twenty dollars a barrel. Any thing in the way of living could be sent in the boats from Cincinnati, Ohio, down the River. Also down the Mississippi, from any point above, most convenient, as the transportation to St. Louis and Memphis would not be very high. Let the friends of the Mission look to this matter and do what the spirit of the Good Samaritan shall bid them. Whatever is given in this way will lighten the expenses of the Mission and be of help to the Mission. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

P. S.—When any persons propose to send a barrel (and a good strong flour barrel is the best thing to send in), write to those to whom you propose to send, and tell them when, and where, and by what line you send. Please do not send by express unless it is something very special. The "Star Line" is the best for transportation through. The depot of this line is near the Mission. J. V. H.

A DAY.

Sunday, Feb. 28th, 1869. Very pleasant; the sun rising in all its glory, casts its beams with unusual splendor athwart the smiling earth. Nature seems to wear a smile indeed; and as the songs of praise swell up from the humble band of morning worshipers, ere we are fairly awake, there comes a sweet feeling of joy that the day of rest has come, and that it is for his service that we must prepare.

At eleven o'clock we meet for prayer and conference; at twelve the Sabbath School begins; two hundred dusky faces assemble for the purpose of learning of the word of God; and then two hundred ebony pipes pour forth melodious strains,—for they can all sing in praise of him who is no respecter of persons.

After the Sabbath School, we listen to a sermon by Bro. Leroy Jackson, of Oseola, Arkansas, a colored brother, a little more than a year old in the faith of the kingdom, followed in remarks by Bro. Ephraim Sledge, a deep solemnity resting on all present.

Met again in the evening at half past seven o'clock. Bro. Leslie spoke on the duties and responsibilities of watchmen. The subject was chosen on account of the proposed setting apart of two of the brethren for the work of the ministry. The solemnity of the meeting was deepened by his close enforcement of Scriptural duties, especially of the Shepherds. Then followed the ordination of Brn. Edmund Webster and Peyton Alston, both colored and formerly slaves. "What hath God wrought for these?"

Three years ago, Bro. Webster was a wild, reckless fellow, without God or hope in the world, and entirely ignorant of his letters; he learned them a little over a year ago, and is now a fluent reader, and has the key to all knowledge. He loves the word of God, and he has called him to labor in his vineyard, and feeling his own unworthiness, he has gone forth bearing all for Christ's sake. May the Lord keep him in the way of truth and righteousness. Bro. Alston, also, had been deprived of all advantages of an education until recently, but with the Spirit in his heart, and a zeal for the perishing, he sounds the gospel trumpet, knowing that time is short, and the Lord is soon coming.

It is somewhat remarkable that so many of these poor unlearned ones are looking for the Lord, without ever having heard of such a thing from any human source.

One week ago to-day, a woman came to the chapel door and said she had a message from the Lord that she wished to deliver to this church. We inquired what the message was, and she replied: "Repent ye! repent ye! for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" We told her that that was just what we were proclaiming, and that we would be glad to have her testify here.

On being asked if any one had ever told her that the judgment was near—for she lives a number of miles from here,—she said, "Nobody but de Lord. He tole me to go to every church in Memphis an tell dem dis message, an if dey wouldn't he' me, I would leab it at de do, and it would rise up agin dem in dat day." She gave her message in the afternoon, and the Spirit of the Lord did truly assist her.

Thus the Lord is working by his Spirit, and warning the ungodly to flee from the wrath so soon to be pourd out upon them that obey not the gospel. Our meetings are steadily increasing in interest. Six have professed a hope in Christ, and still the work goes on.

I have thus written but an item of the incidents which might be chronicled, but the Lord keeps a record of the work, and may he bless everything to his honor. And amid all the cares and perplexities incident to this sort of life, this one thought bears us up, "It is all for the Lord." L. F. COLE.

A CORRECTION.

In the Report of the Mass. State Conference, recently held in this city, an error occurred in connection with the Resolution presented by me and adopted by the Conference.

The question was fully discussed, and the brethren present will bear me witness that it was the intention of the mover, and so understood by the Conference, to re-consider the vote of the Chelsea Conference touching the "non-living of the unholy dead," and to substitute in its place a resolution expressive of disapproval of making any one point of doctrine of such special prominence as to exclude all other subjects, and thus to create dissension and division in the churches.

That such preaching could not be profitable, let the subject discussed be of whatever kind, or however important in itself.

It was well understood what the intention was, but by an oversight in hastily preparing the "resolution" for the Secretary, the "notes" were not correctly copied.

This correction is due to myself and other brethren who assisted in drafting the resolution, as an erroneous impression prevails that I have changed my position on this question, and wish to muzzle the preaching of the doctrine of "future life only through Christ" in our churches.

It is not so. I believe in and practice and accord to others the fullest liberty of thought and speech, on this and every other subject connected with God's great plan of redemption through Jesus Christ.

But I think that we should study to know what will most profit the church and build her up on "her most holy faith." I can not believe it profitable to persistently present subjects to the churches that are displeasing and repulsive, even though they may be the truth.

What is needed among us is more heavenly wisdom and spiritual mindedness, to say the right things, in the right way, and at the right time. May God give me more of this spirit, is my constant prayer. R. E. LADD.

MAINE WEST. QUAR. CONF.

Our quarterly meeting at South Gardiner, Booker meeting-house, convened March 4th, and was an excellent one. The weather was fine, the attendance good, and the faithful workers were active in the work of Christ; thus they were refreshed and strengthened, and enjoyed the meetings much. Some who had not been active were quickened to duty; others who were backslidden were awakened to consider their sad condition. May the Lord lead them back to his fold. The ministering brethren in attendance were Elds. H. D. Reed, C. Goud, H. S. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome. The solemn truths preached relating to the faith and hope of the gospel, the duty it imposes upon all men, the signs of the times, and prospect of our Lord's returning soon, were listened to with much interest. May the Lord bless them to the reviving of his work and the saving of sinners there.

We adjourned to meet in Bowdoin, Union meeting-house, in June, if the Lord will.

Correspondence.

From Bro. I. I. Leslie.

BRO. GRANT:—Many friends have written me of late inquiring why I do not write more in regard to our work here, and so keep the people better informed respecting the condition and wants of the Mission.

I would say to all interested that there are reasons why no more has been reported by me in regard to this Mission. It has not been because of a lack of matter interesting to every lover of Christ and his cause, nor a want of interest on the part of every missionary who has come here.

We would all be glad to give through the papers a full account of our work and success here in bringing souls to Christ, and preparing a people in this wicked city for the Lord. We know that God is doing a great work here, and that it would be for his glory to have it published abroad. It is in our hearts to acknowledge all his goodness and mercy to us and this people; and could it be done without giving offense to any one, or creating jealousy, we should be glad. We are, however, willing that our record should be kept only on high, and the great day at hand alone reveal the results of our labors and sacrifices here.

This people are God's people. Certain men may ignore this fact, but it nevertheless remains one. If we all could fully learn and feel the force of the declaration of God, that he is no respecter of persons, but that in every nation, they that fear him are alike accepted of him, our Christianity would be deeper and broader, and our love to God stronger and more abundant; while selfishness, conceit, with narrowness of mind, would cease to exist. Can there be true love to God where these are found? For my part, I lose my confidence where I find this spirit and feeling cherished in the heart of professing christians. It is not Christ-like; and they who indulge in these feelings cannot be fully the Lord's.

Men may love their families, neighbors, nation and race, but if their love extends no further, but indifference, prejudice and contempt are felt by them towards all others, they are destitute of the true element of love, and fall far short of being perfect men in Christ Jesus.

They preach, but they preach to their own; the great commission they seem unwilling to fulfill. To their own race and nation they are willing to proclaim the gospel; but "to every creature"—to other nations and tribes near or remote, they care not to go forth. They believe that out of every people, nation and tongue will come the multitude of the saved; but not until they are saved, do they wish to recognize them as their brethren, or associate with them. "We can not mingle with you now. Wait until we all get into the kingdom of God; then you will be like us, or we shall be alike; then there will be nothing to separate us; now there is. Your race, your color, now prevent us from associating with you; then we shall be all of one race and one color."

I have no sympathy with the religion which prompts or allows us to make distinctions where God does not. There is a lesson for many among us to learn; and the sooner it is learned the sooner we, as a people, shall be ready for the coming and kingdom of Christ.

The Lord is still carrying forward his work here. The work of preparation for the judgment is being consummated among this people; many of whom are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb. They will be ready, and just as good there as any body. All glory be to God that he is not like man.

BRO. GRANT:—It being utterly impossible to correspond individually with all those dear friends who have taken pains to write me so many blessed good letters, I take this method to express my sincere gratitude to one and all, for their kindness.

Thank God for christian correspondence, congenial souls, whose sympathy I prove, although distant in body, and fellowship with those who drink from the same stream of life and peace. Dear friends, be assured these heaven-bought joys are duly appreciated by me. I find it to be a great source of comfort and consolation to peruse your soul-cheering epistles in my sad, lonely hours; and I am encouraged by hearing of your growth and increase in the graces of the Spirit. The earnest, fervent prayer of my heart is, that you may be led into all truth, and be preserved blameless. I do experience a holy ambition to urge me onward. All I have and am are on the altar. I feel that I am fully weaned from all terrestrial things. They have lost all their charms for me, since, one by one, the dear loved ones have fallen out from the family fold. By an eye of faith, I can look beyond this vail of tears; and oh! it fills my heart with joy to know the time is so near when death, and he who hath its power, shall be destroyed; for then our loved treasures will come forth from their dusty beds, and unite in the general song of triumph over death, no more to be separated from those they loved. Oh, how enrapturing the hope! Blessed, thrice blessed and ever-desired consummation.

Oh, ye weary pilgrims, take courage; it is but a little while we have to contend with the powers of darkness. Brief is the moment now in waiting till he most desired shall come; then be faithful to thy mission in the service of the Lord, and soon a golden chaplet shall be thy just reward.

Hoping to meet you with the pure, in the city of our Savior, I remain your affectionate Sister in Christ, MRS. C. B. TURNER.

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 28th, 1869.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Knowing that you are all anxious to hear from me, and as I promised many of you, I will write you through the Crisis. I am only able to sit up a little while at a time, as I am just recovering from a severe fit of sickness. Since the 23d of February have been on my bed here at Dr. Rogers, under whose medical treatment I have been ever since. He has done all that professional skill and kindness could do to relieve my pain and make me comfortable. His wife too, God bless her, has been up early and late to see what more could be done for me, to raise me from this bed of affliction as soon as possible; and Sr. Bradbury, God bless her, left her own home and came and staid with me all the time I was sick. O! such kindness is more than we missionaries are used to. I shall always remember the very kind attention I have received from this dear christian family; and my children will ever hold them in grateful remembrance for the kindness bestowed upon their mother during her illness.

I left home on the 9th of January, leaving no money in the treasury to meet expenses of the Mission, or to pay the month's rent, which would soon be due; intending to send home weekly what I received for my labors, either by collections, donations, selling reports, or pictures, to sustain the missionaries, while they take charge of the work there already begun, in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, attending to the meetings and Sabbath School in the Mission home; besides carrying nourishment and medicine to the sick. To do this I traveled forty-five days, and preached fifty sermons. Nearly my whole time was spent in the cars, depot, or pulpit; no rest, no time for rest; labored just as faithfully among the little churches as I did among the large ones; preached just as much for a collection of $1.70, as I did for $8 or $7. The weather was very cold, and the snow deep, but it kept on snowing. I went from New York to Maine, sleeping sometimes in warm rooms, sometimes in cold. With these changes and changes of diet, with hard labor, getting up in the morning before day, riding sometimes three and sometimes seven miles through a dreadful snow or rain storm, to catch the first train so as to make a connection, in order to meet my next appointment; arriving at the place through snow and cold, feet wet, tired, faint and sick; unable to eat any thing; only about an hour to meeting-time; hall full, and everybody's eyes and ears open to hear some great thing from a woman, and if it is not something extra, going away dissatisfied;—thus laboring and toiling until nature was exhausted, I could go no further, and finally sank upon a bed of sickness and pain.

All this to sustain a mission that reaches away down below any other mission work; for I know that we do hunt up those underground sinners that no other institution will, because they must be brought to the surface before they can be reached, and some one must go and bring them up. We have felt that this was our work. We have done it with all our souls, and still love to do it, but can not do that and sustain the Home, too, by preaching. Nor do we believe that Father wants us to, and so we may return to our silent, quiet work of Bible reading in the garrets and cellars, or down in our Southern field. Certain we are the poor, miserable souls must have this compelling message, and we still believe that God did call us to this work.

We shall still work in this underground field; that is, if we are raised to health to do so. What means the Lord has for us to use in this work we know not, but we will trust him, for we have had to trust in him ever since we were eight years old; and although other friends forsake us and pass on the other side and leave us to die, this Friend has never left us in the time of trouble. Bless his holy name!

I have thought much of our mission work while I have lain on this sick bed, but have no plans for the future. When well, I could plan, and ask God to guide me in all my arrangements; and he did so, and blessed every thing I did; but now I have no strength of mind or body, and of course I with my scattered family and my mission work are all in his hands. I know he "is too wise to err, too good to be unkind." O, I have thought since confined to this bed of suffering of the happy home I once had in Philadelphia; plenty of friends, plenty of money, children and all happy; to-day all scattered, to further on this great and last work of God, and prepare some of the worst of mankind to meet their Judge. My children cannot be with me, because the neighborhood where this kind of work is to be done is not a fit place for them. The wickedness, drunkenness, and obscene sights in open daylight I do not wish them to behold; so of course their home is broken up; but all this we can endure cheerfully. But when all this is misrepresented, and we are reported as having some other motive in view beside the glory of God and the salvation of sinners, how heart-rending, how crushing! Shall we invite those who have misrepresented us for their consolation to read the thirty-fifth and forty-first Psalms? or shall we ask the Lord to have mercy on them? for they know nothing of our sorrows, toils, tears, and labors, nor what it costs to sustain such a mighty work.

What our work shall be in the future we know not; but one thing assures us, the Lord will provide. I intend to stand still and work for God, keep all on the altar, and try to lead sinners to Christ, and finally have an abundant entrance into my Father's kingdom.

I would also say to dear friends whose hearts are with us in this underground work, and who have so kindly said in their letters, "our mission," the Lord bless you for the interest you have taken and do take with us in this work. I would say that I have been enabled to send home every week to my Secretary, M. E. Dow, what has held them together with what the Lord has sent by letter, which you have seen in the Crisis from time to time, until I was taken sick; and now lie helpless in his hand to see what his will is concerning us. Many thanks to you for your kindness toward us and our work. May the God of all grace be with you all. Yours in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

From Sr. M. E. Otis.

Bro. GRANT:—The Lord is at work in this place. I was invited here a few weeks ago by an Advent brother who lives in this vicinity, and whom I met in Fall River. I came here as soon as I had opportunity, and commenced laboring. Stayed here about a week. Found there was an interest to hear the gospel, and some inquiring the way of salvation. But as I had an appointment at another place I had to leave, but I returned after an absence of three weeks, and found that the interest had not subsided. I commenced laboring here again, and have found that my labors have not been in vain in the Lord. Have labored here about a fortnight, and for a week past there have been from four to sixteen forward for prayers.

Saturday I was obliged to leave to fulfill an appointment I had made for Dartmouth before this work had broken out. After the afternoon meeting at Dartmouth, yesterday, I was conveyed back to this place, a distance of fourteen miles, and found a crowded house awaiting my arrival. After talking a little while, I gave the time to brethren and sisters, and there were many exhortations in the hour that followed. A number that have found peace in believing stood boldly up to declare what the Lord had done for them. At the close fourteen came forward for prayers.

I intend to remain here through this week, and as much longer as the cause may demand. Your sister waiting for redemption,

Berkeley, March 1st. M. E. OTIS.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. JESSE PARTRIDGE, Richmond, March 4th, writes:—"The Lord is reviving his work in this place, by reclaiming the backsliders and converting stout-hearted sinners. Twenty-four give clear evidence of being converted. Seven backsliders have been reclaimed, and several others are seeking the Lord. The professed christians of other denominations are led to exclaim that this is the work of God. Infidels and skeptics are made to tremble in view of the coming judgment. All that have started in this glorious work have come out with decision to go forward. It is reaching a class that have stood out against the word of God, until they have become convinced, many of them, that this is the last call of mercy to them. One gentleman, sixty-nine years old, stated that he had not been into a meeting for twenty-two years. Another, that he had not been into a meeting for eighteen years. The entire work is one that convinces gainsayers that "the Lord is in the place" of a truth.

About all that have started in this work are husbands with their wives,—but very few young persons. There seems to be a deep solemnity resting on all that attend. On Sunday evening many cannot get in, and have to go away for want of room. I have been laboring here for the past year, and some times it has looked very dark; but a few of us to hold up this great truth, and many things to discourage, but still we have been enabled to hold on until we have seen the mercy of the Lord in the salvation of a goodly number of our neighbors, who are happy in his love, and others are sorrowing for their sins. All praise to the Lord for his wondrous work."

SR. M. H. AUSTIN, Farmington, N. H., Feb. 21st, writes:—"The Lord is reviving his work here. Bless his dear name. He is indeed a prayer answering God. We have two or three prayer-meetings a week, and best of all, God is with us. Some have started on the heavenly journey. Many are convinced the Lord is with us. The Baptist brethren come in and take hold with us, and "His banner over us is love." Do pray that this little band may be as a city set on a hill, whose light cannot be hid. Jesus is coming, and we want great numbers saved from Farmington. May the Lord continue to bless you, a watchman, and an Editor. Can it be we shall see our great Life-giver, the King in his beauty? Yes, our dear, precious Redeemer will soon, very soon, appear the second time, without sin unto salvation, and gather his ransomed ones home."

Bro. L. LASKEY, Pembroke, Me., writes:—"The enemy is busy at work in this place in the shape of Spiritualism. A young woman has been lecturing here on that doctrine, and has carried almost everything with her. There has never been any Advent preacher in this place, and the other denominations do not take any interest in putting down Spiritualism, and why should they, when they help to build the very foundation on which it stands? I should like to have some one of the Advent ministers come here and expose the evils of Spiritualism; but I am not able to offer anything in in the way of remuneration, but I shall do what I can by a good example. I request the prayers of God's people that I may prove faithful to the end.

Obituaries.

JOHNSON. Suddenly, in Jonesville, Mich., Bro. Lyman Johnson, of lung fever and rheumatic congestion, aged fifty-six years.

The subject of this notice, with his companion, came to Michigan some thirty-five years ago, and about three years after his arrival embraced christianity, and identified himself with the Baptist denomination, with which he walked and labored as an acceptable member until about eight years since, when his attention was arrested by the proclamation of the goodness of the Savior's speedy approaching kingdom. His whole being seemed to be aroused by the message. The result was, he became thoroughly settled in "the faith once delivered to the saints," and while this change was going on, and the light and truth shining forth from the sacred page so brilliantly upon his mind, he saw the necessity of a full personal consecration of himself, his family and property, to God, which he did after a severe struggle; and from that time till life's final close he went out among all classes with full confidence in his faith, with a zeal that heaven approbated, a mind beaming with intelligence, and a heart overflowing with love to God and man, and labored to save perishing souls from impending ruin.

He was no sectarian. His labors of love were highly appreciated by all classes. His funeral was attended March 2d, by a large and sympathizing congregation of friends and brethren.

It is a very sad stroke of Providence not only to his household, but to society, and especially to the church of Christ. We addressed the mourning friends and congregation from Rev. 14: 13. May heaven's richest blessings ever attend our dear bereft sister and family, and may the grace of God which passeth all understanding ever shed its holy radiance over their deeply sad hearts; and give them good cheer while they sorrow not as others which have no hope, and wait patiently for Him who will come ere long in his power and glory, to redeem all his sorrow-stricken saints.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

SWIFT. Fell asleep in Decatur, March 2d, 1869, my beloved wife, Priscilla A. Swift, aged thirty-nine years and nine months.

Her sickness was a combination of diseases, and ultimated in consumption, which sickness controlled her health for one year and two days. She bore her illness with complacence. She oft times appealed to me to be prepared to meet her at the resurrection morn. Oh! such appeals to her lonely husband and disconsolate children sank deep in my heart. The deceased requested to partake of the Lord's supper with her husband, which was administered by a Methodist minister, as none of our faith were near at hand. I never shall forget the time. The funeral discourse was preached March 6th, by Bro. Roe, a Disciple preacher.

A. B. SWIFT.

GLEASON. Died in New Durham, N. H., December 18th, 1868, of consumption, George A., son of John L. and Almira Gleason, aged twenty-six years, seven months.

During his illness he sought the Lord, and found him to be precious. He bore his sufferings with christian fortitude, and died in the triumphs of faith. The afflicted family mourn, but not as those who have no hope, for they rest on the assurance that they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Words of comfort from Job 14: 14.

Z. BOODEY.

BUZZELL. Died in Wolfboro, Feb. 5th, 1869, of palsy, Dr. Dana Buzzell, aged sixty-four years, son of Elder Hezekiah Buzzell, of Alton, N. H.

He experienced a change of heart in his youth; in after years he wandered from God, but in his last illness returned to the Lord, found peace, and left good evidence that he will have a part in the first resurrection. He left a wife and four children to mourn his loss, but they will meet soon when Jesus comes. Words of comfort from Revelation 21: 4.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

MADRID, March 8. There was a stormy debate during the session of the Constituent Cortes yesterday. The Republican members made a bitter attack upon the Ministry for their alleged monarchical proclivities. They demanded that Duke Montpensier be divested of his rank of Marshal of Spain, and accused the Provisional Government of endeavoring to smuggle him into the country for the purpose of placing him upon the throne.

Gen. Prim replied that the Duke could not with justice be deprived of his title of Marshal. Admiral Topeto, Minister of Marine, amid great excitement said that a Kingdom with Montpensier on the throne was preferable to a Republic.

Marshal Serrano made a calm and dignified speech, defending the Provisional Government from the attacks of the Republicans, asserting the sovereign authority of the Cortes and insisting that the determination of the form of government for Spain and the choice of her future ruler should be left to the Constituent Cortes alone. He deprecated the violent pressure brought to bear upon the Cortes by the Republican party as impolitic and unfair.

In the course of the session Senor Figuerala, Minister of Finance, expressed himself in favor of free trade, and advocated immediate, but gradual reform in customs by the adoption of a compromise tariff.

THE CONSPIRATORS AGAINST THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.—It has already been stated that the Russian Government not long ago discovered a conspiracy against the Czar Alexander. The conspiracy seems to have originated among a religious sect called the Skoptsi, and the leaders have all been arrested, and large amounts of money, which they had collected to assist them in their undertaking, have been confiscated. This sect is two or three hundred years old, but it is not very numerous. The Government has been for a long time trying to break it up, and whenever a member of it is found he is banished to Sibera and his property is confiscated. Representatives of this sect reside in nearly every city in the Russian Empire, but it is neither numerous nor strong enough to greatly endanger the Czar and his Government.

BRIGANDAGE IN GREECE.—A letter from Athens says brigandage is desolating the country. One day recently a band of the outlaws approached within a few miles of Athens, captured some women and children, and after killing two and wounding three women, they placed the others in a hut and set fire to it. They then left, taking with them two young men as hostages. Fortunately an old woman went to the hut and rescued the persons confined there. This outrage was perpetrated in revenge for the killing of two members of the band last year by the people of the village.

DOMESTIC.

GREAT STORM IN CANADA.—Montreal, March 11. A heavy snow storm and raging winds prevailed yesterday. No trains have started from or arrived here for two days. Four trains from New York are blockaded at St. John's. The passengers are supplied with provisions and fuel. Two gentlemen got through by sleighs yesterday. The eastern trains are about thirty miles away, and there is no possibility of their being extricated before Saturday.

The ice roads on the river are impassable. Some men tried to cross yesterday, but had to abandon their teams.

Three Rivers, March 11. There are eight feet of level snow on the track for a stretch of twenty-four miles. The trains over the Athabasca branch of the railway have discontinued running until April.

Quebec, March 11. A terrific snow storm prevails here. Three men were found in the snow drifts near this city to-day. They tried to travel on foot yesterday.

Point Levi, March 11. At avalanch of snow fell from the cliffs on a house containing fifteen persons, four of whom were crushed to death.

Our northern Vermont exchanges say that the obstructions from snow across the Canada line, are unprecedentedly great, and trains have nearly all been stopped during the past fortnight. Travel is everywhere not only bad, but dangerous, and the hotels on the border are full of unwilling guests who cannot proceed northward either by steam or horse power. As an instance of the depth of snow, and the difficulties and evils proceeding from it, a St. Albans paper says that a few days ago, while sleighing in the vicinity of Three Rivers, Canada, at a point where the telegraph wires cross the highway, a traveler's horse became entangled in the wires in endeavoring to get over them, and received injuries from which it died the next day. The citizens informed him that the wires were twenty feet from the ground before the snow fell.

A CHARITABLE ENTERPRISE.—Mr. A. T. Stewart, of New York has been arranging a charitable enterprise on a collossal scale, which will operate in a direction where much help is needed. He proposes to erect houses for the working men and women of New York, and already ground has been broken for the foundation of one of these institutions. A magnificent building is to be raised, iron, fire-proof, seven stories high, and architecturally finer than any other structure in the city. This will be the working woman's hotel. Here sewing girls, female clerks, hard-working women of every trade, are to be provided with board and room for the smallest possible sum, and the house is to be managed in the best manner. The ground floor may be let out for stores, the proceeds to be applied to the building of other similar institutions. The entire cost of the hotel will be about two million of dollars. The edifice will not be completed in less than two years. Mr. Stewart also proposes to put up, in time, a working-men's hotel on the same plan.

INTERNATIONAL POSTAGE—According to the new postal convention, which went into operation on new year's day, between the United States and Great Britain, the postage will be—on letters, twelve cents per single rate of half ounce in the United States, and twelve cents in the United Kingdom, prepayment optional. A fine of five cents in the United States, and four cents in the United Kingdom, will, however, be levied and collected; in addition to the deficient postage on each unpaid or insufficiently prepaid letter received by one country from the other.

Passing Events.

☞ The Free Religious Association has begun a series of meetings on Sunday afternoons in Horticultural Hall. Weiss, Wasson, Johnson, Higginson, Emerson, Frothingham, Abbot, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney and Wendell Phillips are to speak. The novelty about these meetings is the fact that an admission fee of fifty cents a ticket, or five dollars for the course, is charged. This is "Free" religion with a vengeance.—The Universalist.

☞ Rogers & Hoyt, of East Berlin, Ct., have been awarded the contract for building the mammoth iron colosseum for the great musical festival of peace in Boston. The building will be built exclusively of iron, the contract price being twenty-five thousand dollars, and the builders to have the material after the festival is over.

☞ Cardinal Antonelli has informed certain English railroad contractors that the Holy Father would not entertain at the present time any more offers for the construction of new railroads in the Papal States.

☞ The Boston Pilot (Catholic) anticipates, with some hope, the day when every spire that is visible from the State House dome shall be crowned with the true Catholic cross.

☞ Louis Napoleon will enter upon his sixty-second year next month, and the Empress in August will celebrate her forty-third birthday.

☞ A dispatch from Rome states that Lucien Bonaparte, the youngest of the Cardinals, is regarded as the most available candidate for the Papal succession.

☞ It is stated that the Sultan of Turkey has issued a decree throwing open to Christians of every denomination the mosques and temples of the Faithful, upon the simple condition that they will not scoff or disturb the worshipers in their prayers.

☞ It is stated that the Prussians are now cutting down the trees in the public promenades at Mentz, just as if they were on the brink of war, and that they are working day and night at their arsenals.

☞ The death is announced of Admiral Davis, the oldest navy officer in England. He was the only survivor of Lord Howe's great victory in 1791, and had reached the patriarchal age of ninety-one years.

☞ The hog cholera has broken out at Buffalo, one hundred dying this week out a drove of six hundred. They are being sent east as fast as possible.

☞ The snow is six feet deep in Washington county, Vt.

☞ Victor Emmanuel has given orders for the excavation of Herculaneum on an extensive scale.

☞ The British and Foreign Bible Society is to send 1,000,000 New Testaments to Spain.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Meetings are held at the Advent Hall, Curtis' Block, three times on the Sabbath, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Entrance, third door from the east end of the bridge, Main St.

Notices.

Conference.

If the Lord will, there will be a conference held in Garland, Me., at Holt's Mills, commencing Thursday evening, April 1st, at seven o'clock, and continue over Lord's day. As this is a new place for such a meeting, the brethren are anxious for a general attendance of the preaching brethren. Call on Brn. Millet, William Field, and Gardner Farmer. Bro. Farmer lives about one half mile east of the school-house. Those coming from Bangor and vicinity had better inquire at Bean's Mills, on the notch road, for Holt's Mills. Those coming from the north and west, inquire for Brn. Wm. Field and Abner Millet, at Garland Village. Preaching brethren will probably find a home at K. Holt's, at the Mills. It is desired that brethren living in adjacent towns and neighborhoods should attend and lend a helping hand. Further particulars hereafter.

In behalf of the church, O. G. TRUNDY.

Notice.

By the request of the brethren at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa., I will join Bro. J. Wendell in holding a two days' meeting of the church in Edenboro, April 16th, and over Sunday, as Bro. Wendell and the church there may arrange.

Also, by the request of the brethren at Blooming Valley, I will hold a quarterly meeting there, April 22d, and over Sunday, as the church there may appoint. Let there be a general rally at these quarterly meetings. Soon it will be too late to preach and hear the gospel. Then let all awake. C. F. SWEET.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at East Rochester, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, March 25th, at half-past seven o'clock, and hold over Sunday, the 28th. Brethren Couch, Pinkham, and Twombly are expected to preach the word. A general gathering of laboring brethren and sisters from other towns is desired. For the church,

JAMES QUIMBY.
J. C. SHOREY.

R. I. and Ct. Conference.

This conference will meet with the church at Danielsonville, Ct., Wednesday, 2 P. M., April 7th, 1869. Come up to the help of the Lord. Come from far and near. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY.

BY S. S. BREWER.

For sale at the Crisis Office, 167 Hanover Street.

1. THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. Facts and testimonies concerning Papal Rome in its present condition, of a very interesting nature. Illustrated with good engravings. Per dozen, by mail, $1.06; single, by mail, 12 cts.
2. AN EXPOSITION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. Illustrated with engravings, showing the exhausted condition of this chain of symbols, and the proximity of the judgment. Per dozen, by mail, 90 cts.; single, by mail, 10 cts.
3. THE SLAYING OF THE WITNESSES. Showing that the "Second Wo" ended with the Reign of Terror in France, during which period the Witnesses were slain. It was terrific, bloody, and cruel beyond conception, or the power of language to describe. "Behold the Third Wo cometh quickly." Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, my mail, 10 cts.
4. A TREATISE ON REVELATION XIII., in Two Parts. In the first part we have endeavored to show by historical facts the rise, career, and complicity of the Leopard Beast with Papacy during the forty-two prophetic months they were to make war upon the saints. In the second part we have presented our reasons for believing the Popedom to be "The Two-Horned Beast." Per dozen, by mail, $1.80; single, by mail, 20 cts.
5. THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This is written with a desire to impart instruction upon the kingdom of God (Matt. 21: 43); what is to be understood by taking it away, suffering violence, Israel, the new covenant, signs of the times, nearness of the great day of the Lord, etc., etc. Per dozen, by mail, $1.25; single, by mail, 20 cts.
6. THE LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Showing that God invariably has made known his judgments to his prophets, and by them to the doomed nations. Fifty positive and incidental instances are brought to view in this little work. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single, by mail, 9 cts.
7. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" History of False Christs, Earthquakes, Famines, Pestilences, arranged in chronological order; Abounding of Iniquity, Immorality of the Age, Great Spiritual Dearth, Spiritualism—its immoral and degrading tendencies. A Spiritualist's Invocation to Satan, Progression, The Gospel preached in all the world as a witness. The Harvest Ripe, The end of all things at hand. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
8. LAST DAY TOKENS. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars; meteorological wonders, fearful sights and great signs in the heavens—blood, fire, and pillars of smoke, etc., etc. This work contains a number of excellent engravings, illustrative of these last day wonders, that God in his infinite mercy has hung as flaming signals in the heavens, to herald the approach of the great day of his wrath. Per dozen, by mail, $2.30; single, by mail, 23 cts.
9. THE HISTORY OF AN IMMORTAL SOUL. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. Per dozen, by mail, 87 cts.; single 9 cts., by mail.
10. RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. New edition, with covers, and enlarged. Price 6 cts. By mail, 8 cts.; per dozen, by mail, 65 cts.

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

A MIDNIGHT HYMN.

In the mid silence of the voiceless night,
When, chased by airy dreams, the slumbers flee,
Whom in the darkness doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee?

And if there be a weight upon my breast,
Some vague impression of the day foregone,
Scarce knowing what it is, I fly to thee,
And lay it down.

Or, if it be the heaviness that comes
In token of anticipated ill,
My bosom takes no heed of what it is,
Since 'tis thy will.

For O, in spite of past and present care,
Or anything beside, how joyfully
Passes that almost solitary hour,
My God, with thee.

More tranquil than the stillness of the night,
More peaceful than the silence of that hour,
More blest than any thing, my bosom lies
Beneath thy power.

For what is there on earth that I desire,
Of all that it can give or take from me?
Or whom in heaven doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee?

PRAYER FOR RULERS.

The people of God are but strangers and pilgrims on the earth. Born again from above, their new relationships supercede the old, and having here no continuing city, but seeking one to come, their citizenship is in heaven from whence also they look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned according to his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself.

In becoming sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, they have entered a brotherhood whose ties override all social and ethnological distinctions, the chosen generation being selected from every race, and the royal priesthood coming home to the city of the redeemed out of every kindred, nation, tribe and tongue.

Hence the people of God are, in some sort, absolved from earthly allegiances, and bow the knee to him who is higher than the highest, who stands before and above all other rulers as their law-giver, judge, and king.

Scattered as they are in all the quarters of the globe; charged to traverse the world with the messages of salvation and of peace; controlled and guided by the word of God and the unseen power of the Eternal Spirit; forsaking all that they may follow Christ; counting all earthly residence as a brief sojourn, and all earthly habitations as but tents of pilgrimage; confiding in the providence of God who watches the falling of a sparrow, and who by his strength setteth fast the mountains, being girded with power; fearless though the earth may rock in tumult, or the sea may roar in rage; sure of their ultimate triumph, glory, and reward, and eager in their expectation of the kingdom of their once crucified and suffering Master;—they can only feel a stranger's interest in the local strifes and transient turmoils which agitate the world, and in the rise and fall of nations, governments, and rulers, which are but the creatures of an hour, and which they well know must all give place to that rule which shall outlast the ages, that kingdom which shall not be moved.

Nevertheless though the position of the church be one of exile, captivity and pilgrimage, they yet owe obligation to the temporary governments which surround them and protect them in this world. The ruler who "beareth not the sword in vain" is the "minister of God to execute wrath upon the disobedient," and to give quietness to the well-doers. And though the Most High, who "ruleth in the kingdoms of men," "giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men," as has often happened to nations drunk with lust, and pride, and covetousness, and vice,—yet the Christian must respect the office of the magistrate though he abhor the vileness of the man, and render custom to whom custom is due, and honor to whom honor, and fear to whom fear; being subject, not for wrath but conscience' sake,—yielding active obedience to human regulations which do not contravene the divine law, and passive subjection to the pains and penalties which may be inflicted on him for his adherence to the higher rule of God when the two conflict.

The divine mind concerning the christian's duty in this Babel-like world, may be gathered from the inspired directions contained in a letter written by the prophet Jeremiah to the elders, priests, prophets and people of Jerusalem when they were in a somewhat analagous position, in the days of Babylonish captivity.

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon; build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; take ye wives and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased and not diminished. And SEEK THE PEACE OF THE CITY whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and PRAY UNTO THE LORD for it; FOR IN THE PEACE THEREOF SHALL YE HAVE PEACE."—Jer. 29: 4–7.

None of us liveth to himself; our relations interlace with those around us, and our duties are reciprocal in every direction. We are to make the best of our opportunities whatever they may be. And though by the rivers of Babylon those Jewish captives wept at the remembrance of that Zion which they loved, and though they dwelt amid the idolatries of a godless metropolis, and under the tyranny of a kingdom for whose predicted overthrow they prayed, and waited and confidently hoped; yet they were to accept the existing situation, pray for the peace even of that city of their foes, assured that in its peace they should find their peace, and in its blessings they too should be blest.

And in so doing they became witnesses for God even in high places; they protested against idolatry, quenched the violence of fire, stopped the mouths of lions, and brought haughty and blood-stained conquerors to acknowledge that there was no God like the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. And in this public recognition of the supremacy of their God whom they served, they found light, and gladness, and honor, and prosperity among men.

And thus it is to-day; and it is meet that Christians encourage and rejoice in every token of reverent recognition of God as the Supreme Ruler, both in high places and in low. And when the chief magistrate of a mighty nation, in the closing words of the most solemn utterance of his office, says,—"I ask the prayers of the nation to Almighty God,"—it is well for all christians to give heed to the apostolic precept, "I exhort, therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for KINGS, and for ALL THAT ARE IN AUTHORITY; that we may lead A QUIET and PEACEABLE LIFE in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth. I will, therefore, that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting."—1 Tim. 2: 1–4, 8.

This nation has been long rocked in storms and tumults, and sorely chastened for its sins. Famine and disease, suffering and distress, hunger, and cold, and nakedness, with vice, and cruelty, and crime, are among the fruits of war, and strife, and carnage, and misrule. At last some signs of returning reason and submissiveness appear, and the universal voice pleads, "LET US HAVE PEACE." And "that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty," let us pray for "all that are in authority," and beseech the blessing of God upon all mankind;—that he may give quiet within our borders, and open a great and effectual door for the proclamation of his truth, and thus accomplish his purposes of mercy, and hasten the coming of his kingdom in the earth.—H. L. H. in the Christian.

LETTER FROM BRO. J. WENDELL.

BRO. GRANT:—The battle goes well. The attendance at our meetings is large. There were only about half a dozen in the faith of man's nature and destiny, and the speedy coming of our dear Savior; now, I think there are over thirty, and still they come. Brethren have hired a hall, and intend to have meetings regularly. A week ago last Lord's day evening, there were three ministers present, and at the close I gave liberty for remarks. A minister arose and said he had been informed that I would discuss the subject, and that he would like to break swords with me. I replied that I had said I would discuss the question, and that if he was a minister, in good standing, I would meet him; and that with a sword that never breaks, which was the "word of God." The Methodist minister arose and endorsed my opponent, and stated he was in good standing in the Conference. I then proposed to meet him, if they would open their meeting-house. As none of the trustees were present, we did not enter into any definite arrangement that evening. The next day, the following notice appeared in the editorial of the Pittsburg Daily Dispatch:—

"IS THE SOUL IMMORTAL?—The Rev. Mr. Wendell held religious services at Lafayette Hall on Sabbath evening last. At the close of the services quite a controversy arose as to the 'immortality of the soul,' 'the state of the dead between death and the judgment,' etc. Mr. Wendell seems very anxious to have a public discussion on some of the above topics, if a church can be procured for the purpose, and any orthodox ministers of the city will take issue with him. The citizens of Pittsburg will certainly be interested in the discussion."
